THE AGED ITINERANT.

BY JULIA A. TIRRELL.

Silently the loved ones gathered
In the quiet, darkened room.
Hushed were sobs, though hearts were breaking,
For a soul was going home.
Pressed against the snowy pillow
Lay a face as still and white,
Dying? Nay, God's saint was passing
From the shadows into light.

Suddenly the dim eyes opened,
But their gaze seemed far away.
"Are our goods all packed and labeled?
Wife, this is our moving day.
Moving day! And we have labored;
You may well be weary, dear.
Moving day! Long since familiar
Have those words grown to my ear.

"I remember our first station,
Where I carried you a bride;
How I marked the admiration
You received, with secret pride.
Two years fled so swiftly onward!
Yes, the hardest part of all
Was to say farewell and leave it.
But 'twas at the Master's call.

"Then at Easton little Mabel
Came to fill our cup of joy.
Next we moved to River Valley,
Where God gave our precious boy.
Souls were saved; believers strengthened;
Blessed indeed the work has been.
What are fame and worldly honors
With a crown of life to win?

Oh, how heavy fell the blow!
Kind and thoughtful were our people—
God's own angels here below.
But I need not name the charges—
You remember every one.
Think on heaven's glad reunions
When this pilgrimage is done!

"Moving-day—now all—is ready—
We must rest a little while—
Ere we go—'tis long the journey—
Darling—come'—a gasp, a smile,
And the soul had fled its prison,
Earthly changes all were o'er;
Called to the celestial city,
Forever to go out no more.

Bishop Granbery's Letter.

FEB. 6-11, 1894.

Give ear, preachers and people! A claimant presents herself to whom hitherto you have given little time or money. She is the child of the General Conference of 1886. Her name was changed, and her privileges and responsibilities were enlarged by our church legislature four years later. She is the Parsonage and Home Mission Society. Are you acquainted with this gracious lady? Do you know her worth and her good works? Have you accorded her recognition? She greatly desires to send a cheering report to Memphis next May, and in it to include a hearty word of praise for you. Her petition now is that one week, the week mentioned at the head of this article, may be set apart in all your pastoral charges to the benefit of the noble cause she serves, and employed in daily religious meetings, special prayer, and cheerful giving to this end.

Parsonage is the key-note of this society. The church should see that a home be provided for every married itinerant whom she sends forth to preach the Word and care for the flock. If in obedience to authority, and for the love he has to Christ and to souls, he goes to a feeble, struggling charge, a parsonage is more to him than convenience and a comfort; it is a necessity. He has no ready money to rent a home; he has no time to search for a suitable one; he has no rich member to lodge him and family until house can be secured. He needs at once a shelter for his wife and children, that he may be free to do the hard and poorly paid, but most needful and useful work to which he has been appointed. A circuit, though weak in members and finances, if it be supplied with houses of worship and a parsonage, is greatly assisted in supporting the man of God by whom it is served. The eye and heart and hands of the society are turned, first of all, to the most needy fields in our several Conferences, to the most urgent calls from whatever portion of our vast connection. It is organized to find out these worthy and necessitous places, and to send them timely succor.

Home mission sets forth another feature of the society. Our women are doing good work in behalf of foreign missions. May their hearts grow warmer and their hands stronger in this sacred cause year after year! But love of the heathen should never be a plea for neglect of neighbors and countrymen. The leaders of the Woman's Missionary Society may not be the leaders of the Parsonage and Home Mission Society; a division of labors, responsibilities and offices is important; but all should be friends and helpers of every good cause. Our church is rich enough in female wisdom and consecration to fill all positions appropriate to the sex. I have known women with large families who, without neglecting their domestic duties, were foremost in all good works. Besides, there are unmarried women, married women without children, and mothers whose children are grown up, who can devote much time to the service of the Lord outside their own homes. In country and in city there are poor persons to be cared for, sick to be ministered unto, children who get no religious instruction at home and attend no Sunday-school, families that never go to church, godless and vicious women, young and old, who must be saved, if at all, by personal visits and attention. We have no deaconesses, as some other denominations have. This fact makes more important a society to plan and conduct home mission work—not to interfere with authority of pastors, Quarterly Conferences, Sunday-school societies, and local societies for church extension, but to co-operate with these agencies, and to do good, "as need shall require, and occasion shall be given."

Preachers in charge, is there a Parsonage and Home Mission Society in your station or circuit? The week of prayer, Feb. 6 to 11, will furnish an excellent opportunity to increase its membership and efficiency. If there be none, it will be a good time to supply the lack. Assist the sisters in whatever business they have need of you, and provoke them unto love and to good works. Sisters, stir yourselves, your pastors and your church, to the profitable observance of the appointed week.

Put Down the Brakes!

BY REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D. D.

The Americans are a restless and nervous people, and foreigners who come among us soon catch the contagion of "go-aheadativeness." Our highly oxygenated climate is very stimulating. An English clergyman who visited us told us that he felt a perpetual spur that he did not feel at home, and frequent preaching here wore upon him terribly. Competition runs high in every department of life. The rich are dashing on to get richer; the poor in order to "make both ends meet." And so it comes about that a large portion of our people are driving their express trains up to fifty miles an hour.

It goes without saying that this high rate of speed puts a tremendous strain on our "rolling stock." The result is that such bodily disorders as nervous prostration, paralysis and heart failure are increasingly numerous. Americans get prematurely old sooner than the inhabitants of England, Germany, Holland, and some other countries. A wise counsel—whether heeded or not—is to put down the brakes.

Our divine Master, when he was upon this earth, was the impersonation of activity. "My Father," said he, "worketh hitherto, and I work." Yet he once said to his disciples, "Come ye apart into a desert place and rest awhile." They needed a short vacation, for there had been such a rush of people coming and going that they had not leisure to eat. This little snatch of personal experience—like every incident in our Lord's earthly history—has its suggestions for us. Christ teaches us that the overdriven machine of the body requires some repose, and the tasked mind requires some relief. Once in every twenty-four hours the Creator has ordained that we shall clap down the brakes, and give the engine the rest of sleep. Once in every seven days he calls a halt, and commands that on his blessed Sabbath "ye shall not do any work." That marvel of longevity and intellectual power, Mr. Gladstone, once told me that he is a sound sleeper every night, and on my last visit to him he said to me: "Amid the pressure of public cares and duties I thank God for the Sabbath, with its rest for body and soul." That golden sentence from the most eminent of living men ought to be graven on the walls of our legislative halls, and printed in the school books for our children.

In such a humming hive of activity as American business life presents, the order is continually needed to put down the brakes. Nerves, muscles and brains must have both rest and recreation, or else they will break down. We do not economize life as we ought. Oh, ye ever-busy care-laden men of business, do not allow either your worldly ambitions or your honest daily avocations to mount you, like a racing jockey, and whip and spur you through every waking hour of existence. They will ride you to death. When the day's toil is over, lock up your cares in your office, your counting-room, or your shop; come home to your household and try to feel as your children feel—"out of harness." Enjoy your home. Fill it with all you can afford of books and music, and every sort of domestic attraction. Be a boy yourself for your own sake as well as for the sake of your children. If you want to keep your sons and daughters out of bad places in the evening, make your home a good place for them. I pity the man who is the slave of his business instead of being its master. Shake off your chains, my friend. You are running your train at a dangerous speed; put down the brakes.

(1) This whole subject has a deeper significance than the preservation of health or the maintenance of a cheerful, happy home. The ambition for wealth is in the air. Our young men catch it and determine to get rich fast. Honest industry is a Bible virtue. "Not slothful in business—fervent in spirit," does not mean a rushing race for riches. That same good Book tells us that such people "fall into temptation and a snare and many hurtful lusts which drown men in perdition." This greed for wealth has wrecked many a professing Christian. It stole away the heart from Christ. It dried up the fountain of benevolence and made the man rob God of his "tithes." It has, in thousands of cases, led church members to dangerous speculations and sharp practices that have fatally damaged their Christian character. If increase of income always meant increase of godliness and benevolence, then haste to be rich were more commendable; but it is a lamentable truth that gold is too often a hardener of the heart, and that too many Christians who grow richer in purse become poorer in piety. My brother, if you are crowding on steam in a mad race for wealth, and wealth at all hazards, put down the brakes.

(2) Akin to this prevalent greed for riches as the "summum bonum" of life is an increasing tendency to extravagance in style of living. If hard times have given some check to this, yet it is only temporary. "Plain living and high thinking" ought to be an honorable aspiration in the most prosperous times. Social extravagances—in dress, furniture, equipage, etc.—have blighted many a home and wrecked many a Christian character. They often bring that terrible curse, debt, which eats into peace of soul like a cancer. Friend, if thou art driving the train at a rate of extravagant expenditure, put down the brakes, or else expect a terrible smash up. Costly living often costs the soul!

(3) One kindly hint more for the followers of Jesus Christ. You can not keep your religion alive, or make it grow in the impure atmosphere of constant worldly thought and care. You have got to find time for prayer, Bible reading, meditation, and Christian activities of usefulness, or your heart will starve out. Are you running your daily life at such a rate that you are running down in personal godliness? Then Satan has got hold of the steam valve of your engine. Hurl him off, and put down your brakes. What profit to gain the whole world, and lose Christ out of your soul?

Brooklyn, N. Y.

A Bright, Cheery Religion.

The Christian religion, rightly understood and properly followed, is neither gloomy nor galling. It places one in true relations with God and man. It falls in with the needs of human nature. It changes the currents of thought, feeling and life, and causes them to run in proper and harmonious directions. It puts Christ into the heart, and sets all physical, mental and moral powers in motion toward the ends which he prescribes. It effects an inward transformation through the renewing and sanctifying grace of the Holy Spirit. It brings peace and pardon through the application of atoning blood to the soul. It secures Fatherly protection and blessing. It covers every condition with an inspiring and adequate promise. It introduces the power of the world to come into the life that now is. It links one with past worthies. It holds out the brightest and most encouraging inducements to the noblest work. It meets every phase of our natures. It robs affliction of its ills and death of its sting. It in parts sustaining as well as victorious grace. It offers an infallible directory for faith and conduct, and assures of the grandest accomplishments here, and of the most glorious realizations hereafter.

He who falls in line with it avoids all frictions. It fits into his needs, and he fits into its conditions. There is a mutual adaptation—the religion to the subject and the subject to the religion. Antagonisms ensue only when man fails to observe what God reveals and requires. He who either neglects or fights against what Providence and grace demand, puts himself out of harmony with the divine ordering and operation, and is not in his proper element. No wonder he is then sad and morose. Things do not go well with him. He is ill at ease. Conscience becomes troublesome. No comfort is taken in occurrences. The calm poise and delightful satisfaction which come of suitable adjustment to the individual environment are wanting. There is a contention with duty, a striving after the unattainable, a dissatisfaction with the earthly allotment, personal ambitions outside of existing limits, an engaging in plans and pursuits for which there is neither capacity nor adaptation, a going where no blessing is guaranteed, and a doing what is not calculated to draw out the good, the helpful, the generous, and the noble.

A cheery religion is incompatible with worriment. It calls for the best possible exertions, and then an explicit leaving of results with God. It is not hard work that depresses and destroys, but fretting and cross-purposing. Men are not willing to let God be God. They want to have things their own way. They are anxious about how and when events will turn out. There is no possessing the soul in patience, or firm adherence to, and dependence upon, the covenant-keeping God, who has promised never to leave nor to forsake, but to bring everything to a right and blessed issue. There is weariness and disquietude because the end is not seen from the beginning. Trials are not made stepping-stones to something higher, nobler, purer, and more glorious. Much serving acts as a disturbance. Over-carefulness about things proves irritating. Trifles vex and perplex. Whining and complaining gain control. The benefit of the staying, triumphing and trustful qualities of the gospel is lost.

Religious cheerfulness is the result, in a large measure, of the right use of the past and of a hopeful view of the future. The failures of yesterday are over, and can not be repaired; yet they serve as correctives and monitors, pointing out something to be avoided in the days to come. They remind of weakness, and tell of the need of greater strength, cause a letting go of the human arm and a taking hold of the divine. A brighter vision dawns upon the mind. The things that are behind are forgotten in the things that are before. The prize in prospect lures and animates. The sins committed are lamented and forgiven. Purity beckons onward. Unavailing regrets are not allowed to embitter the passing hours, or to darken the horizon, but hope asserts itself and impels to worthier deeds and nobler experiences.

He who would go through life cheerfully, sweetly and happily must cultivate a sunny temper, an enthusiastic spirit, a charitable disposition, and a friendly manner. He must treat kindly those with whom he comes in contact. He must suppress ill-will and resentment. He must give room to the sunshine of love. He must have a smile for everyone. He must show a responsiveness to human needs, and make the best of every situation.

This cheery and bright kind of religion is both beautiful and desirable. It should be more and more manifest. It is what God requires. It glorifies him as well as benefits the possessor. It accords with the nature of Christianity. It is the result of a gracious state. It comes by prayer and effort. One can not begin too soon to cultivate it, and to persevere in it until it becomes a settled temper, strengthening with his growth, and beautifying and blessing his life with each advancing year.—Presbyterian.

The Religious Newspaper.

BY REV. DR. WILLIAM REVINS

"Do you pay for a religious newspaper?"

Do you, reader? If you do, continue to take and read, and pay for it; and be slow to withdraw your subscription. Give up many things before you give up your religious newspaper. If anyone that ought to take such a paper does not, I hope that some one to whom the circumstance is known will volunteer the loan of this to him, directing his attention particularly to this article. Who is he? A professor of religion? It can not be. A professor of religion, and not taking a religious newspaper! A member of the visible church, and voluntarily without the means of information as to what is going on in that church! A follower of Christ, praying daily, as taught by his Master, "Thy kingdom come," and yet not knowing, nor caring to know, what progress that kingdom is making! Here is one of those to whom Christ said, "Go, teach all nations." He bears a part of the responsibility of the world's conversion, and yet, so far from doing anything himself, he does not even know what others are doing in promoting this great enterprise! Ask him about missionary stations and operations, and he can tell you nothing. He does not read about them. I am afraid this professor of religion does not love the "gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob." Ah, he forgets thee, O Jerusalem!

But I must not fail to ask if this person takes a secular newspaper. Oh, certainly he does. He must know what is going on in this world, and how else is he to know it? It is pretty clear, then, that he takes a deeper interest in the world than he does in the church; and this being the case, it is not difficult to say where his heart is. He pays, perhaps, eight or ten dollars for a secular paper—a paper that tells him about the world; but for one that records Zion's conflicts and victories he is unwilling to pay two or three! How can a professor of religion answer for this discrimination in favor of the world?—how defend himself against the charge it involves? He can not do it; and he had better not try, but go or write immediately, and subscribe for some good religious paper; and to be certain of paying for it, let him pay in advance. There is a satisfaction, when one is reading an interesting paper, to reflect that it is paid for.

But, perhaps, you take a paper, and are in arrears for it. Now, suppose you were the publisher, and the publisher was one of your subscribers, and he was in arrears to you, what would you think he ought to do in that case? I just ask the question. I don't care about an answer.—Watchman.

Weariness in Work.

In this age of pronounced opposition to the simple gospel it is not unusual for the children of God to be sorely tempted to abandon their work because of the weakness of the flesh. A mere glance at the issues involved in the mighty struggle between good and evil now going on in the world ought to convince everyone of the importance of resisting all such temptations.

Nothing would gratify the adversary of souls more than to reduce the ranks of Christian workers in this way. Such desertion would strengthen the kingdom of darkness; would weaken, in a corresponding degree, the kingdom of light, and would certainly tend to impoverish the spiritual natures of these unfaithful servants. Prof. Austin Phelps once wrote to a friend as follows: "It is a sad thing to put one's self out of the line of God's work prematurely. I earnestly wish to avoid that if I may."

We are not in this world merely to absorb truth and consume our time in pious contemplation. We are here to "show ourselves men" in obeying the divine command. In this cause it is very encouraging to remember that the final awards will be administered on the ground of improved talents, and not on the ground of their real or supposed possession; the "well done" is given to those who have been, in a scriptural sense, "good and faithful." They are not given to those concerning whom it is only said, "They are talented or influential."

When tempted to forsake the post of duty, we do well to recall the unselfish devotion of those who are toiling in foreign lands or in the newly settled portions of our country. Amid persecutions and discouragements they toil on, joyful for the privilege. In distant lands native converts are giving us examples of true-hearted service for Jesus and of liberal giving out of their poverty, which often put our easy-going charity and benevolence to shame. "Let us not be weary in well-doing; for in due season we shall reap if we faint not."—New York Christian Advocate.

Theosophy.

An English friend came across the Atlantic in a steamer with Mrs. Besant, who succeeded Madam Blavatsky as the female head Mogul of theosophy. The attitude of Mrs. Besant toward Christianity is that of an angry and hungry she-wolf to a lamb. She delivered a lecture on the steamship to about 400 cultivated English and American gentlemen and ladies, who cheered her to the echo. A Christian ventured meekly to put in a word for his Lord and the Bible, when the she-wolf threw herself upon him, snapping and snarling, amid the applause of the spectators, and from that time he was completely boycotted by the passengers.

WHAT IT TEACHES.

As so many professing Christians are throwing up their hats and bonnets in praise of theosophy, it may be well to inform the ignorant that the new religion scoffs at the Sacred Scriptures, places Buddha far in advance of our Lord Jesus Christ even when it admits the existence of the latter, and believes in the transmigration of souls into all sorts of lower animals, until, at the expiration of an almost endless series of such transmigrations, the soul is absorbed into deity and ceases to exist.—The Truth.

The Forgiveness of Injuries.

If a man commits an offense against me, misrepresents me, insults me, injures us in any way, what are we to do? Brood over it? That is what some Christian people nearly always do. It is wonderful what care they take to get all the pain and suffering out of an offense they can. They might have brushed it away at once and have done with it; but no, the hasty, bitter word, the selfish act, they lay upon their memory; and they will not forget it, whatever else they forget. . . . If a man injures you, do not brood over it. Nor must you talk about it to everybody you meet. What is your motive for speaking about the injury? Do you want to get your friends to take sides with you against the offender? You ought to want to make the offender himself to take sides with you against the offense. The more people know of the wrong, and the stronger the feeling you can create against the wrong-doer, the harder you make it for him to acknowledge his fault.—R. W. Dale, in Good Words.

A Merited Tribute to the Methodist Weeklies

Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald expresses his appreciation of the church weeklies as follows:

"A Bishop can go to some places, the weekly newspaper can go to every home if the preachers will introduce it. The pastor can make a visit now and then; his faithful coadjutor will go fifty-two times a year, 'harrowing in the seed that he sows,' deepening the good impressions he has made. It is a sort of telephone by which all the family can converse with one another—a class meeting led by the editor. By it the revival note struck in one place echoes in every part of our Methodism. The good word printed multiplies into millions of words. The weekly family religious newspaper is, next to the ministry, the most efficient agent in the work of evangelization in modern times."

A GOOD SHOT.—The young preacher had preached his first sermon on his new circuit. Next day one of his stewards said to him: "If you do as well all the year as you did yesterday, we won't find any fault." To which the pastor replied: "Brother, you be sure to be at church all the year to-day if I do that well." We call that a good shot.—Tennessee Methodist.

Every drunkard used to boast that he could drink or let it alone.

"GOD KNOWS THE BEST."

BY MARY RILEY SMITH.

Some time, when all life's lessons have been learned,
And the sun and stars forevermore have set,
The things which our weak judgment here have spurned,
The things o'er which we grieved with lashes wet,
Will flash before us out of life's dark night
As stars shine most in deeper tints of blue,
And we shall see how all God's plans are right,
And how what seemed reproof was love most true.

And we shall see how, while we frown and sigh,
God's plans go on as best for you and me;
How, when we called, he heeded not our cry,
Because his wisdom to the end could see.
And even as wise parents disallow
Too much of sweet to craving babyhood,
So God, perhaps, is keeping from us now
Life's sweetest things because it seemeth good.

And if, sometimes, commingled with life's wine
We find the wormwood, and rebel and shrink,
Be sure a wiser hand than yours or mine
Pours out this portion for our lips to drink.
And if some friend we love is lying low,
Where human kisses can not reach his face,
Oh, do not blame the loving Father so,
But wear your sorrow with obedient grace.

And you shall shortly know that lengthened breath
Is not the sweetest gift God sends his friend,
And that, sometimes, the sable pall of death
Conceals the fairest boon his love can send.
If we could push ajar the gates of life,
And stand within and all God's working see,
We could interpret all this doubt and strife,
And for each mystery could find a key.

But not to-day. Then be content, poor heart!
God's plans, like lilies, pure and white unfold.
We must not tear the close-shut leaves apart;
Time will reveal the calyxes of gold.
And if, through patient toil, we reach the land
Where tired feet, with sandals loosed, may rest,
When we shall clearly see and understand,
I think that we will say, "God knew the best!"

Waifs and Strays.

Nearly five hundred poor and needy children were entertained at a Christmas tree in the Waifs' Home, on Friday evening last. The friends of the S. P. C. C. had made most ample provision for them. Each child carried away an armful of happiness. Mrs. Seaman's pupils came in great force, and left behind them a great many presents. It was a cyclone of good things.

The public and private schools of the city are taking a great interest in this work of child rescue.

The Bethel Sunday-school contributed $25 towards the Waifs' Home on Christmas Day; and this itself a mission. God will surely bless this school.

From all over the State the children are joining the juvenile order of the S. P. C. C. Any child can become a member by the payment of one dollar a year. This dollar goes to the support of the Waifs' Home. Address Mrs. Alfred E. Clay, 141 Clio St.

The other day a five-dollar gold piece was sent to the Home. It was the little all of a babe who had recently died, and the mother knew of no place where the little angel's gold could do more good than among the waifs. The money will be expended on the Home Infirmary.

Bro. Clay will be glad to receive any destitute orphan children from Louisiana. Send a postal card describing the case and he will advise immediately what to do.

If any minister of any denomination would like Mr. Clay to come and inform his people on this great work, let them write to him at once, as he is now making up a tour of the State. Say what would be the best time for him to pay you a visit.

A sad case: This morning a babe, only seven days old, was brought in. Its mother had just been taken in the city wagon to the Hospital, apparently beyond recovery from the grip.

Another: A small boy picked up out of an alley-way suffering with typhoid-malaria, superinduced by habitual drinking and cigarette smoking. He now lies in a hospital ward hovering between life and death. We buried his older brother last year, who died from the same cause; his father and mother helplessly drunk while he lay dying. They are drinking yet.

The Waifs' Home every Friday is a place of transformation. On that day all the really needy children the society is called upon to help come, and are fitted out with clothes. The scenes are, beyond words, touching. The gratitude unmistakable. We shall be glad if churches or Sunday-schools would make up boxes of new or second-hand clothing and send them to us. The express companies will carry them free.

The King's Daughters, of Madison parish, foremost among the good workers in the State, are constantly sending clothes to the Waifs' Home. Kate S. Holmes is the efficient leader of the circle.

You may become a member of the La. S. P. C. C. by the payment of an annual due of $5 if a gentleman, and $2 if a lady. A donation of $50 will make any one a life member, and a payment of $25 will make any person a life patron of the juveniles. All our Sunday-schools should be life patrons.

On January 22 and 23, Edouard Remenyi, the world-famous violinist, assisted by a company of artists, will give a concert for the benefit of the La. S. P. C. C. The Odd Fellows Hall has been secured, and a nominal entrance fee will be charged. The music-loving people of the city will appreciate the expense incurred in securing such noted musicians, and will attend in large numbers. To secure tickets, write Secretary Court H. Young, 141 Clio street.

We have the case of a boy, eleven years old, who has refused to go to school for the last two years, is a drunkard, and returns home late at night. Only eleven years old—just think of it. A. F. CLAY.

In Japan.

MATSUYAMA.

I have just been looking at a map of Matsuyama. I count forty-five Buddhist temples and nine Shinto temples. These are all in the city proper, not including very small shrines and those in the suburban villages. There are about 225 blocks of varying sizes and about 40 000 people. The following names occurring on the map may be suggestive to you. The parentheses are mine.

Komachi (Old Town—most tenacious of old ideas). Komachi railroad station, Togawa railroad station, normal school (125 students), middle school (480 students), common school (1,300 students), kindergarten, newspaper office (a daily), public hall, county court, city court, provincial court, provincial capital, police station, theater, Congregationalist Church, Congregationalist Female Institute, castle, military hospital, barracks and parade ground, moat (surrounding barracks), chi fune machi (meaning "1 000 ship street"), Ishite river, canal (of which there are several very small, with clear, swift water), fountain, city hospital, bank.

Since this map was printed the Methodists have purchased a good lot, though they have no building on it as yet. The water of the fountain in the city is very cold. Just a little more than a mile distant is a famous hot water spring, used by the ancient princes of Matsuyama, and visited in times past by the Emperor. It is now a public bathing place. Last month 2 879 bath tickets were sold there, some of these being season tickets. In the city itself are twenty-six bath-houses that supply artificial hot baths to about 6,000 persons daily, on an average, at a half cent per bath.

A Drunkard's Appeal.

The liquor business of necessity blunts the finer sensibilities of the man who engages in it. His heart becomes adamant. His conscience is hardened. His soul becomes imbruted. But occasionally the sting of remorse arouses him to a proper view of the awful situation in which he has placed himself.

A young man entered the bar room of a village tavern and called for a drink.

"No," said the landlord; "you have had the delirium tremens once, and I can't sell you any more."

He stepped aside to make room for a couple of young men who had just entered, and the landlord waited on them very politely. The other had stood by silent and sullen, and when they had finished he walked up to the landlord and thus addressed him:

"Six years ago, at their age, I stood where those two young men are now. I was a man of fair prospects. Now, at the age of twenty-eight, I am a wreck—body and mind. You led me to drink. In this room I formed the habit that has been my ruin. Now sell me a few more glasses, and your work will be done! I shall soon be out of the way; there is no hope for me. But they can be saved. Do not sell it to them. Sell it to me and let me die, and the world will be rid of me; but, for heaven's sake, sell no more to them."

The landlord listened, pale and trembling. Setting down his decanter, he exclaimed, "God help me; it is the last drop I will sell to anyone!" And he kept his word.—Messenger.

It is easy to present a front of courage and confidence when everything is favorable to the display of such a mood; but the time when courage and faith show to the best advantage is the season that sees discouragement in the faces, and reveals disloyalty to the hearts of others. Then your spirit should shine out brightly as a star in the darkness. John, the beloved disciple, never seems so great, even amid the splendors of the Apocalyptic drama, as when he followed his Master boldly into the high priest's house, and stood by his cross in the hour of his shame. If it is a virtue to be brave and courageous as a servant of Jesus Christ, it is then surely a sin to lack these things.—Pacific Advocate.

Some Words about Giving.

It is the glory of the gospel that by it the lost spirit of benevolence was restored to the world. Christ came as the embodied Love of God. Here is the one perfect and supreme example of benevolence: God gave his Son. He could not give more. He poured out the whole treasury of heaven, and gave all at once. Christ came and stood before the world, and, with the hoarded wealth of eternity in his heart, offered to make men the heirs of all his wealth. "He pleased not himself." All that he said and did was for the good of man. His soul was ever full of benevolent sympathy and regard for humanity. Selfishness stood abashed in his presence. The worldly, the sordid and the selfish had no place in his pure spirit; temptations of such nature had no more effect on him than a steel point could have on a diamond surface.

"Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." It is a distinguishing mark of those who have true fellowship with Christ that they love to give. Their aim is not so much to get something as to give something; and, indeed, their best and richest getting is that which comes from their giving. They know the luxury of doing good. They understand by experience that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Great the joy of a truly benevolent spirit!

"For the love of Christ constraineth us." Here is the motive principle which actuates to right giving. The gospel rejects the tax that is reluctantly paid by fear. It scorns the bribe that a man pays merely to silence the importunate appeals of those who may press him for charity. It spurns indignantly that which is offered in a spirit of ostentation, or that which is intended to purchase a place in the divine favor. The only offering which it accepts is that which originates in motives of love and obedience to Christ.

We may well examine our motives when we find ourselves indisposed to habitudes of conscientious, systematic, regular giving, and yet easily persuaded to give even to the point of self-denial when stirring appeals are made and "names and amounts" are called out in the presence of a multitude. If we give only when our names are published as donors, or when under a passing fit of generosity, we have grave reason to suspect that having given to God at such times only we have been governed by a covetous spirit at all other times. There must be singleness and purity of motive. "He that giveth, let him do it with simplicity."

Let this truth be wrought into our minds as an everlasting conviction: that God has absolute proprietorship in our souls and bodies in all that we have and are. When we are brought to feel the mighty force of this truth, then will the divine energy come upon us, and our selfishness and narrowness of soul will give way to the incoming floods of almighty power. Then every motive and affection and act of life will be as "unto him." No more will we be tempted to "rob God." To give will become the joyful habit of life. Without this life has no real blessedness or true joy.—Felix R. Hill, in Episcopal Methodist.

How to Help Each Other.

We have met with this illustration: "The cobbler could not paint the picture, but he could tell Apelles that the shoe-latchet was not quite right, and the painter thought it well to take his hint. Two neighbors, one blind and the other lame, were called to a place at a great distance. What was to be done? The blind man could not see, and the lame man could not walk. Why, the blind man carried the lame one: the former assisted by his legs, the other by his eyes. Say to no one, then, I can do nothing without you, but be ready to help those who ask your aid; and then, when it is needed, you may ask theirs."

Be filled with love, and you will be ready helpers of the needy. And love is wonderfully ingenious to devise ways of help. A little suggestion like that of the shoe-latchet to the painter may contribute to the weaving of a destiny. Do what you can.—Christian Standard.

Forgiveness is easy or hard according to our estimate of the one who needs it. It is comparatively easy to forgive one who has wronged us, but it is very hard to forgive one whom we have wronged. If we feel that we were in the right, we are not likely to have any deep-seated feeling against one who was at fault in his conduct toward us. But if we are forced to admit, way down in our heart, that we were the one to blame, we can not easily bring ourselves to feel toward him we injured as we did before we wronged him. When, therefore, we say that it is hard for us to forgive another, the inference is a fair one that it is ourselves who need forgiveness.—Sunday-School Times.

Feeding.

This talk about hens led me to think about some other kinds of feeding. Over at X. they have a first-rate minister. But the people are stingy. So they have cultivated the idea that the way to make a minister spiritual is to starve him. They say: "We don't want a proud and pampered preacher. We want an humble man of God. If we should give him a large salary, he would not know how to sympathize with the poor, and if we should pay him promptly he would not have to trust in God and live by faith as every minister ought to." The result of this system is that the preacher is running down in health and in pulpit power. How can a man prepare two good sermons each week when he has to help his sick wife in the kitchen several hours every day, and to rack his brains in trying to find out how to get a dollar's worth of the necessaries of life with fifty cents? And how can he buy books when he has not money enough to buy bread? Any congregation that starves its minister starves itself.

But there is an opposite extreme. At Y. they have a very popular minister. They are so proud of him that they think nothing too good for him. They pamper him as Ben Bird pampers his fancy chickens. And the result is that the eloquent doctor has to make frequent journeys and voyages for his health. He is about on vacations nearly half of the year, and when he is at home he has to go to so many dinners and suppers that he has no time to look after the poor of his flock or to try to win men to Christ. He is a fascinating preacher, and the people know that half a dozen rich churches are ready to call him; so they humor him in everything and keep increasing his salary for fear of losing him. Now, it is evident to all who are not under the spell of this man's peculiar magnetism that he is not doing the real work of a gospel minister. He is filling a large house of worship with enthusiastic hearers; but that is all that he is doing. His church is not growing in grace, and there are few conversions. If he was not so highly fed, he might be eminently useful. But his admirers have spoiled him. He is a lecturer on religious topics at $5 000 a year, and not an earnest preacher of the Word, commending himself to every man's conscience in the sight of God.

But there is another kind of feeding in which we ought to find the golden mean if we can. The people of X. never tell their ministers that he has preached a good sermon—that they have enjoyed it and that it has edified them. If he makes a mistake of any kind, or is guilty of an omission, they tell him promptly and with emphasis. But not a word of praise or of grateful appreciation does he hear from Jan. 1 to Dec. 30. Can a man work heartily for a people who are so heartless and undemonstrative? Ministers of the gospel are men. The treasure is in earthern vessels, and people who want a man to serve them with enthusiasm must be enthusiastic. Yet this very thing may be overdone. At Y. the people gather around the doctor at the close of every service, saying, "That was a splendid discourse," "Those illustrations were grand," "That poetry you quoted was beautiful; where did you find it?" etc. This adulation is so much a matter of course that the preacher would feel himself insulted if he did not receive it. But the tendency is to make him vain, and worse still, to tempt him to labor for popularity rather than for Christ.

I do wish that some churches I know had sense enough to tell their ministers how much they love them, and I wish that other churches that I know would quit telling their ministers how much they admire them.—Interior.

Doing One's Best.

How often we are unreasonable in the standards which we set for those under us, and especially for children. It is not that we are tyrannical, it is not that we would knowingly and willingly require too much—it is because we do not think. We are often in reality expecting the impossible. "It is a great mistake," says Madame Guyon, "to fret at the absence of perfection in those we love, when they appear incapable of being perfect. We must submit meekly to what God Almighty sees and suffers patiently." We set one standard for all, and are impatient with the one who falls short of it, and often treat such as if they had not done their best. Arnold, the great schoolmaster, said that he could take off his hat to the boy whom he was reproving, when, with sincerity which convinced him, he said: "Indeed, sir, I have done my best." One child's best is not another child's best; nor is one man's or one woman's. God sets before all the one standard—perfection; but he measures the capacity of each, and puts his own value on that whereunto they attain. What gracious allowance would we make, what reasonable expectations would we form, if we did the same!—The Quiver.

My Dead Neighbor.

I stood in the darkened room beside the shrouded form of one who, for five years, had been my nearest neighbor. We had not been intimate. Somehow I had felt that we had very little in common with one another, and made no advances toward a closer acquaintance.

It is true I had always accommodated her when she sent to borrow some household utensil, or ask any favor which one neighbor usually shows another, and in so doing had prided myself on being a good neighbor to one with whom none cared to be neighborly, for the husband's shiftless ways and bad reputation had caused the whole family to be shunned.

But in the last few days of her life I had learned more about this neighbor of mine than I had learned in the years that she had lived near me, and the knowledge destroyed my self-complacency.

I learned that she was of good family, and at the early age of fifteen had been persuaded to a secret marriage by a lazy, worthless man. Her friends disowned her. Since her marriage her life was one series of disappointment, toil, privation, and sorrow. And I stood there, knowing her past life, her great folly, and her bitter punishment, her dense ignorance in regard to spiritual things, and the apparent utter darkness in which her life went out, I was conscience-stricken.

I, a neighbor and a professed Christian, had let this poor woman bear her burden of poverty and sickness alone; had never spoken to her of Christ when she was longing for help, and to know the way of life, but would not ask. There was no comfort in the thought that I did not know. I might have known. A little neighborly sympathy and Christian love would have opened this heart to me.

I stood beside that lifeless form, and wept because of the sadness of her life; but I could not help her with my sympathy. I brought my offerings and laid upon her coffin; but I could not touch the heavy burden which she had so long borne, and at last dropped from her lifeless hands. I wrote to her friends, and told them of her death in touching words, and brought them sorrowing to kiss her lifeless clay; but into her heart I could not bring the joy of their forgiveness.

I shed bitter, repentant tears, and prayed that my great sin of neglect be forgiven me; but I could not call upon her face the smile of peace brought by the knowledge of God's forgiveness and love.—Jennie Rogers, in Western Christian Advocate.

Don't Complain.

What is the use? Nobody thanks you for burdening them with your load of troubles, large or small. And they are pretty sure to seem small in other people's eyes, however large in your own. "Go hurry your sorrow, the world has its share," and does not care to take any more. Besides, the trouble gets larger the more you talk about it, or even think about it in a complaining spirit. It is amazing how a grievance grows if only it be dwelt on with sufficient persistence. He who looks at it long enough will see in it plenty of things that are not there at all.

It is easy to fall into the habit of grumbling about every little thing that does not suit; but who, on calm reflection, thinks it really pays? We doubt if anybody ever did. It has an ill effect on one's own spirits, sending them down below zero on the smallest provocation. It makes those around us constantly uncomfortable. And, most of all, it is a sin against God, a most ungrateful return for his abundant mercies.

How much better to keep in the sunshine, and to take hold of things by the smooth handle! One can always find the bright side if he looks for it. Things are never as bad as they might be. Whatever God sends is for our good, and has something about it that should call forth praise.

So we say complaint is always out of order. Christians should never cease to keep good-natured. If anything troubles you, talk it over quietly with the Lord first of all; after that, if further counsel be required, an intimate friend may be called in. In cases that admit of remedy take hold of them in resolute earnest, with a cheerful purpose to set things right. In all other cases patiently endure as seeing him who is invisible, looking for the eternal weight of glory. In any case, don't fret, don't make yourself a nuisance. "Look up and not down, look forward and not back, look out and not in, and lend a hand" of help to every one in need.—Zion's Herald.

The Minutes of the second session of the Japanese Mission Annual Conference, printed in a neat pamphlet, are at hand. The statistical tables foot up good results. The total number of members, including probationers, is about six hundred, a slight increase over last year. We have been much interested in reading the reports of committees and other items of detail.—Pacific Advocate.

Be in Time.

Riding with a friend one day, as we came in sight of a neat cottage, which was formerly the dwelling-place of some well-known Christian people, he remarked, "I was called into the sick room of a sister there who had some thousands of dollars in money, which she was to leave behind her at death, and she said," naming two well-known ministers, to whose words she had often listened, "'I wish Bro. B. and Bro. H. to have each one hundred dollars.'" There were two witnesses present besides the members of the family: the money, thousands of dollars of it, was in the bank; her friends around her were professing Christians; but not one dollar of that money was paid as she desired it should be, but that, and many thousands of dollars besides were squandered by unthrifty heirs, and every dollar of it is now gone.

This woman had abundant opportunity to have given that money while she was alive. She often saw the persons whom she named—one of them had been her friend for years; the other had large opportunities for making use of means in doing good. She did not need the money, she never would need it; yet she held fast to it till her dying hour, and then gave directions concerning its disposal, which were never carried out. It is not easy to have one's way when alive; what chance is there when a person is dead? "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work nor device, nor wisdom, nor knowledge in the grave whither thou goest."—Exchange.

Speak a Word.

He sat in a corner shivering, for he was down at the heel. He was considering whether he should jump into the river, or fly to America and leave his wife and family, so as to get out of his difficulties. The friend at his side saw by his face that there was very stormy weather in his soul, and so he gently spoke about the troubles of life which happen to all. Poor Downcast was much at home upon that subject. Then the friend spoke of faith in the Lord Jesus as to the greatest of all burdens, and how that load was taken quite away; and from this he argued that all the smaller baggage of daily care could be removed, too. He showed how God appears in the darkest moment for the rescue of them that trust in him. Poor Downcast drank in the words as a sponge sucks up moisture, and by the time the train was in the station he had almost forgotten that his name was Downcast, and might have taken the name of Hopeful.

If our friend had held his tongue, no one can tell what would have become of the poor despairing mortal. As it was, he lifted him from a horrible pit, and put a new song in his mouth.

It is well to speak a word in season to him that is weary. Let us use the sacred art. We shall improve by practice. Let us prudently, but boldly, go in for holy talks, and so glorify God and comfort men.—Sword and Trowel.

Complaint is often made that the church is not well managed, yet it often happens that those who are loudest in finding fault at the remiss way in which things are done take the least part, and sometimes no part at all, in making them better. It suits them better to lay the blame upon somebody else than to lend a helping hand toward their improvement. This may be in place if the design is to throw odium upon others, or to vent personal ill-will, or to justify individual neglect, or to excuse want of interest in church affairs; but it is a poor way to rectify matters, or to evince Christian regard, or to help on the cause of Christ. If things are not running right, there is all the more necessity for co-operation, that injury may be averted. Offer counsel, go to work, rally the right men for the right service, encourage and cheer, make the best of circumstances and annoyances, talk things into better shape, view things more hopefully, take the trouble to God, and put Christ forward. In this way you will be surprised what changes will be effected, and what blessings you will become.—Presbyterian.

A gentleman in New York recently said to another: "Is Mr. L. a Christian?" He replied: "Well, yes; Godward he is all right, but manward he is just a little twisted." How many really good people lay themselves open to this description! They do not carry out their Christian principles so as to be void of offense. Their life is not lived up to their faith. In small things they dishonor God. In some of their common-life dealings they do not carry out their principles among their fellowmen. We are afraid the "little twist" is more or less seen in us all. Alas! twists of temper, twists of inconsistency, society twists, business twists, home twists? May God set us upright, and give us in our daily life a straight backbone, so that we may walk upright among our fellow-men on our way to heaven!—The Quiver.

HYGIENE.

Mind and Body.

The present era offers superior opportunities to those who are in a position to embrace them; but at a time when every faculty is kept on the alert, when so much is crowded into a short period that the years come to be counted rather by moments than by days, it is of prime importance that the resources of the human economy should be kept at the highest point of development.

Nor can we, if we would not eventually fall short of our desired achievements, afford to discriminate in favor of either mind or body. The development of each is equally essential to the greatest and best results from the other.

We have had much instruction of late as to the advantages accruing, in daily life, to the possessor of a well-developed physique. And this has been well. It should be a part of our daily religion to give such attention and care to the body as is becoming to the "temple of the soul." It is with the body as with any delicate and intricate piece of machinery; its value is only maintained at the expense of constant care.

But to whatever extent we may incorporate these truths into our daily lives, we can not fail to appreciate the immense influence, either for good or evil, which is exerted upon the human economy by the intellect. We must remember that intellectual development may itself be a potent influence in the maintenance of a well-ordered physique.

It is when the various organs of the body are under the control of an impressible and capricious nervous temperament that they are in danger of becoming seriously handicapped in their legitimate work.

On the contrary, an organism which is guided by a well-balanced and discriminating intellect has already more than half of the problem of successful longevity solved.

We are to understand, then, that, given a body free from any organic trouble, the successful enjoyment and prolongation of life is as much dependent upon intellectual development as upon physical.—Youth's Companion.

Relaxation.

Work when you work, but when the measure of one's duty is done then thoroughly relax. There is as much virtue in refreshing soul and body by yielding up all responsibility and care, as there is in the courageous meeting of active obligations. When we have done our best, and worked to the limit of our capabilities, then we should rest upon the law of life, and with the faith of a little child feel assured the Father is all good, and what is or must be is best.

If we faithfully do our duty, and repose in peace upon the will of the Father for results, we may have the freedom from anxiety that gives each moment of rest thorough relaxation and pleasure. New strength then flows to us abundantly for the sustaining of the next obligation duty places in our path. It is thus we conserve our energies and are faithful servants in the required hours of service. One can exhaust more force in an hour's unnecessary fretting than would enable them to do a day's work. It is the useless worrying that ages, and robs mature life of its beauty and power.

Fretting and worrying never turned a wheel or brought sustaining help to any crisis. We are but children in the arms of the Infinite Father, and rebellion breaks our powers upon the wheel of the law, but does not change the turning of the wheel. In harmony with the law we are carried onward and upward. Resistance is our own destruction.

That which we can not make or break is not our care. When our daily duty is done to the best of our cheerful ability, we must rest in heart and brain, in soul and body, and feel the wisdom that produced the marvel of life has a crown for its brave fulfillment. Thus petty trials are forgotten, and great ones dignified.—The Housekeeper.

Pains of the Head.

Headaches are very often due to affections of the eyes, such as weakness seen in convalescence from debilitating sickness; inherited weakness; straining of the muscles of the eye; anatomical or other imperfections in the mechanism of sight; overuse, strain or abuse resulting from reading by bad light; dusty and irritating atmospheres, etc., etc. Dyspepsia, liver troubles, and constipation give rise to "sick headache," a dull aching pain, accompanied by more or less nausea. Constipation in these cases is generally an indication of the nause, and of a method of relief. Neuralgic pains are sharp, shooting, and almost unbearable; generally a tender spot will be found in the vicinity. The pain follows the course of the nerves affected, a common location being just above one or both eyes, the tender point being just at the bony margin beneath the eyebrow. Nasal catarrh and inflammatory affections of the ear (often associated) are common causes of headache.—Guardian.

At Your Door.

A great work can be done in every city, town, village, and settlement in the South that is often overlooked. We do not discount one iota of special work for any of the institutions of the church. Christian work will not conflict at any point. They are all members of one body. And while this is at our door, not in Japan, Mexico or in the dark corners of Texas, yet when we go to do it, it requires faith and zeal to succeed at it. We refer to going after the non-church goers in every place. The writer heard a man say this last night was the first time in fourteen years he had been to church; had almost forgotten the order of service. "Where have you been?" asked a friend. "Right here," was the answer, "in a town full of churches." We can easily say, it was his own fault, and all the common expressions you hear when the subject is mentioned. But is this enough? Is it Christ-like to let it rest here? We think the members of our leagues would do well to get a list of all the unconnected persons in the neighborhood of their church, and see to it that they get an invitation to all the services of the church, and not simply in a formal way, but let it mean business. We do not ask a man to buy our goods, land or stock simply to say the invitation has been given. But we talk to succeed, and success means a sale. When this work is undertaken it ought not to stop shorter than to have them in the church. Then it would be a good plan to hand to your pastor the names of all the people you are laboring with, so if it comes in his way he might aid you with a word, visit, or in some other way. Let this matter be considered early in the year, and let the entire league understand what is going on for this class. For we do not think it ought to be placed in the hands of a committee, but each member of the league feel that they must do a part of this work. What a work would be done if every person could be induced to attend some church every Sunday in the year! They must hear the gospel before we can hope for their conversion. You lead them where they can hear your pastor preach and you have begun a great work.—Epworth Methodist.

What One Can Do.

Mr. Finney, the successful evangelist of the last generation gave an account of a blacksmith who became so concerned about the spiritual condition of the place where he lived, that he shut up his shop and spent all day Friday and Saturday in earnest prayer to God for a spiritual awakening. That Saturday evening he went to his pastor's house, and said to him, "There is going to be a revival." The pastor said he saw no indication of it, and that he could hardly believe it. The old man insisted that there was to be a revival, and that speedily, and finally prevailed upon his pastor to agree to announce on Sunday, that if there were those in the congregation who were concerned about their souls, they might visit their pastor's house on Monday evening. To the surprise of the minister, there were about forty people who were deeply concerned about their spiritual welfare, who must have been moved to manifest their interest by the faith and prayer of the blacksmith.

Here is something for our people to think about. Let some one in every place try this. O for praying hearts! O for knee work. Let us all get down and plead for souls until the blessing comes.—Florida Advocate.

BRECHAM'S PILLS sell well because they cure.

Personal loveliness is not loveliness of person; and yet a person who is lovely in spirit will be sure to give evidence of that loveliness in and through the outer person. Not merely in expression of countenance, but in tones of voice, in gentleness of manner, and in gracefulness and dignity of bearing and movement, a lovely spirit will manifest itself as lovely. True beauty is first of the nature, and then of the appearance. In order to show one's self to advantage, one must live to advantage.—Sunday-School Times.

Large as a Dollar

Were the scrofula sores on my poor little boy. They were especially severe on his legs, back of his ears and on his head. His hair was so matted that combing was sometimes impossible. His legs were so bad that sometimes he could not sit down, and when he tried to walk his legs would crack open and the blood start. Physicians did not cure. I decided to give him Hood's Sarsaparilla. In two weeks the sores began to heal up; the scales came off and all over his body new and healthy flesh and skin formed. When he had taken two bottles of

INTERNATIONAL BIBLES.

Largest Type Teacher's Bible in the World.

We have for years been trying to get a large type Teacher's Bible which was not too large and heavy. We have it in this series. Besides this feature, the helps are entirely new, and were written by the greatest scholars of both America and Europe, which guarantees their superiority over all others. Everyone who is familiar with the Oxford and Bagster Teacher's Bibles knows that the book printed in Minion type makes the most desirable sized volume, but the Minion type is too small for any but the best eyes; and while their books in Bourgeois type suit the eyes, they are entirely too large and heavy for convenient handling. This International Series overcomes both these faults by having the Bourgeois type book no larger or heavier than the much smaller type (Minion) Oxford and Bagster books, while the prices are much less than for books of corresponding type in any other series, and the bindings are not only similar in design, but equal in every particular to the older Teacher's Bibles; and some of these bindings are finer than those of any other Teacher's Bibles we have ever seen.

We are specially glad to be able to say that the prices of these Bibles are in many cases much cheaper than the Oxford or Bagster Books, while they are altogether equally well made and have the newest and best helps and Maps. We claim for these new Teacher's Bibles that they give

The Largest Type in the Smallest Book.

The Newest and Best Helps.

The Newest Maps, Which Were Made Especially for This Series.

Bindings Unsurpassed.

Smaller Prices Than Any Other Series.

We confidently assure our patrons that in the INTERNATIONAL TEACHER'S BIBLE SERIES we have the very BEST line of Teacher's Bibles ever offered.

Let Us Have a Revival.

The Lord is ever ready; he waits to bestow his blessing; all that ever hinders is the unreadiness of his people to appropriate and improve. The moment you are ready, the blessing is at hand. You have not to ascend into heaven, or to descend into the deep; the word of this grace is nigh. The signs are favorable for a great work of grace.

With both individuals and churches the descent of the Spirit is the supreme need. There are, no doubt, many other things desirable, and, perhaps, greatly needed, but there is nothing so indispensable to your spiritual comfort, enlargement and fruitfulness in the work of God as the reviving power of the Holy Spirit. He will be in you a well of water, ever springing and flowing forth in perennial blessing. The blessing will abide. The Holy Spirit will be to you a comfort, ever present and adequate to all needs. To change the figure, the Holy Spirit will be in you a source of light, life and power, a spiritual dynamo, whence shall go forth from your life unseen, but helpful influences. You will not only be blessed, you will be a blessing to those with whom you may be associated. Power will go out of you.

Be not faithless, but believing. Say not, "There are yet four months and then cometh the harvest." Now is the accepted time, and now is the day of salvation. There can be no better time, for this is God's time. Arise to your opportunity and accept the larger things already in waiting for you. Join hands and faith with those who are earnestly desiring the coming of the King. There is nothing the church needs so much as this quickening in the spiritual life.

Gird your loins for this new campaign. Enter into the work yourself. Your need is not more machinery, but added spiritual power to operate the machinery you already have. There are agencies enough in the church to revolutionize the world; the trouble is, there are too many Quaker guns and too many holiday soldiers, good on parade, but quite ineffective in the stress of the battle.

Brother preacher, if you would see the work prosper, enter deeply into it yourself. Say not to your marshals, "Go;" but lead the column yourself. Be in earnest, in season and out of season. Consecrate yourself to this one work, and as the fire kindles on your own soul the columns will advance, aid will come to you, and the enemy will be routed in the open field. Enlist all your lay talent, get everybody to work, and endeavor to concentrate the general attention and interest on the work of God. Pray that the present year may be a revival time, and add to your prayers the requisite works. —Zion's Herald.

Work for the General Conference.

If the next General Conference does nothing in the way of legislation, it will not be for want of suggestions from the Annual Conferences. Most of the Annual Conferences have sent up memorials calling for legislation. The North Carolina Conference, at its recent session, adopted seven memorials, the gist of which we give in another column. The first of these asks that the law be so changed that the trial of a traveling preacher shall not occur during the session of the Annual Conference. This memorial, we think, is worthy of very careful consideration. We do not think the law ought to be so changed that a preacher can not be tried during the Conference session. When charges are brought up unexpectedly at an Annual Conference, if all parties concerned are ready for trial, the case ought to be adjudicated at once, so that the preacher, if acquitted, may receive an appointment. But when charges are made during the interim of the Annual Conference, and when the investigating committee has decided that a trial is necessary, why should the trial be postponed until the session of Conference? When the trial at the Annual Conference results in acquittal, as is often the case, then by such postponement an innocent man is suspended for a longer or shorter period of time—possibly nearly a year; and by such suspension his reputation suffers, and his usefulness is impaired. Moreover, his charge during this time is either without a pastor or its pulpit is supplied by some makeshift arrangement. In such a case, why postpone the trial? Oftentimes the facilities for a full and impartial investigation are far better elsewhere than at the seat of Conference. Let the trial take place within the bounds of the pastoral charge of the accused, or if there are reasons for holding it elsewhere, at some other point which affords facilities for the attendance of witnesses. Could this be done, then in case of acquittal there would be an interregnum in the pastorate of only a few days. Under the present regime we are sure it often happens that the committee of trial has only a partial knowledge of the facts bearing on the case. Is there any objection to this change in the law, except that of the man who ploughed with a crooked stick "'cause he ploughed that way"?

The second change asked for by the North Carolina Conference has reference to the trustees of church property. The memorial asks that a time limit of four years be fixed to the office of trustee. We heartily favor this change. In the infancy of a local church, when suitable material for filling church offices is scarce, it often happens that men are put into office who are utterly inefficient. In the case of stewards, Sunday-school superintendents, etc., the evil can soon be removed, as the pastor has the whole thing in his own hands at the close of every Conference year. But the trustee once in is in forever. He may be utterly inefficient—yea, worse than inefficient, he may be a clog upon the wheels—but he is in, and there he stays as long as he lives.

The Mississippi Conference some years ago adopted a memorial similar to that of the North Carolina Conference, but it perished in the maw of "the nonconcurrence committee." We hope this memorial will meet a better fate.

Another memorial pertains to unordained pastors. This memorial touches a feature of our ecclesiastical economy which certainly needs to be most carefully scrutinized. Year after year we are placing unordained men—a great number of them—in charge of our various grades of appointments—circuits, stations and missions. This policy is exceedingly harmful in its results, much more so than would be supposed by one who has never investigated the matter. Is there a marriage ceremony to be performed? Then, inasmuch as the pastor is unauthorized to render such a service, a minister of another denomination is called upon, who is thereby placed in a decidedly advantageous position for securing the affections of the young couple. He of course feels himself at liberty to call upon them at an early day, while they in turn feel it incumbent upon them to attend at least occasionally upon his ministry. In this way a process begins whose final result in many instances is the loss of a household to our church. Of course, this result does not always follow. Persons who are thoroughly indoctrinated in the principles of Methodist theology and Methodist polity will not so easily be alienated. But unfortunately only a few of our young people belong to this class. There are thousands whose ecclesiastical affiliations are much more largely determined by their personal affection for a minister than by their belief in a creed. In this way we are sustaining losses year after year, and that, too, with an air of perfect nonchalance, as if it were a matter of no consequence. And what has been said with reference to the marriage ceremony applies with almost equal force to infant baptism, with this exception: that the baptism of the little babe can be more easily postponed until the presiding elder comes around. In a station the presiding elder may ordinarily be looked for once a quarter; but on a circuit once a year is as often as he can visit each church; and on circuits of more than four appointments, he can not come that often. Then, too, it often happens that just at the time of his visit to the church, the parents for one reason or another are not ready for the ceremony. In this way many infants are not baptized at all, who would be if the pastor were ordained. In addition to this, charges served by unordained pastors usually have the sacrament only when the presiding elder comes around; and, as we have seen, this may be once a year, or once in two years. Of course, there are many cases in which this service is performed by local preachers; but in many other cases this is impracticable. Thus by our polity we leave our people without the opportunity to partake of the Holy Eucharist except at long intervals. Complaints with regard to these matters are coming up from all parts of the church. Laymen—intelligent laymen who love the church—are inquiring, "What is the necessity for this state of things? If a man is competent to preach the gospel and to perform all the difficult and delicate duties of a preacher in charge, why is he not competent to perform the marriage ceremony, and administer the ordinance of baptism?" The time has come when these questions must be answered. In the past Methodism has always adjusted itself to its environments. We believe it will continue to do so.

We do not believe it will perpetuate a policy which causes irreparable loss to the church. If our young men are not competent to exercise ministerial prerogatives in their fullness, let us not make them preachers in charge; let us, as our fathers did, make them junior preachers. If they are competent, let us authorize them to exercise all the functions of a full fledged pastorate.

That is an unwise policy which strives to win ignorance and coarseness by methods of preaching which are intrinsically fitted to alienate learning and taste.—Recorder.

Another Gift to Millsaps College.

We are gratified to announce another handsome gift to Millsaps College. Mrs. Annie Davis Smith, of Canton, Miss., has given us $2,500 to endow a scholarship to be named the "Jefferson Davis Scholarship," in honor of her distinguished uncle, the Hon. Jefferson Davis. The conditions of the liberal and gratefully accepted gift are thus stated by the honored donor herself:

The only conditions of this gift are as follows:

1. I am to have the privilege of naming the beneficiary as long as I live.

2. In the event of my death, my son, Jefferson Davis Smith, is to have the benefit of the scholarship until he shall have finished his college course.

3. In all other respects this scholarship shall be under the control of the Board of Trustees of Millsaps College.

4. The name of this scholarship shall be the "Jefferson Davis Scholarship," in honor of my best friend and much loved uncle, Jefferson Davis.

I need not say that we appreciate most highly this large-hearted and intelligent generosity. Great good will thus be done in the name of our Lord, and a work that will go on when our dear friend has finished her earthly career. How wise thus to invest the means committed to our keeping! May blessings abundant be upon our generous friend and the beneficiaries of her beneficence!

THE FIRST $100,000.

I am rejoiced also to announce that this day the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees of Millsaps College received from Maj. Millsaps his second $25,000, thus completing the first $100.000 of our endowment fund. Not until to-day were we able to report to him that the full $50,000, to be raised by the church, had been paid in. Now we are encouraged to move on to larger things. This is but a hopeful beginning—the work must go on. Under the last liberal proposition of Maj. Millsaps to give dollar for dollar up to $25,000, any amount the church will contribute, we must increase our endowment and enlarge our facilities. The endowment notes unpaid must be collected and sacredly devoted to the purpose for which they were given. One good brother has already signified his purpose to have his Sunday-school give $100 annually to the college under this proposition—that $100 counts to us $200. Will not many others do likewise? Shall we not earnestly use this great opportunity for the glory of God? If we so order, our college will soon become the mightiest factor in Southwestern Methodism. After the settlement made this morning the Executive Committee passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That we, the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees of Millsaps College, return our most grateful acknowledgements to Maj. R. W. Millsaps for his second gift of $25,000, this day turned over to us. For his princely liberality and unfaltering interest in the great enterprise so happily and successfully inaugurated, Church and State owe him a large debt of gratitude.

Our retiring agent, Rev. J. W. Chambers, has been untiring in labor, and to him we passed a hearty vote of thanks.

The new agent, Rev. Dr. Inman W. Cooper, has entered upon his work most enthusiastically. He is cordially commended to preachers and people everywhere. Give him welcome, hear him for his cause, and respond to his appeals. We gratefully bid adieu to the old year, and hail the new with joyous hope. May it be the brightest year in the brilliant young history of Millsaps College!

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

Jackson, Miss., Dec. 30, 1893.

[We are always glad to receive a communication from Bishop Galloway, but we are doubly so when he has news like the above to communicate. All honor to our good Canton sister! Her memory will be cherished when she has transferred her membership to the church above. May this donation prove to be the first fruits of a bounteous harvest of munificence in the cause of Christian education! This is one of the best methods of testifying our gratitude to our heavenly Father for his manifold mercies. We best serve God by serving humanity. That was Christ's way of glorifying the Father.—EDITOR.]

Life's Problem.

The pious life and the secular are supposed to be foes. The monastic idea still lives. The pulpit, it is fancied, ought to be holier than the pew. The world is conceived by some as being so evil that every pure man or woman must get himself to a monastery of devotion. "If you don't get out of the world, the world will get into you," is often felt. The problem, therefore, is to keep the noblest Christian faith and daily work in healthful relation. The problem is to be a Christian, earnest and aggressive, and a business man also earnest and aggressive; at once to walk a high plane of spirituality and a high plane of commercial success; to be a spiritual-minded man and a successful lawyer, merchant, mechanic, doctor, banker; to be "not slothful in business," but "always serving the Lord;" to be in the world, yet not to be of the world. This is our problem. What is its solution?

We are to adjust our worldly interests to high piety by transfiguring these interests through the power of a great love for Christ. We are to transfigure business and domestic humdrum into Christian callings, through Christian enthusiasm. A doctor may look upon his profession in one of three ways. He may regard it as purely a money-making affair. In this case, it has the ethical value of sawing wood or shoveling dirt. He may regard it from a scientific point of view. In this case, it has the ethical value of applied science. He may regard it as a means of saving men, men so worth saving that Christ died to save them. In the first case his profession may have a financial enthusiasm; in the second case a scientific enthusiasm; in the third case a Christian enthusiasm. The doctor, who in the love of Christ goes to the bedside of the sick man, finds no difference between professional humdrum and Christian service. Professional drudgery becomes service for Christ. His love for Christ transfigures his simple, petty, at times disgusting, tasks into great, sublime, magnificent Christian duties. His work becomes not petty, microscopic, ending in itself, but telescopic, bringing the flaming stars and worlds of God into man's sight. Every calling may be thus transfigured. What does the stone-cutter see in a new variety of stone? So many cubic feet of hardness to be cut and hammered and polished. What did Hugh Miller see in it? A revelation of the footsteps of the Creator as he once walked the earth. What does the Gloucester fisherman see in a new variety of fish, which his hook has brought to the surface? A new article of food for him to sell. What does Agassiz find in it? Proof of the laws of nature, which are also the laws of God. To the stone cutter, splitting rocks is hard work; to the geologist, it is learning. To the fisherman, fishing on the banks is a perilous and hard work, to be done only for bread. To the zoologist, the finding of a new specimen is an endeavor to spell out God's alphabet for human understanding. Likewise more love for Christ changes tasks into visions. Love for Christ lifts worldly interests into heavenly. Love for Christ converts our common duties, our daily drudgery and commonplace occupations into root and stalk, bearing white flowers of Christian faith and peace.

We are, moreover, to bear in mind that a high type of piety promotes the doing of the common duties. A high type of piety converts honesty into honor, faith into faithfulness, truth into trueness. A high type of piety dignifies all toil and heightens every aim. A high type of piety fastens the wagon to a star, and the wagon goes as fast as the star. Great and noble men look upon common duties as great and noble. The Hessians fought because they were hired to fight, and war was murder. Our forefathers fought for native land, home and freedom, and war was the sword of the Lord, which these Gideonites used.

The doing of common duties also gives substance to piety and a steadiness in its progress. The merely pious life, not chained to common duties, is liable to be freaky, sentimental, nervous, hysterical. When piety becomes a vocation it becomes pietism, and the pietist is the first cousin to the hypocrite. Common duties are the ballast which gives equipoise to the ship of character.

We may further keep our high ideals and our daily work in healthful relations by knowing that God's regard for our work is measured by the Christian character of our work, rather than by its material or physical importance. Character, not greatness, is God's measuring line. Men saw in Moses a disappointed pioneer. God saw in Moses the deliverer of his people. Men saw in Tyndale, Huss and Cranmer misguided enthusiasts. God saw in Tyndale, Huss and Cranmer the wise and strong apostles of the faith. Men saw in Newell, Hall, Nott and Judson blind zealots. God saw in them the calm, mighty piety that crosses the globe to save a soul. Seen from the stars, the palace and the hut are equally splendid and equally humble. Seen from heaven's walls, the shining pile of gold, the result of strife and labor, may seem a dull and trivial pile of lead. We are to look upon life as God looks upon it, an opportunity for the formation of our own character and aid in forming other men's character. We are not to let obscurity give despair, nor eminence elation. We are to measure things not by the yard stick, but by celestial diameters; to weigh things not in steel scales, but in divine balances.—Advance.

A Bargain.

DON'T MISS IT.

During the next thirty days we make the following offer: For $2.25 in cash we will send the ADVOCATE one year and a copy of "Christian Womanhood." The price of the ADVOCATE is $2; the price of the book, $1. This book has had an extensive sale, the sixth thousand being now on the market.

The following notices, selected from a vast number that have appeared in the church papers, will give some idea of the character of the work:

The best thesaurus of facts concerning womanhood with which we are acquainted.—Dr. C. F. Deems.

We hope it will be read by every man and woman in the church.—Florida Advocate.

We hope it will be extensively circulated and carefully read.—NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE.

Heartily recommended.—Dr. John E. Edwards.

This volume is the result of patient investigation and thoughtful study of the whole question treated. In the formulation of the case and in analyzing the testimony a vigorous, well-poised, legal mind is brought to bear. Dr. Black, moreover, establishes the points of his discussion as a skillful general establishes his lines in the face of an alert enemy. As he begins, so he closes, leaving the impression that a master in Israel has written bravely and tellingly of Christian womanhood, maintaining his position at every turn. The book is needed, and will long be in popular demand.—Sunday-School Magazine.

Don't miss this opportunity.

NOTES.

This is going time among our preachers. We have recently met some of the going fraternity. Bros. J. W. Chambers and J. V. Penn, of the Mississippi Conference, passed through the city last week en route to their new charges.

***

The new preachers in the city—Bros. Faunt Leroy and F. S. Parker—are on the ground and at work. Bro. Parker occupied the pulpit of his new charge (Dryades Street) the first Sunday after Conference, and made quite a favorable impression. Bro. Faunt Leroy expounded the gospel at Felicity last Sabbath to a good congregation. His sermon is highly spoken of by those who heard it. Bro. Faunt Leroy's place of abode will be 507 St. Charles Avenue.

***

On Sunday morning at Carondelet Street Church we had the privilege of hearing a sermon from our senior Bishop from the text: "Is it not written in your law, I said ye are gods? If he called them gods unto whom the Word of God came, and the Scripture can not be broken; say ye of him whom the Father hath sanctified, and sent into the world, thou blasphemest; because I said ye are the Son of God?" (John x, 34-36) It was a characteristically strong and scriptural discourse.

***

Rev. Joseph B. Stratton, D. D., pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Natchez, Miss., has just celebrated on last Sabbath the fiftieth anniversary of his pastorate. This is something out of the usual order. Very few ministers in any denomination serve the same charge a half-century. Dr. Stratton has often had several calls to larger and wealthier churches, but has never found it in his heart to sever his connection with his first pastoral charge. We have never known a man more universally beloved than is this patriarch of Presbyterianism.

The Quarterly Review of the M. E. Church, South, for January, is on our table. The leading place is occupied by a timely, well-written article, entitled "The Field for a Southern Literature, by J. W. Daniel." We heartily join the author in the hope "that we are on the eve of a great literary revolution in the South. The signs of the times are favorable. Let every patriotic Southerner foster and encourage every budding attempt to evolve a great Southern literature; and the time will soon come when the South will be discounted intellectually no longer by foreigners." Dr. E. E. Hoss gives us the third installment of his able series on "The Governing Body in Methodism." "The Spiritual Teaching of the Book of Job" is the first installment of what promises to be an interesting series by Emma G. Wilbur. "Morals and Manners of the Eighteenth Century" is just such a scholarly article as would be expected from its gifted author, Prof. W. M. Baskervillie, of Vanderbilt. "Philip P. Neely and Alabama Forty Years Ago" is a racy scrap of history from the facile pen of the blind man eloquent, Rev. W. H. Milburn. "James Jenkins: A Pioneer of Southern Methodism," by A. M. Chreitzburg, is an interesting contribution to the history of Methodism in South Carolina. "A Blue Stocking of the Eighteenth Century" is a review of a two-volume English biography, entitled "Memoirs of the Life of Miss Elizabeth Carter," and is well worth reading. "The Codex Vaticanus" is a very learned article by the editor. Bishop Galloway's facile pen does good service in perpetuating the fame of "Henry T. Lewis—Humorist, Poet, Preacher, Reformer." The "Editor's Table" is as usual loaded with rich diet. Our Review should have a much larger circulation than it has. All our preachers should take it, and our leading laymen as well.

WALTER BAKER & Co., the largest Cocoa and Chocolate Manufacturers on this continent, have carried off the highest honors at the World's Columbian Exposition. They received from the Board of Judges the highest awards (medals and diplomas) on all the articles contained in their exhibit; namely, breakfast cocoa, premium No. 1 chocolate, German sweet chocolate, vanilla chocolate, cocoa butter.

The Judges state in their report that these products are characterized by "excellent flavor," "purity of material employed," and "uniform, even composition, indicating great care in point of mechanical preparation."

A copy of Miss Parloa's "Choice Receipts" will be sent free to any housekeeper, on application, by mail or otherwise, to Walter Baker & Co., Dorchester, Mass.

Watch-Night in the Crescent City.

Watch-night is more generally observed in New Orleans than in any city in which we have ever resided. The churches almost universally have watch-night services, commencing about ten or half-past ten o'clock. The services are usually well attended. But it is not in the church alone, or chiefly, that watch-night is observed. The non-church-goers, a mighty multitude, observe it in their homes and on the street. The performance begins at an early hour with pyrotechnical performances of every description. In every place in which we have lived previously the stock of fireworks was about exhausted at Christmas. New Orleans, however, seems to reserve the major part of her stock for watch-night. The firecracker, the Roman candle, the sky-rocket, and all the rest of the pyrotechnical tribe get in their work, with the usual concomitants of whoop and huzza. The small boy and his small sister, the big boy and his big sister, paterfamilias and materfamilias, dude and dudine, tough and toughess, all participate, if not as actors, then as spectators. Great processions march the streets with martial music and streaming banners. The fact that watch-night happens to be Sunday night makes little difference. The New Orleans conscience is too well trained to be disturbed by so trivial matters as Sunday fireworks and Sunday processions. As the supreme hour draws near when Old Year must vacate his throne and turn over his sceptre to New Year, the din increases. Nobody is supposed to be in bed. It would be horrid to think that anybody would allow New Year to come in without greeting him with some kind of noise. Brass bands are insufficient. Bugles and tin horns of all sorts and sizes must do their part. Everything that can make a noise is brought into requisition. Even the magic power of steam is utilized. For a full half hour, or more, every boat in the river, and all the mills and factories in the city and suburbs, and all their kin, expend their marvelous energies in a skillful effort to surpass the rest of the world in making a noise. If Ninety-four does not feel at home in his place in the calendar, it is not because the Crescent City has failed to welcome him with horrid, nerve-trying racket. We are not going to moralize on all this at present. We are simply writing chronicles of current events. At another time we may moralize.

SPECIAL SERVICES, FEB. 6-11, 1894.

The program for these meetings provides for a brief daily service and a morning and evening service for the Sabbath, Feb. 11.

The work of the pastor's Aid Societies and Epworth Leagues is so perfectly in harmony with the work of the W. P. and H. M. Society, that they are cordially invited to join in the observance of these meetings. Upon application, we will furnish the program for the young people and children (for the evening of Feb. 11) to all pastors, Sunday-school superintendents, Epworth Leagues and any of our church societies that will agree to use them and take a collection for us at the meetings. Every auxiliary of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society is expected to hold daily meetings, observing the following

PROGRAM FOR WEEK OF PRAYER.

Feb. 6, Tuesday—Scripture Reading, Matt. xxv, 31-46. Hymns 499 and 844. Paper—Topic, "The Need for Our Work," or "Our Country for Christ."

Feb. 7, Wednesday—Scripture Reading, II. Cor. ix, 1-15. Hymns 502 and 542. Paper—Topic, "Systematic Giving."

Feb. 8, Thursday—Scripture Reading, Acts ix, 36-43. Hymns 486 and 165. Three-minutes papers on "Heroines of Early Methodism."

Feb. 9, Friday—Scripture Reading, St. John xx, 1-18. Hymns 878 and 416. Paper—Topic, "City Evangelization." Election of officers or effecting of an organization where no society exists.

Feb. 10, Saturday—Scripture Reading, Eph. iii, 14-21, and St. John xv, 1-10. Hymns 881 and 873. Topic, "Spirituality."

Will not each pastor see that the ladies of his charge are thoroughly informed about these meetings and aid in their observance and conduct? An article on "Systematic Giving" and on "City Evangelization" will appear in "Our Homes."

Rev. I. W. Cooper.

We have lost our pastor, Dr. I. W. Cooper. We were disappointed, and if it had not been for the important place to which he was appointed, we would almost rebel, for in the first place we were entitled to him one more year and had no other expectation but to get him back. He did a work for us no other preacher could have done, and we wanted him to enjoy it. Our old church had stood nearly forty years, and the basement was about to give way. Baptist brethren had just finished a ten-thousand-dollar church. The Presbyterians had just remodeled theirs. Times were hard and money was scarcer than ever known in this country before. The building of a new Methodist Church seemed impossible, but Bro. Cooper said, "We can and we must build." He led the way by giving a large portion of his own salary, took charge of the work, and in five months one of the neatest, prettiest and cheapest church-buildings in the State was dedicated to God. The women of the church immortalized themselves by backing up the pastor.

Not a cross word or jar was felt or heard through all the work. It will be a monument to Bro. Cooper's memory when he sleeps with his fathers. He has a natural gift in finance. On that account, no doubt, he was selected as agent for Millsaps College. He is enthused with the idea of building up a great school for the masses, especially for the education of young men for the ministry. That is the goal of his ambition. As such, he has already been the means of getting several young preachers in college from his own private means.

Mr. Editor, I don't claim to be a judge; but I believe that a successful agent must be, in the first place, a good financier. In the second place, he must prove his faith by his works. He must be a liberal man himself, I do not believe a stingy, selfish man can be a successful agent. In the third place, he must be a man of magnetism who can draw the people to him and impress them that he is in dead earnest, that he believes all that he says. In the fourth place, he must be a popular preacher. All these points center in Bro. Cooper.

I take the liberty of introducing him to the seventy-five or eighty thousand white members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the two Mississippi Conferences. What Bro. Cooper especially wants for 1894 is twenty-five thousand dollars, which will be to the college fifty thousand. Let us resolve that he shall have it.

Notice.

To the Pastors of the Vicksburg District—

Dear Brethren: The fact that almost all the public instruction the children of the church receive as to the Bible and religion comes through the Sunday-school, makes this a most important arm of the service in the church. You will please invite and urge all your officers and teachers, with all officers of the various church societies, to meet with us in the Quarterly Conference, that we may get the entire work of the church intelligently before us, and then press it vigorously.

Memorials to the General Conference Recommended by the North Carolina Conference.

1. For a change in the law providing for the trial of a traveling preacher in the interim of the Annual Conference, thereby relieving the Annual Conference sessions of the evils incident to such trial during the sessions.

2. To change the law relating to trustees of church property, so as to have a time limit of their term of office of four years.

3. To transfer that part of North Carolina now included in the Virginia Conference to the North Carolina Conference.

4. To transfer the licensing of preachers from the Quarterly Conference to the District Conference, and extend the course of study prescribed for examination of candidates for the ministry.

5 That the law be so changed as to allow the Bishops to leave a young minister without an appointment to attend one of our institutions of learning.

6 That the General Conference create a Sunday-school Board similar to other general boards, instead of the general Sunday-school Committee, and that a course of study be prescribed for Sunday-school teachers.

7. That the law be so changed as to allow unordained traveling preachers to administer the sacrament of baptism, and the right of matrimony.

Resolutions by North Georgia Conference.

The following resolutions were read and adopted:

Whereas, The Discipline guarantees the right to the Church Conferences to adopt their own method of raising funds to pay their liabilities; And whereas, Uniformity of place is greatly to be desired; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we recommend that at the first meeting after the district stewards have met and made their apportionment among the several charges, a committee shall be appointed whose duty it shall be,

1. To apportion the whole amount of the collections among the individual members according to their several ability, and, second, to collect the same as far as practicable in weekly, monthly or quarterly payments.

2. To report the money so collected at each meeting of the Church Conference.

Provided that nothing in this resolution shall be interpreted to mean that, in case this plan should fail to realize the several assessments, the pastors shall be relieved of further effort to raise the same.

BROKEN DOWN

—by disease is the natural result if you allow your liver to become inactive, your blood impure, and your system run down.

The germs of Consumption, Grip, or Malaria, wait for this time of weakness—this is their opportunity.

If you rouse the liver to activity, so it will throw off these germs, purify the blood so there will be no weak spots; build up healthy weight where there is a falling off, you will rest secure from disease, for you'll be germ-proof.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery does this as nothing else can. That's the reason it can be guaranteed. In convalescence from pneumonia, fevers, or other wasting diseases, it's an appetizing, restorative tonic to build up needed flesh and strength.

HOME CIRCLE.

GIANT AND DWARF.

BY WILLIAM ALLEN BUTLER.

As on through life's journey we go day by day,
There are two whom we meet, at each turn of the way,
To help or to hinder, to bless or to ban—
And the names of the two are, "I Can't" and "I can."

"I Can't" is a dwarf, a poor, pale, puny imp,
His eyes are half blind, and his walk is a limp;
He stumbles and falls, or lies writhing with fear,
Though dangers are distant and succor is near.

"I Can" is a giant, unbending he stands;
There is strength in his arms and skill in his hands!
He asks for no favors; he wants but a share
Where labor is honest and wages are fair.

"I Can't" is a sluggard, too lazy to work;
From duty he shrinks, every task he will shirk;
No bread on his board and no meal in his bag;
His house is a ruin, his coat is a rag.

"I Can" is a worker; he tills the broad fields,
And digs from the earth all the wealth which it yields;
The hum of his spindle begins with the light,
And the fires of his furges are blazing all night

"I Can't" is a coward, half fainting with fright;
At the first thought of peril he slinks out of sight.
Skulks and hides till the noise of the battle is past,
Or sells his best friend, and turns traitor at last.

"I Can" is a hero, the first in the field;
Though others may falter, he never will yield;
He makes the long marches, he deals the last blow,
His charge is the whirlwind that scatters the foe.

How grandly and nobly he stands to his trust,
When, roused at the call of a course that is just,
He wields his strong will to the valor of youth,
And writes on his banner the watchword of Truth!

Then up and be doing! The day is not long;
Turn fear to the winds, be patient and strong!
Stand fast in your place, act your part like a man,
And, when duty calls, answer promptly, "I can."

Help of Home Work Needed in Sunday-School Work.

A Sunday-school teacher said to a mother, a member in good and regular standing in an orthodox church, "Does Charlie (her little boy of ten years) stay in church with you?" "Oh no," was the reply, "Charlie feels as if he had as much as he can do to attend Sunday-school regularly." When opportunity offered, the lady questioned Charlie as to the preparation of his lesson, did his mother help him with it, did he read or study it over at home, or learn the golden text? No, Charlie's knowledge of the lesson was obtained only in the brief half hour devoted to it in the Sunday-school among a class of six or eight fidgetty little fellows like himself. Was it to be wondered at that he was found very, very ignorant of that Bible lesson and of many that preceded it, although he had been a punctual scholar?

Said a good old colored man to the writer when asked if his children went to day school, "Yes, but I educate them." "How is that?" "I give them time to get their lessons, and, when I can, I sit by them evenings, to see that they study. I go with them to the Sunday-school, too. I have no learning to teach, but I want to know that my children behave properly and attend to the instructions of their teachers." If parents, as a rule, took some of this oversight of their children's Sunday-school studies, how much more effectual would be the work of the teacher, and how much greater the intellectual and spiritual perception on the part of the scholar in these beautiful Bible lessons that are being expounded so well from Sunday to Sunday in our church schools. Fathers and mothers, do not read these few thoughts carelessly and forget them as soon as read, but come, in the interest of your children's immortal welfare, to the help of the teacher to whose care your child is given for an hour each Sabbath day. Read with them at family worship or privately the week-day readings, help them to commit the question of the catechism and a few verses of Scripture, and thus prepare them to take an intelligent interest in the exercises of the school. Sunday-school teachers are often surprised at the ignorance of both historical and doctrinal subjects of some scholars in their classes, who come to them from homes of intelligence, from parents who are members, too, in good and regular standing, of orthodox churches. When scholars have heard the Bible read in their homes, or have been told Bible history from their babyhood, they become leaders in the classes where there are necessarily many members whose parents are ignorant and unqualified to help their children. A mother of a large family told me of her early experiences in trying to train her children for God. "When my children were small," she said, "I had sometimes very poor help in my kitchen, sometimes none at all, yet I always tried on Saturday to plan and work for the day of rest; after tea I selected the different suits or garments to be worn by the children, and placed them where they could be easily reached. Then I gathered my children around the table and read with them the Sunday-school lessons or heard such verses as had been committed." Now this mother was the meekest of women; she is living yet and is blessed with a family of Christian sons and daughters, and if she were to see her words in print she might chide me gently, but I can not withhold the recipe to make good scholars for the Sunday-school and, in time, good earnest workers in our Christian churches.—T. S., in Christian Intelligencer.

A Temperance Object Lesson.

"I was sitting at my breakfast table one Sabbath morning, when I was called to the door by a ring of the bell. There stood a boy about fourteen years of age, poorly clad, but tidied up as best he could. He was leaning upon crutches, one leg was off at the knee. In a voice trembling with emotion, and tears coursing down his manly cheeks, he said: 'Mr. Hoagland, I am Freddy Brown. I have come to see if you will go to the jail and talk and pray with my father; he is to be hung to-morrow for the murder of my mother. My father was a good man, but whisky did it. I have three little sisters younger than myself; we are very, very poor; we have no friends. We live in a back alley in a dark and dingy room. I do the best I can to support my sisters by selling papers, blacking boots, and odd jobs; but Mr. Hoagland, we are awfully poor. Will you come and be with us when father's body is brought home? The governor says we may have his body after he is hung.' I was deeply moved to pity. I promised and made haste to the jail, where I found his father. He acknowledged that he must have murdered his wife, for the circumstances pointed that way, but he had not the slightest remembrance of the deed. He said he was crazed with drink, or he never would have committed the crime. He said, 'My wife was a good woman, and faithful mother to my little children. Never did I dream that my hand could be guilty of such a crime.' The man could face the penalty of the law bravely for his deed; but he broke down and cried as if his heart would break when he thought of leaving his children in a destitute and friendless condition. I read and prayed with him, and left him to his fate. The next morning I made my way to the miserable quarters of those children. I found three little girls upon a bed of straw in one corner of the room. They were clad in rags. They were beautiful girls, had they had the proper care. They were expecting the body of their dead father, and between their cries and their sobs they would say, 'Papa was good, but whisky did it.' In a little time two strong officers came bearing the body of the dead father in a rude pine box; they sat it down on two rickety stools. The cries of the children were so heart-rending that they could not endure it and made haste out of the room, leaving me alone with this terrible scene. In a moment the manly boy nerved himself, and said, 'Come, sisters, kiss papa's face before it is cold.' They gathered about his face, smoothed it with kisses, and between their sobs they cried out, 'Papa was good, but whisky did it.' 'Papa was good, but whisky did it.' I raised my heart to God, and said, 'O God, did I fight to save a country that would derive a revenue from a traffic that would make one scene like this possible?' In my heart I said, 'In the whole history of this accursed traffic there has not been enough revenue derived to pay for one such scene as this—the wife and mother murdered, the father hung, the children outraged, a home destroyed.'"—Mrs. Gougar.

GRANDMA'S CORNER.

BY AUGUSTA MOORE.

We'll make "a corner," but not in wheat—
A corner for grandma, a cosy seat,
Away from all doors and winds that blow,
Giving dear grandma the headache so.

We will have it warm, we will have it bright—
Eyes dim with years need unclouded light;
O! access easy in all, but where
The household rush shall not jar her chair.

We would let her choose where the spot shall be,
But too unselfish and meek is she;
I really believe she would choose bare floor,
And crowd herself back by the cellar door.

No, no, Miss Grandma, 'twill never do
To leave your comforts and rights to you;
Your chair shall be covered and soft; your feet
Shall rest on a "cricket," all bright and neat.

You shall sit, and out of the window gaze,
Or run in as we work by the hearth-fire's blaze;
You shall work or be idle, do just as you will—
Hold baby, or not, when he's gentle and still.

The place in this house that is snuggest and best
Is the place we have chosen for dear grandma's rest.

"Why?" Grandma dear, don't you ask us why?
Look at our mother with tearful eye,
Smiling upon you in love untold,
And gratitude not to be purchased with gold.

Where had we been, I would like to know,
If grandmother had not so long ago—
When grandpa was far on the stormy main—
Feeble and lonely and often in pain,
So faithfully tended our mother dear
Through years of hardship and little cheer?

Run dear old diamond! We understand
The knots and kinks in this little hand;
Indoors and outdoors, and early and late,
You toiled for the sake of your toiling mate—
For the sake of the children you loved so well—
And now, like a queen, you shall with them dwell.

We all are your subjects, with reverent love,
Delighted to serve you our homage to prove;
Your corner the throne-room, your chair is the throne;
Your court is a gay one, your children your own,
And your children's children, who round your chair
All bless you, and honor your silver hair.

Learned a Business.

A gentleman who had induced a large publishing house to take his son as boy into its employ at a moderate rate of pay, not long since, was especially anxious in his request that the young man should be made to work and learn the business.

This instruction was needless, as although modern fashion has done away with much of the janitor and porterage work of old times, yet the young man found the selection of stock for orders, packing the same, entering, charging ditto and occasional errands kept him actively employed for about ten hours a day, with an hour out for dinner.

At the end of three weeks' time he failed to put in an appearance, but the father walked in one morning with the information that John would not return to the position.

"Why not?" asked the publisher.

"Well, John has to have his breakfast at half-past seven every morning to get here, and then he is not used to carrying bundles, and sometimes he's been sent with books right up to the houses of people we know socially. My son hasn't been brought up that way, and I guess I won't have him learn this business."

He did not, and what's more, has never learned any other business.

Now let us look at another actual picture, that of the son of a wealthy mill owner desiring to become a manager of the mill.

"But that is impossible," said the father, "unless you practically learn the business."

"That is what I would like to do," said the son.

"But to become a superintendent or manager we prefer a man who has risen from the ranks and understands the mechanical department and the ways of employees."

"Let me begin in the ranks, then," replied the young man.

To this the father assented, stipulating that no favor should be shown the son, but he should actually begin the work at regular labor in the mechanical department.

Not only was this done, but the young man went and boarded in the manufacturing town at a workman's boarding house, and went in and out of the factory at bell call. In three years he was foreman of one of the departments, and a former class-mate and well-known society man, calling there upon him, was surprised at meeting a stalwart fellow in blue overalls, with hands so soiled with machinery oil as to prevent the conventional handshake.

But this young man persevered, made and paid his own way himself, and his father concluded it would not injure his future prospects. Judging from the fact that he is now manager of mills (not his father's) at a salary of ten thousand a year, and with ability to command even better compensation and partnership is evidence that "learning a business," even by a man with a good education and a rich father, pays a good return, both in money and manly independence. —Commercial Bulletin.

A Word to the Elderly.

Among all the housekeeper women, young, bright, active, sober, middle-aged, earnest, benevolent, and spiritual, there must always be some who are getting past the center of life's stream and who are looking longingly at the quiet waters beyond the boiling, eddying, wildly hurrying tide against which they have for years bravely battled. Dear women, growing old, don't imagine that, because you are fifty, sixty, or even seventy, that now your rowing days are over, and you may complacently rest on your oars. How many women lose what brightness there is for the evening of life—and there is a brightness peculiar to every period of one's existence—by giving up. They give up their aims after mental improvement, their pleasurable pursuits of art, fancy work, or reading poetry, fearful lest such things may not comport with their self-made standard of quiet, idle, selfish elderliness, a state into which a natural inclination invites them to drop themselves. They give up the missionary society work, the Sabbath-school, and the temperance work with easy good-nature, hiding themselves under the cloak of age, which they believe will piously repel every conscience thrust, every protest.

There are old ladies who keep up at seventy-five the pleasurable things which they loved in earlier years, dress prettily, do fancy stitches, laugh and chat with girls, attend every good philanthrophic gathering, and have their hearts fresh and young after the hardening, wearing things behind them. Don't "give up" until Providence shows plainly that you must, for of all nice things here below a young old woman is the nicest.—Exchange.

Reading

If young people only knew the value of their youth! A half hour each day steadily given to the vanquishing of some real books in history, science and literature, is three hours a week, is more than twelve hours a month, is more than twelve solid days of twenty-four hours each year. What can not the busiest man accomplish by such seizures of the fragments of time? O, if the young people only knew the culture possible for them by such simple means! And for evermore it is the man who knows who gets to be the man who does, and to whom the chance for doing comes. Merely frittering newspaper and novel reading—a youthhood only devoted to that—how pitiably sad! No ship drifts into harbor. No young person drifts into an achieving manhood or womanhood.—Wayland Hoyt, D. D.

Spurgeon says: When a man gets to cutting down sin, paring down depravity, and making little of future punishment, let him no longer preach to you. Some modern divines whittle away the gospel to the small end of nothing. They make our divine Lord to be a sort of blessed nobody; they bring down salvation to mere salvability, make certainties into probabilities, and treat verities as mere opinions. When you see a preacher making the gospel small by degrees and miserably less, till there is not enough of it left to make soup for a sick grasshopper, get you gone. . . . As for me I believe in the colossal; a need deep as hell, and grace as high as heaven. I believe in a pit that is bottomless and a heaven that is topless. I believe in an infinite God and infinite atonement, infinite love and mercy; an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure, of which the substance and the reality is an infinite Christ.

Your dealer in lamp-chimneys—what does he get for you?

You can't be an expert in chimneys; but this you can do. Insist on Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass" whichever shape you require. They are right, in all those ways; and they do not break from heat, not one in a hundred.

Be willing to pay a nickel more for them.

REAMES.—J. W. REAMES was born in 1841, and died on Oct. 29 1893. For twenty-five years Bro Reames had been a faithful and consistent member of the Methodist Church in Baton Rouge. He joined the church in the year 1867 after a sermon preached by Bishop J. O. Keener, then presiding elder of the New Orleans district. Ever afterward he faithfully kept his vows and developed into a bright Christian "who kept himself unspotted from the world." In the last two years of his career he proved his Christian patience and heroic endurance upon a bed of languishing disease. In the long nights and weary days of the twenty-three months no one heard him complain or murmur. Many seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord were experienced around his bedside.

His neighbors often gathered at his bedside, and there spiritual strength was renewed by the songs, the prayers, the words of faith from his calm spirit. Messages were sent to distant friends, exhortations given to unconverted neighbors, and promises to meet him in heaven were extorted. He would bid me farewell, saying, "Bro. Keener, I will be gone when you come again, but you know where to find me." The songs of Zion were especially comforting, and filled his heart with rejoicing. He left many testimonies as to his abiding faith, and then prayed for his release, longing to be with his Savior. We know where he is, and by God's grace expect to meet him among the saints in light. S. S. K.

BYNUM.—JOHN F. BYNUM was born in Rienzi, Miss., March 21, 1866; married Miss Lulu Clark, of Shannon, Miss., Jan. 1, 1890; was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in Aberdeen, April 27 1890; admitted to the practice of law in the same city, Aug. 27 1892. While attending the University of Virginia as a law student he was attacked of fever, which resulted in his death, Aug. 13, 1893. His educational facilities were excellent. His mother taught him the "Scriptures from his youth up," and impressed upon his mind the importance of being a Christian. His young wife devoted all her talents to his happiness and the development of his beautiful life. His professor at the University of Virginia says: "He made upon me a deep impression of his merit as a gentleman and a student." A prominent lawyer who assisted in his examination says: "He stood one of the best examinations ever witnessed at the legal bar of Aberdeen." A distinguished officer of the United States court, with whom he was associated in office, says: "He was noble, true, pure, gentle and perfectly honorable." Best of all, he was a Christian. He was soundly converted, loyal to his church, faithful to his pastor, and always on the right side of all moral questions. The genuineness and beauty of his Christian experience was exhibited best during his last illness. He prayed much and rejoiced in conscious salvation.

The parting benediction he left with his heart-broken wife were these words: "Lulu, the Lord has blessed me. He has forgiven all my sins, and every day I will be watching and waiting for you." When his remains were brought to his childhood home at Rienzi, Miss., and we saw the great crowds of people who attended his funeral we could say truthfully that he was loved by all who knew him.

WILKINSON.—Died, at her residence, in Jefferson county, Miss., Sept. 26, 1893 Mrs. SALLIE E. WILKINSON, aged fifty-five years seven months and eighteen days.

At the age of twenty-five years the subject of the sketch united with the church and lived a consistent Christian life. Several years after her profession of religion she married, and faithfully executed the duties belonging to her as wife and mother. Every day of her sweet home life ministered to her husband and children whom she blessed by her presence. She died in the triumphs of the gospel, and was followed to the grave by a large concourse of loving friends. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord!"

A FRIEND.

BELL.—The subject of this sketch—SUDIE BELL—was born March 3, 1873; joined the Methodist Church in the Summer of 1881 converted at the age of thirteen years. She was happily married to Isaac Bell, Jan. 5, 1893, and departed this life in October, 1893.

Sudie was a dutiful child and a good wife. She was all her husband could desire her to be, and a sweet-spirited Christian. She died in the full assurance of faith. Many were the friends who came for miles to bid her good-by and receive her last blessing.

May God bless her afflicted husband and parents! Her former pastor,

J. F. ROBINSON.

YOUNG.—Whereas, The members of the Louisiana Avenue Sabbath-school have been called to mourn the loss of one of their most beloved teachers, Miss LUCY E YOUNG, one whose faithfulness and gentle manners have endeared her to superintendent, teachers and scholars alike.

Resolved, That we will emulate her example in piety and gentleness.

Resolved, That in her life we have a bright example of consecrated service to the Savior, whom she loved and for whom she labored patiently. As a daughter she was gentle, tender and attentive; as a sister, loving and devoted; as a laborer in the Master's vineyard she was modest, yet very earnest, patient and loving. Her quiet spirit was full of devoted love. Truly our loss is great.

Resolved, That while the members of the Louisiana Avenue Sunday-school will miss the gentle presence of our member and co-laborer, oh! so sadly, yet we live in humble submission to His divine will, "who doeth all things well," and pray that the fragrance of her life may infuse its sweetness into the lives of relatives and friends, and enable us to say with the song on our lips, "We shall meet one another again."

Resolved, That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to her bereaved family and friends, and pray that God may sanctify this affliction to their good.

Resolved, That these resolutions be made part of the Minutes, one copy sent to the family, and one to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

PIERCE.—Died in Sabine parish, La., Oct. 8, 1893, Rev. WM F PIERCE, son of Stewart and Martha Pierce. He was born Feb. 4 1820 in Orangeburgh district, S. C. His parents moved and settled in Lowndes county, Ala., when he was quite young, where he was left an orphan when in his teens. In early manhood he came to Copiah county, Miss. In 1844 he was happily married to Miss Rachel Heuington, a lady noted for piety. Soon after his marriage he professed religion and joined the M. E. Church, South. He soon felt that he was called to the ministry. We do not know the exact date of his license, but he was a faithful minister for thirty-three years. He was twice married. To the first union five sons and four daughters were given. The second marriage was to Mrs. Harriet Russell. To this marriage were given six sons and two daughters. Two of them were waiting for him at the beautiful gate. He was ordained deacon by Bishop Kavanaugh at Hazlehurst, Miss., in 1869. He moved to Louisiana in 1852, and settled in Sabine parish, where he resided till death.

The writer visited Bro. Pierce in his last sickness and ever found him ready to talk of the goodness of God. While he suffered much in body, we believe his soul was happy. Bro Pierce was a useful man. He has gone to reap his reward in the land of the blest. May the Lord bless the bereaved ones!

MCCORMICK.—Dr. F. M. MCCORMICK was born in Jasper county, Miss., Nov. 27 1837. His father came to Union parish, La., in 1849. The Doctor spent his school days mostly in Mississippi and Louisiana, and was also a student at the Franklort Military Institute of Kentucky. In 1861 he entered the Confederate service. He had, previous to his enlistment, studied medicine, and during the later part of the war he was detailed to hospital duty; but he was in several important engagements with the Army of Tennessee. After the war he resumed the study of medicine, and entered the State Medical University, at New Orleans, La., from which he graduated in 1869. He practiced successfully in Union parish and in Vernon and Monroe, La., and moved to Ruston in 1885, where he died on June 18 1893.

He was married in 1870 to Miss Leonora C. Sholars. His wife and two daughters survive. He was devoted to his family, who in return loved him with a deathless devotion. For many years he was a member of the Methodist Church, and greatly devoted to all its interests. He never was so happy as when ministers of the gospel made his house their home. He had his faults; but his numerous amiable qualities far overbalanced his unamiable ones. A noble man has fallen.

ONE WHO LOVED HIM.

SMITH.—EVA CATTIE SMITH, infant daughter of Mr. J. F. and Mrs. Susie Smith, was born May 3, 1893 and departed this life Dec. 17 1893.

Little Eva was a sweet little babe, and was greatly loved and cherished by all who knew her. She was from birth a very delicate, little, but beautiful baby. It seemed so hard to give little Eva up. But God knows best. She has gone to Him who has said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." Little Eva was the joy of the home, but now home is desolated. Her cousin, Respect your minister. He is devoting his life to your good. Few, if any, men are in the pulpit for the loaves and fishes. The good man may have weaknesses. So have you. He may make mistakes. So do you. His voice may be cracked, and he may have eccentricities. What of that? Others have their eccentricities. He is God's servant. He has given up worldly prospects. He has assumed heavier burdens than you know. Respect him. He deserves it. —Churchman.

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Hon. Chas. T. O'Ferrall was inaugurated governor of Virginia, on Jan. 1, with great pomp and ceremony.

Among the measures likely to be shortly brought to the attention of Congress is Mr. Hatch's bill dealing with trading in farm products for future delivery.

The claims of Yale as a national university have been strengthened during the last year. There are present in Yale students from twenty-seven States and six foreign countries.

A Chicago jury has brought in a verdict of guilty against Prendergast, the murderer of Mayor Carter Harrison, of that city, and found him guilty of murder in the first degree, and assessed the penalty at death by hanging.

The Rev Father Mahoney, of Brooklyn, said on Sunday: 'Never in all my experience has Brooklyn been in such a condition as at present. Hundreds of families are starving, and, unless relief comes, and that speedily, the results will be appalling to contemplate. I have seen strong men, steady and industrious, actually begging for bread to feed their starving children."

The major general commanding the United States Army has approved that part of the new tactics which provides for officers giving commands under certain circumstances by whistles instead of by word of month. Whistles for the purpose are to be mounted on the hilts of the officers' swords, and orders have been issued to the armories to make the alterations in the swords as fast as possible.

The State of South Carolina, says the New Orleans Picayune, seems to have solved the penitentiary problem more satisfactorily than almost any other State. The late report of the superintendent shows that the profits for the past year exceed the expenses by nearly $24 000, and that the penitentiary owns a fine lot of cattle and hogs, and is able to hold all its cotton for the best prices, not yet having sold a pound. Many improvements have been made and paid for.

Seven happy men left Jackson, Miss., on Dec. 23, at midnight, on the Illinois Central train to have Christmas dinners with their wives and children with whom they have not taken a meal since last May. They were the white cappers whos eearly pardon was predicted. George Shields, of Copiah, was not pardoned because the published petition as requested by the constitution had not yet been received. Gov. Stone went to the prison and made them a talk He told them they owe it to themselves, their families, to their country and the State, to him and Judge Chrisman, who had asked that they be pardoned, to become exemplary citizens. They were visibly touched by the governor's clemency, and promised to make atonement for the past.

Mr. W. L. Jackson, of Adams county, by his attorney, Mr. Wade R. Young, of Vicksburg, is about to sue the United States in the Court of Claims to recover compensation for his crops and lands and other property, destroyed by the overflows of the past four years, on the ground that the effect of the government works for the improvement of the river has been to cause an increased flood level of at least four feet and to subject to annual overflow his lands which would otherwise have been exempt. It is intended to prosecute a test case to the Supreme Court to compel the United States either to protect the lands from overflow or to pay their value, and all having similar interests can have the benefit of the suit by contributing fifty dollars each to the payment of the costs.

FOREIGN.

The police raided anarchist headquarters in many of the towns of France on Jan. 1.

The Rt Hon. Wm. E. Gladstone, who was born Dec. 29, 1809, celebrated his birthday last week by working hard in his study and by going to the House of Commons in the afternoon. The London Times suggests that it is time for him to retire.

It is conceded by many close observers in Rio that neither party to the struggle has gained an inch in the last month, and that hostilities are likely to cease only when the rebels have completely exhausted their powder and shot. Of both these the government has large supplies, but the insurgents have little left, it is thought. The people generally are most anxious for peace, and await impatiently the March elections.

The relations between the Pope and the Czar are very much strained. In July last the Pope wrote the Czar an autograph letter, in which he complained of the persecutions against Roman Catholics in Poland. It was written in a very sharp key. Leo XIII. declared to the Czar that if the persecutions did not cease he would be compelled to protest solemnly in the face of Europe against the intolerance of the Czar.

The Manchester Ship Canal was formally opened on Jan. 1. The weather was brilliant and the occasion was made notable in every way possible. There was much rejoicing in the city and all along the line of the canal. The great ship canal from Eastham to Manchester is now an accomplished fact, and the town of Manchester, situated about forty miles from the seaboard, can be reached by sea from New York about ten hours after arriving at Liverpool.

North Mississippi Conference.

RECENT SESSION.

MR. EDITOR: I am sure your presence at our North Mississippi Conference gave the brethren a favorable impression of the new editor. I do not know that you were as favorably impressed with the Conference. The rush and hurry which characterized every session was something new to most of us, especially as it continued from day to day. The dispatch with which the business was driven seemed to exclude the spirit of prayer. The dignity of a body of Christian ministers was disturbed, so much so that at times there seemed to be a yerging on demoralization. The presence of the rowel and the goad kept the idea of finishing up so, that the Bishop could go so prominently before each mind that discussion and inquiry yielded to the hurry of the drive.

An emphatic notice given the presiding elders to prepare their appointments before meeting in council was something new and not a little strange to some of us on the outside of such things, and soon the conviction began to obtain that the same rowel which drove the committees and open Conference along was being applied to the secret council. As matters progressed a conviction obtained in like ratio with a conviction in regard to other matters that there was too much hurry and speed for devout prayer in regard to the stationing preachers—a matter which touches them and the people more nearly and tenderly than any other matter pertaining to Conference work.

The memorial service had its interest and profit to many, but the corner into which it was crowded detracted very materially from that interest. I think it no exaggeration to say that there were more than two hundred persons in the house who were not in true sympathy with the reading of the memorials or the remarks made upon the lives of the deceased brethren. This memorial service, together with the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, had been fixed by resolution of the Conference for regular sessions of the Conference in the week.

Before the final adjournment I heard something like this question: Why take one of the most important out of the days of the North Mississippi Conference and give a less important to a Carolina Conference? J. D. NEWSOM.

The Old Home.

After several years' absence, it affords one a great deal of pleasure to visit the old home. This pleasure I am enjoying now. The town presents a more beautiful appearance, many of the old wooden buildings having been superseded by large, elegant brick structures Many of my old friends have passed over the river. Some, like myself, have chosen other places of abode, while a few remain. They that remain meet me with pleasant words and smiling faces, as though they had never forgotten me. I had the pleasure of listening to a sermon, last Sunday, preached by an Associate Reformed Presbyterian. While listening to the sermon, I sat near the place where little more than twelve years ago I was converted. How sacred seemed the place!

I would like to say something about the Associate Reformed Presbyterians, or seceders, as they are better known. They are as solid as a rock. Rain or shine, cold or hot, go to church they must, and go to church they will. They not only go to church under all circumstances, but pay for the privilege. If it takes a milk cow, the preacher must be paid. If the Methodists, as a whole, had such undying love for their church, we would double our membership before the close of this century.

Many of the reminiscences of the past are sweet. Here I was brought up. Here I was converted and joined the church, was baptized and received by the man whom I heard preach last Sunday.

Monticello has been considered a hard place, but it has produced some preachers. Whether any of us ever get to be Bishop or not, we can preach the gospel, bring sinners to Christ, and get to heaven at last. This pleasure will soon end, and I will return to Louisiana and begin my work.

"Disfigured For Life"

Is the despairing cry of thousands afflicted with Unsightly skin diseases.
Do you realize what this disfiguration means to sensitive souls?
It means isolation, seclusion.
It is a bar to social and business success.
Do you wonder that despair seizes upon these sufferers when Doctors fail,
Standard remedies fail,
And nostrums prove worse than useless?
Skin diseases are most obstinate to cure or even relieve.
It is an easy matter to claim to cure them, but quite another thing to do so.
CUTICURA
Has earned the right to be called the Skin Specific—
Because for years it has met with most remarkable success.
There are cases that it cannot cure, but they are few indeed.
It is no long-drawn-out expensive experiment.
25c. invested in a cake of
CUTICURA SOAP
Will prove more convincing than a page of advertisement.
In short,
CUTICURA WORKS WONDERS.
And its cures are simply marvelous.
Now is the time
To take CUTICURA.
CURES made in WINTER
Are permanent.

Sold everywhere. Price, CUTICURA, 50c.; SOAP, 25c.; RESOLVENT, $1. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston.
"All about the Skin, Scalp, and Hair," mailed free.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Some "Pass-Ages."

The abuse of Scripture in misquoting it for selfish, disobedient, or heretical uses is common. Sometimes this species of ledgerdemain is so clever as to deceive many; sometimes so specious as to appear only amusing. There is hardly an exigency of any sort arising in life, or an event however trivial, that might not have a garbled text of Scripture fitted to it: The Tennessee Methodist is responsible for the following racy story, the details of which point a two-fold moral, each of whose aspects we leave the reader to discover for himself. We have heard sermons, the proof-texts of which were as little applicable in logic to the subject matter as these:

A certain railroad is said to have arranged the following pairs of verses on cards to be delivered to applicants for passes:

"Thou shalt not pass."—Num. xx, 18.

"Suffer not a man to pass."—Judges iii, 28.

"The wicked shall no more pass."—Nahum i, 15.

"None shall ever pass."—Isaiah xxxiv, 10.

"This generation shall not pass."—Mark xiii, 30.

"Though they roar, yet can they not pass."—Jeremiah v, 22.

"So he paid the fare and went."—Jonah i, 3.—Pacific Advocate.

NOT KNOWING.

I know not what will befall me!
God hangs a mist o'er my eyes;
And thus at each step of my onward path
He makes new scenes arise,
And every joy he sends me comes
As a sweet and glad surprise.

I see not a step before me,
As I tread on, another year;
But the past is still in God's keeping,
The future his mercy shall clear,
And what looks dark in the distance
May brighten as I draw near.

For perhaps the dreaded future
Is less bitter than I think;
And the Lord may sweeten the waters
Before I stoop to drink;
Or, if Marah must be Marah,
He will stand beside its brink.

It may be he keeps, waiting
For the coming of my feet,
Some gift of such rare blessedness,
Some joy so strangely sweet,
That my lips can only tremble
With thanks I can not speak.

Oh, restful, blissful ignorance!
'Tis blessed not to know;
It stills me in those mighty arms
Which will not let me go,
And sweetly hushes my soul to rest
On the bosom which loves me so!

So I go on, not knowing;
I would not if I might;
I would rather walk in the dark with God
Than go alone in the light.
I would rather walk with him by faith
Than walk alone by sight.

My heart shrinks back from trials
Which the future may disclose,
Yet I never had a sorrow
But what the dear Lord chose;
So I send the coming tears back,
With the whispered words, "He knows."

Strong Meat.

What mighty theological discussions we need to have thirty-five and forty years ago! They discussed deep subjects then—fore-knowledge, fore-ordination, election, reprobation, effectual calling, apostasy, final perseverance, the atonement, limited or unlimited, imputed sin and imputed righteousness. In the pulpit, in the homes, along the way, in public and in private, by day and by night, these discussions went on, sometimes in a friendly way and sometimes with more or less heat. Friction always generates heat, even the friction of blocks of ice. This discussion was not an unmitigated evil. There was much good in it. It developed strong men and strong women on both sides of the controversy. It tended to keep up a study of the Scriptures; possibly not the best study, but better than no study at all, and it led to the reading of good books, if they were controversial. There were giants in those days—mighty men—men of valor. There were giants among the preachers and among the laymen and the lay-women. They grew strong by wrestling with great questions. It mattered little which side they were on, they grew all the same. Many uneducated and uncultivated men came to be very great men, very strong men. They thought deeply on great subjects, and many of them came to think and speak with great clearness and force. These men and women grew strong in character as well as mind—they were strong spiritually, and grew in the love as they grew in the knowledge of God. Not all of them, perhaps, but many of them; possibly most of them. Some of the best and dearest of friends were the widest apart on these great questions. They were of one heart, though of different and differing heads. The preachers and the people now ought to think on great themes; knotty subjects if they will. This exercise will be profitable now, as it was in the past, and ever will be. It is utterly impossible for the human mind to think deeply on divine things without being profited thereby. It belittles, dwarfs the mind not to think deeply on worthy subjects. Surface work, surface thought, is unworthy of the human intellect. God made the mind capable of digging deep, and the deeper it digs the deeper it wants to go. The mind God has given us to dig in is very deep—deep as God himself. We may let in our picks and turn up nuggets never unearthed before. They are there in abundance if we will only dig for them. There is more below than we have discovered above. The subject of the atonement is a theme for the thought of the ages—aye, for all eternity. We will never fathom it in this world, nor in the world to come. The deeper we think and believe into it, the deeper, higher, broader and longer it grows. This subject occupies the thought and stirs the curiosity of the angels of God. The atonement contains the best thought of God. It reveals the nature of God, the heart of God. Sin seen at the cross, in the light of what it cost, becomes an awful and hateful thing. It cost the life of the sinless Son of God. It is not a small thing, a foible, a fault, but an awful thing, soul-destroying, God-dishonoring. It may be forgiven, but only in one way, on one condition. The power and prerogative of forgiveness lie within the limits of the atonement. God is shut up to this way of saving, and man is shut up to this way of being saved. There was no other way possible. It was not possible for this cup to pass. It was the will of the Father that the Son drink it, much as it pained the Father's heart to lay the cross on his well-beloved and only Son. What an agony and conflict of love when the divine heart sacrificed an only Son to save a race at enmity with God! "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son;" "God commendeth his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners his Son died for us." A good man might sacrifice a son for a friend, but who but God would sacrifice his Son for his enemies? Here is a problem that puzzles the wisest head, and yet it thaws, and melts, and warms the hardest heart that considers it aright. The atonement gives such views of the justice and holiness of God as make us fear to sin. We fear to sin from fear of justice so exact, and we fear to sin from admiration of holiness so high. We fear to sin from fear of God and fear to sin from love of God. In the light of such love we lose all desire to sin. We keep his commandments because we love his law. His law is written in our hearts. We escape from hell and climb to heaven through the atonement of the Son of God. All religious thought, motion, hope, fear and love center here. It is God in Christ reconciling the world unto himself. He himself is already reconciled, but the world is not. This plan, this mighty scheme, was in the divine mind and heart from the beginning, or ever the earth was, before the foundations of the earth were laid. The atonement, as a divine provision, preceded the fall as a fact. It was not an after-thought, but a fore-thought of God. "We are redeemed with the precious blood of Christ, who verily was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world." "He was delivered into the hands of sinful men by the determinate counsel and fore-knowledge of God." He is alpha and omega, the beginning and the end.

GILDEROY.

The Gambling Evil.

AN APPEAL TO THE PEOPLE.

It is evident that the time has come when the friends of law, order and public morality throughout the Union should band themselves together for an organized resistance to the spread of the gambling evil. An abundance of facts and figures are at hand to prove that this evil has been rapidly increasing in this country in recent years, and that it has already reached a magnitude hardly conceivable to those who have not investigated the subject. It has corrupted State Legislatures, courts, juries and municipal governments, and defeated the ends of justice in countless ways. It has dictated the passage of laws drawn in its own interest, bribed the judiciary to render decisions favorable to its progress, and the police authorities of many cities to adopt a policy of inaction in regard to its existence. Backed by untold wealth and manipulated by the hands of shrewd and unscrupulous persons, it has invaded the spheres of political and commercial life, named its own candidates for office, and controlled the results of local, municipal and State elections. The gambling passion has brought ruin and disgrace to many trusted men in commercial circles, disaster to many large business interests, and diverted vast sums of money from the channels of honest and legitimate industry. Into the homes of the land the same passion has brought immeasurable shame, sorrow and misery through the crimes and misdeeds committed at its instigation.

THE GAMBLER IN POLITICS.

As an evidence of the enormous political power of the gambling interest, and its influence over courts, juries, Legislatures and municipal governments, we need only point to the history of the Louisiana Lottery, to the passage of the Ives Pool law in New York State, and to the more recent race track legislation in New Jersey. It is hardly necessary that we should recite here the long and bitter struggle with the Louisiana Lottery, ending finally in its partial subjection by the massing against it of the moral forces of the entire nation. In New Jersey, by the acts of the Legislature of 1893, the country was called upon to witness the shameful and humiliating spectacle of an old and once-honored commonwealth literally sold into the hands of a ring of gamblers. Surely a darker page of legislative history was never written than that recording the proceedings of the New Jersey Legislature of 1893. And what was made possible in New Jersey through the apathy and indifference of good citizens will become possible in other States unless a strong, united and persistent effort is made to resist the encroachments of the gambling vice. A law was passed by the Illinois Legislature last Winter legalizing pool selling on race-tracks, but it was afterwards declared unconstitutional by the State Supreme Court. An effort to pass a similar law was made in the Indiana Legislature at its last session. Laws legalizing certain forms of gambling now exist in New York, New Jersey, Kentucky, Missouri, California and other States, most of them passed in defiance of the expressed sentiments of the better class of citizens.

RACE-TRACK GAMBLING.

Of all forms of gambling now prevalent, that of the race-tracks and their adjuncts, the city pool-rooms, is undoubtedly the most formidable and the most dangerous. A volume would be needed to give the details in regard to the vast network of political, commercial, judicial and legislative accessories and alliances which go to the support and development of race-track gambling. It is estimated by a writer friendly to the race-track interests, in a current periodical, that "there can not be less than one hundred million dollars embarked in racing and enterprises dependent on it." The incomes of race-track owners are princely in the extreme, and the salaries paid by them to "starters" and other officials put to shame in their munificence the salaries paid to the judges of our highest courts and legislative bodies. The starter at the Guttenberg course receives $25,000 a year, and the common pay of starters and judges on other tracks is one hundred dollars per day. It is universally conceded that the race courses receive their chief income from gambling privileges, and that they could not exist without them. The "bookmakers," as a rule, pay the racing associations one hundred dollars a day for the privilege of doing business on the tracks, and the telegraph companies pay as high as fifteen hundred dollars a day for the privilege of sending news from the tracks to the pool-rooms. It needs no argument to prove that all the vast sums invested in race-courses and the vast incomes derived from them could not be if the interests involved were only those of honest and legitimate sport. The great race-courses of the country to-day are in very truth only a network of gambling concerns managed by gamblers in the interests of gamblers, under the false pretext of improving the breed of horses.

CRIME-BREEDERS.

As crime-breeders, we unhesitatingly affirm that the race-track gambling dens of the country excel any other agency of evil in existence, with the possible exception of the saloons. The Louisiana Lottery, with all its ramifications and its vast wealth and power, never constituted such a menace to public morality as the allied race-track interests. We have it on undoubted authority that over $2,898,000 was stolen in a single year recently by men who had lost the money "playing the races." The New York Times, of July 24, 1893, contained a column article under the heading, "Victims of the Race-Track," giving a long list of forgeries, embezzlements, and other crimes recently committed, all attributable to race-track gambling.

This is the testimony of the superintendent of police of New York City: "More young men have stood here at this desk confessing their first offense against law, and ascribing their downfall to their infatuation for pool-room gambling, than I would care to attempt to estimate. Actual experience has satisfied me that no form of gambling offers greater temptations to young men to take what is not theirs. As horse-racing is conducted now, it would be well for the community to stop racing altogether. We are sending men to prison right along on account of the race-gambling craze. Homes are being destroyed and the lives of young men blighted every day in this city for the same reason."

On the general subject of gambling, Mr. Chauncey M. Depew, president of the New York Central railroad, says: "A considerable proportion of failures in business, and ninety per cent. of the defalcations and thefts and ruin of youth among people who are employed in places of trust, are due directly to gambling. I have seen in my vast employment so much misery from the head of the family neglecting its support and squandering his earnings in the lottery or the policy shop, and promising young men led astray in a small way and finally becoming fugitives, or landing in the criminal dock, that I have come to believe that the community which licenses and tolerates public gambling can not have prosperity in business, religion in its churches, or morality among its people."

The amount of small speculation and larger stealings by bank clerks and others in position is much greater than is generally known. The fact is evident from the report of a guarantee company, which reports that in nineteen years it had insured the honesty of about 140,000 officials, of whom over 2,000 had defaulted. Considering the fact that the company is noted for its conservatism in taking risks, this shows a sad condition of affairs. The report of the company places the blame on the prevalence of gambling in its many forms, and states that most of the defalcations were made under sudden temptation and for small sums. "It seems remarkable," it says, "that the State Legislature or municipal authorities, whichever have the power, do not take steps to stop the numerous avenues, such as pool-selling, bucket shops, turf exchanges, and other openly permitted sources of inducement which are publicly held out to employees to engage in gambling—not infrequently with their employer's money." For other evidence in regard to the crimes and immoralities due to race-track gambling, pool-rooms and policy shops, we refer to the columns of such newspapers as the Herald, Tribune, Times, and Mail and Express, of New York; the daily press throughout New Jersey; the Traveller, of Boston; the Commercial, of Buffalo; the News-Record and other papers, of Chicago—all of which have devoted a large amount of space at various times in the past two or three years to exposing the character and methods of race-courses and other branches of the gambling business.

OTHER FORMS OF GAMBLING.

There are many other forms of the gambling evil on which we might dwell, such as policy gambling, widely extended and a special curse to the poor in many of our large cities; bucket shop gambling, a specially dangerous and formidable phase of the evil, because carried on in apparent conformity to certain commercial usages and under color of law; gambling with cards, roulette, faro and fortune wheels, gambling raffles and other games of chance, and in a score of other forms, some concededly criminal, and others in the guise of innocent amusement. It needs to be said, also, that the Louisiana Lottery and other concerns of its kind are still in existence, and doing a vast amount of evil in spite of restrictive laws. As has been well said, "The lottery snake has not been killed, but only scotched." There is grave danger that this form of gambling may be revived again in all its strength unless careful watch is kept and the evil is attacked at every possible opportunity.

In view of the facts thus recited, we appeal to all lovers of law, order and morality throughout the Union, to combine in a strenuous and uncompromising opposition to the gambling evil in its many forms. We recommend that organizations be formed wherever practicable, having for their especial object the repeal of gambling laws, the education of public sentiment with reference to the gambling evil, and the strict enforcement of such laws as may exist for the suppression of this vice. We appeal to the churches and all religious and reformatory agencies and organizations throughout the country to make the gambling evil an object of special consideration to the end of arousing men everywhere to a realization of its magnitude and enormity. We appeal to the press of the country, secular and religious, to throw its powerful and far-reaching influence against gambling practices in whatever form they may appear. We earnestly believe that if the moral forces of the country can be thus massed against this evil, it may, at least, be driven from the lodgment it has found in our Legislatures, in our courts, in our municipal governments, and in our statute books.

The Value of a Church Paper.

One of the strangest things in the world to us is that every preacher in the church is not profoundly concerned and actively and diligently employed in pushing the circulation of his church paper. So vital and intimate and essential to the highest success is a church paper in every church home that it seems to us that a pastor could find or feel no rest until by some means he had succeeded in placing his church paper in every family in his charge. We append below the words of Samuel B. Moore, as published in the Christian Standard, and every preacher is invited to read it:

At my own suggestion I wish to say a word for the benefit of both pastor and people. The heading of this brief article may look like the work or suggestion of an editor, but it is not. I have no pecuniary interest in any of our papers, and yet I have a very great interest in them. I am in a position to know something of the utility of a general circulation of good, healthful church literature.

My observation has been that brethren who take and read a good church paper are, as a rule, almost without exception, foremost in every good work. Families which are strangers to the literature of the church can not keep abreast of the religious progress of the time. This I regard as essential to a vigorous, aggressive Christianity.

A religious paper ought to be in every Christian home. And it ought to be regularly read by every member of that home who is able to read.

Congregations could render no greater service to the community than to see that every family of the church (if not of the community) has a church paper.

The head of the Christian household should as soon think of dispensing with almost anything else, as to think of retrenching by giving up his paper. It is not to be considered a luxury only, but a necessity. The man who begins to economize by leaving out of his calculations a religious paper is the poorest economist in the world.

For the foregoing, and the following reasons, take a good paper, brethren:

1. It keeps you posted on the work of the church at home and abroad.
2. It keeps you in sympathy with the church.
3. It helps you in your study of God's Word.
4. It gives you a broad conception of Christianity.
5. It sweetens and cheers home life.
6. It gives you a general knowledge of what is going on in the world.

These are only a few of the innumerable reasons which might be assigned. We have a periodical literature which will compare favorably with that of any religious denomination, and is a credit to any home.

If you want to be a bright, active, aggressive Christian, my brother, read your Bible and a good religious paper.

Unbelief in Foreign Missions.

"I don't believe in foreign missions." So said a good sister in one of our city charges recently to her pastor. So say many in city and country when missionary day rolls around; and so often has it been repeated that the expression has become stereotyped. Did those who utter these words ever think what such a declaration meant? Did they ever weigh their words in making such a statement? Let us see what it implies, coming from a Methodist, a follower of John Wesley, and a professor of the Christian religion:

1. It implies that Jesus did not mean what he said when he commanded his apostles and church to "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." That he was mistaken as to the need of the world for his salvation. That we are under no obligation to obey in this matter. That Paul, and others in his age, went beyond their obligation when they visited foreign lands to preach. That the Holy Ghost sent Paul and Barnabas on an unnecessary errand when he said, "Separate me Paul and Barnabas for the work whereunto I have called them." That Jesus did not die for, nor does he desire, the salvation of all men—especially those in the lands where foreign missionaries have gone. That he who thus speaks does not agree with Jesus, the Holy Spirit, or the early apostles.

2. It means that they see no necessity of giving the gracious blessings of the gospel, such as salvation from sin, the Bible, the Sabbath, the church and Sabbath-school, and a Christian civilization, to those who are without them. They would shut their eyes to the sufferings and wants of suffering woman in heathen lands. They would not look upon priest-ridden Mexico and Brazil, foot-bound and idolatrous China, with dark India and the islands of the sea. These may cry in vain in their anguish and darkness, "Come over into Macedonia and help us," but unbelief says, "I do not believe in foreign missions." These do not need, nor have they a right to, that gospel which will cure all their ills, will be a balm for their wounds, correct their evils, comfort them in their sorrows, and make them a happy Christian people.

3. It means that the policy of the Methodist Church—and that of all other Christian churches—is wrong in giving the gospel to the heathen world. Their judgment is put against the enlightened judgment of the Christian church at large, and of the best men and women in every church as to the need of sending the blessings of salvation abroad. It means that the Methodist Church is wrong on this question. That Young J. Allen, J. W. Lambuth, Royal, Reed, Anderson, Loehr, and others, with the godly women who have gone from American shores, were visionary, and went out on a useless task when they undertook to preach the gospel abroad, and carry its blessings to those who are without them.

4. "Don't believe in foreign missions?" Then never pray again the Lord's prayer, for in the petition, "Thy kingdom come," you have a prayer for the conversion of the world and the success of foreign missionary effort. No man should pray for that he does not believe in, or to which he does not give his money and effort. Then quit teaching this prayer to your children, for they should not be taught by their parents to pray for a cause in which their parents do not believe. Then, as a Methodist, quit bragging on your free salvation doctrine, which embraces all mankind. Then quit singing, "I'm glad salvation's free," and "Come, sinners, to the gospel feast." Then get a new Bible with all those passages left out which teach that the atonement is universal and reaches to all men; which invite all, Jew and Gentile, to come to the gospel feast; which declare "whosoever will, may come and take the water of life freely," and which give the church authority to "go teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

5. "Don't believe in foreign missions?" Why, the Lord Jesus was a foreign missionary, for

"With pitying eyes the Prince of Peace
Beheld our helpless grief;
He saw, and (O, amazing love!)
He ran to our relief."

He left heaven to bring salvation to this foreign world—this lost and ruined planet. The apostolic church was missionary in spirit, for Europe received the gospel at its hands. Foreign missionaries brought the gospel to America, and we are the beneficiaries of the missionary spirit. Foreign missions have Christianized Madagascar, the Sandwich Islands, the Fiji Islands, with many others, besides blessing and saving thousands in Mexico, South America, India, Burmah, Turkey, China and Japan.

"Don't believe in foreign missions!" Don't say that, brother—sister! Take it back. Reconsider—recant. It means too much. There is too much involved in it. Recall it before it goes on the wings of the wind. Don't let it go to record that a follower of John Wesley, a member of the grand old Methodist Church, a Christian professor, makes such a declaration. It sounds too harsh. It is too unsympathetic—too un-Christlike. For your own sake—for the sake of the millions who need the salvation you profess to have—for the sake of the church to which you belong—for Christ's sake—recall that cold, cheerless, unloving, hard declaration, "I don't believe in foreign missions."—C., in Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

JUST YOU AND I.

BY HARRIET FRANCENE CROCKER.

If you and I, my dear, should try
To do what we know is duty,
This world of ours, with its sun and showers,
Would blossom into beauty.
There'd be more joy without alloy,
There'd be much less of sighing,
If you and I, my dear, should try,
And never give up trying.

If you and I, when the heavy sky
Spills over with its tears, dear,
And the world looks sad and the times are bad,
And life a waste of years, dear—
If you and I, as I said, should try
To laugh and be right cheery,
Do you know 'twould prove that light and love
Could make the day less dreary?

If you and I, when we'd like to cry,
Should hum a bit of tune, dear,
And gayly smile—in a little while
The weather'd seem like June, dear.
If when we fret, with eyes fear-wet,
O'er some of the things that bother,
We'd pitch right in with a hearty vim
And help dear, tired mother.

O wouldn't it be a happier world,
And wouldn't it be worth living,
If more and more from our heart's full store
Of love we'd just be giving?
So, dear, let's try, just you and I,
And never give up, O never!
And life will be brighter and sad hearts lighter
Because of our endeavor.

FROM MATSUYAMA TO ASO VOLCANO.

The following, written for a Japanese newspaper last April, may prove interesting to you. Having a vacation of two weeks at that time, one of them was spent in this trip, the other with the Matsuyama District Conference, held at Oita.

A steamer coasting from Mitsugahama, Matsuyama's port, down Shikoku in the early Spring, affords the passengers fine views of wheat fields and burning mountain-tops. It is very pleasant, indeed, until night and a rough Bungo Nada (a stormy part of the sea) come. In order to get around the long-projecting Cape Misake, the vessel goes so far west that it touches at several points on Kiushiu. One of these, Oita, is a good starting-point for Aso. But, if there is a day to spare, it is well to stop at Beppu, for above this city rises the steam of 700 hot springs. This is one of the three famous hot water regions of Japan. There is a geyser that throws up water several feet every ten minutes, a lake of boiling water, the hotels have natural hot baths attached, and there are many free public baths.

The jinrikisha ride of an hour from Beppu to Oita is along the sea, looking far out upon which you may see the curling smoke of beautiful steamers and the sails of countless fishing boats.

Aso is near the center of Kiushiu, a little south of the road leading from Oita on the east coast to Kumamoto on the west. This road must have been constructed at great cost to the government. Before Meiji it was a path; now it is a highway. There are several tunnels, and often the way had to be cut in the rocky mountain bases along the river beds.

By starting from Oita at sunrise, and wasting no time, Sakanashi, a village at the base of Aso, may be reached by sunset. Tokeda, a town of 6,000, is about half way.

Our party, consisting of Messrs. Turner, Demaree, Wilson, Terashima, and myself, went to Tokeda in jinrikisha, and then took a seatless hack, excepting Mr. Demaree, who led the way on a bicycle. In the morning there were views of Oita river, Ufuyama, many terraced fields, and fine valleys, with numerous water-moved mills. One wooded mountain region was passed said to be frequented by wild monkeys, though at Tokeda, just beyond, we heard the sound of a steam engine. Our slow pace in the afternoon gave good opportunity to observe the beautiful clusters of cedars, the smoke rising from the volcano, and how the soil grew darker and darker as we neared Aso, which seems to have been the center of immense volcanic operations in a primeval age. Though the soil is rich, the population is comparatively sparse. We make a very long, steep descent, and arrive at Sakanashi. This and the village beyond lie in a valley supposed to be a part of the primeval volcano's crater. If the supposition is true, it is the largest crater in the world, and tells a story of vastness corresponding to the signs seen in the soil and surrounding country for many miles away.

The hack in the morning quickly takes you to the second village, from whence the remaining two miles are not suitable for a wheeled vehicle, though it would, for the most part, do for a horseman. We went on foot, quickly getting above the wooded base, and then passing over numerous conglomerated volcanic hills, with no vegetation, except grass and a few shrubs. As we drew near to the top, ice was visible in the clefts of the rocks; but we could get none, though thirsty. There is a peak of the mountain much higher than the peak which is a volcano, and upon it there was much snow. By and by the sound of roaring is heard, and the cone, composed of ashes and burnt rocks, is reached. But the ascent, which before had been gradual, is even here not steep. A quarter of a mile up this brings the traveler to the highest point, from which he may step down a few feet and be upon the level caldera. Scientists are not agreed as to the way in which these calderas are formed. Two small Shinto shrines are on this one, and in its center is the crater, almost a mile in circumference, from 100 to 200 feet deep, in shape an ellipse, stretching north and south, with its western side irregular. A wind was blowing the rising fumes to the north, so that we could stand upon the western edge and look down upon the seething mass of burning sulphur and boiling water, plain glimpses of which were got through the smoke.

The southern part of the crater is not so deep and active as the other, and may be easily descended. Here I scraped up some of the sulphur. The southern end of the more active part is called Yu no Tani—"valley of hot water." We made no scientific measurements or analyses. A Japanese teacher of mineralogy told me that he found samarskite and iron sulphide in Aso's crater, and Mr. Wilson, of our party, says it equals in wonder Niagara Falls.

The times have been awfully tight in Mississippi for more than two years past, and they are "as tight as Dick's hat-band" yet. It was so tight it hursted, and some of our people—particularly our merchants—are bursting, too. One good has come of these hard times and the high price of meat—there is more home-raised meat in this country than there has been any year since the war. This is specially true of the back country, the hilly sections, away from the towns and the railroads. The people have no money, but they have plenty to live upon—meat, bread and molasses, all home grown. It is about impossible for a man to starve to death with a crib full of corn and his smoke-house full of meat. Molasses, turnips, collards and potatoes come in for good measure. The barn-yards are full of domestic fowls of all kinds, and the hens do their level best laying eggs. It is said that the chicken and egg crop of Mississippi is worth more than the cotton crop. There is a good lesson in this statement, if it be true, and I do not doubt it. The chickens grow and the eggs come all year round. In some portions of Mississippi eggs answer the purpose of small change. Some families buy all their provisions with the product of their barn-yards—henneries. This is a big thing on a small scale. The tighter the times get the harder the hens lay, and while our congressmen are discussing the situation, our hens are laying out the salvation of the country. The hens cackle over new-born eggs while our solons "gabble" over "the silver bill."

I spent a night with one of our preachers in the interior not long ago. He is living better in the country than I can possibly live in town. "O," said he, "I get no money. There is none here to get; but I get plenty of provisions, and I live on the fat of the land." We talked of the collections—early collections—and the like of that. He said: "Early collections are impossible in this country. It can't be did. I am getting subscriptions to be paid next Fall. In order to get a two-hundred-dollar assessment, I will have to have a three-hundred-dollar subscription. It takes the most of my time, and, by long odds, the hardest of my work, to raise the collections. A good subscription in the Spring means a great falling off of the subscribers from church in the Fall. They shun me. I have to hunt most of them up and run them down."

"Well, my brother," I asked, "what are you studying, and along what lines are you preaching?"

"Nothing particular," he replied. "I am so busy, so taken up with and worried over the collections, that I have neither time, chance or mind for the ministry of the Word."

"Do you really consider the raising of the collections a part of your work?—your high calling of God?" I asked.

"I do not," he replied emphatically; "but it has grown to be a custom, and it seems that a preacher is discredited and discounted at Conference if the collections are not full. He is tested by the collections alone."

"What do you think ought to be done in regard to this matter?"

"Why, sir, I think the collections ought to be apportioned to the churches and assessed to the members, and they ought to be raised by the stewards, or by laymen appointed for that purpose. The preacher ought to cooperate with and help these officers. This is necessary—yea, indispensable—to the full efficiency of the Methodist ministry, as pastors and as preachers."

This man is one of the best preachers, among the best pastors, and one of the most efficient money collectors in the Conference to which he belongs. He has had more than twenty years' experience in the itinerant ministry. He is a man of fine sense, of thorough consecration, and of a "level head" in all matters. What he says is entitled to careful consideration. The effort he is making to be a good collector is keeping him from being a full and well-rounded preacher. "Loose him, and let him go."

The grippe has gotten a grasp on nearly everybody this Winter. How it does hold! In some cases it runs into pneumonia, and kills. It sucks the sap and best piece of life out of the strongest of us. To sneeze and wheeze is the order of the day now. Coughing is contagious in all our congregations. When one begins the rest follow. It comes in currents, and sweeps over the congregation.

The Closing Chapter in the Experience and Observation of a New Presiding Elder.

BY REV. T. L. MELLEN.

Well, the four years are gone. The fourth round of Quarterly Conferences for the last year of the term held. The record is closed. May our merciful heavenly Father overrule the many mistakes and bless and perpetuate whatever influences for good were set in motion!

During the four years of my presiding eldership twenty thousand miles were traveled and more than nine hundred times did I preach—or, in my "feeble way, try to preach," as a good old friend of mine described my early efforts in the ministry. And yet how small the results! Would that I had accomplished more for him who has done so much for me!

Wherever I went kind friends met me and brethren beloved vied with each other in honoring me for the sake of him whose embassador I was. Warm hearts and hospitable homes were everywhere open to me and every kindness was shown and done. Hence I shall always look back with pleasure to the four laborious years spent by me on the Meridian district. And I am proud of the preachers and people of that district with whom I served during these years. And I am glad that at the last Annual Conference the Meridian district took its rightful place—the first among the seven districts in our Conference. Now, let the people and preachers keep that exalted position. It can be done, although we preachers and the presiding elder of the Brookhaven district are going to do our level best to measure up with you.

Fourteen new churches, with five more provided for, and some of them contracted for, and titles secured to several more—all in one year, and such a year as 1893 has been—is a record seldom or never paralleled by any other district in all our connection. And then only at two or three places was the preacher's salary drawn on without his consent to help pay for the churches. (Those who did that ought to be ashamed of themselves! Let them bring forth fruits meet for repentance.)

Gracious revivals were in almost every pastoral charge during the four years, and especially in '92 and '93; and everything seems to point to better things in 1894.

I wish to commend the enterprise of the brethren at Soooba, DeKalb, Blairs' X Roads, Hopewell and Linwood (on the Linwood circuit—the last two) Chapel Hill (on the Vossburgh circuit) and Enoatia and New Hope (on the Enoatia circuit) and the Goldwood brethren in Waynesboro, in building such tasteful houses of worship as they have done doing the year now closing. Especially would I commend the Hopewell brethren, since in a former chapter or two they were not commended. May the blessings of our God rest richly upon them!

At some points I found it necessary to preach on controverted, or "doctrinal" questions; but I felt some regret for having done so, when I heard how easily a "colored" preacher had settled beyond all question the mode of baptism. It was at Whittle's Mill Pond, in Running Tiger Creek, about five miles northwest of DeKalb (the spot is historic, and, therefore, we must be precise!) where the "colored" brother was about to immerse a class of applicants for church membership. He had gone through with the usual references to John the Baptist and the river Jordan, and "straightway" and "buried," etc., etc. And then as one thoroughly convinced, and having no doubt whatever as to the correctness of his position, he said: "Now, as to dis word 'baptism' hitself, dere's no use to be obfiscated by it. Hit's a plain, simple word, and dere's no mystery about hit. Any child orter understand hit. De way de word come erbout was dis: For instance, when I goes to put a subject under de water, and he hits de water, hit says 'bap!' and when de water runs over him, hit says, 'tism, tism, tism, tism!' and dats de way de word 'baptism' come erbout!" Bro. Ellison will have to put an appendix to his tractate, "The Question Settled."

And now, brethren of the Meridian district, from the Wesson parsonage I write this last chapter. There are many things I would like to write, and some are possibly better than what has been written; but we will let that pass and what is written stand. In conclusion, I would commend unto you our Bro. Little who succeeds me as your presiding elder. Take good care of him. He is worthy. You will find him a prudent, wise, safe counsellor. I need not say open your homes and hearts to him, for you will do that. Take good care of all your faithful preachers. Let preachers and people work together and let the Meridian district send up a full report from every pastoral charge to the next Conference. It can be done. Resolve to do it, and then do it!

God bless you all!—preachers and preachers' wives, men, women, young people, children and babies! God bless you in basket and in store and baptize every congregation with the Holy Ghost and with fire! In my heart and in my prayers you all have a place.

The people at Wesson have received my family and myself kindly. Of course, they take good care of us. The parsonage has been enlarged, and with a little more work on it will be one of the most commodious and comfortable in the Conference.

Across the State.

Three times in five years this itinerant has moved almost the whole diameter of the State of Louisiana. At the late session of the Louisiana Conference one half-dozen preachers moved, collectively, over fifteen hundred miles, or an average of more than 250 each. These were all gray-haired men, save one, whose move was one of physical necessity. I have been thrown out into the work, all told, thirty-four times, and have seen as many episcopal administrations, but Bishop Key takes the lead in ousting the "fathers." Well, this may be best, as we "old fellows" get stiff in our joints, unless we are "moved about" occasionally. Beside, the friendships of old age are like to those of childhood—very close and confiding—and we might get "stuck on" somewhere.

My 290 miles move was made with no loss of life, limb, or baggage—the freight has not yet been heard from—but there has been much loss of health upon the part of the "heroine of the parsonage." Sciatic neuralgia is a bad thing to make such a move with, and stood guard over my couch at night, carefully warding off every effort to sleep; but, after resting upon Saturday, I was able to preach twice on Sunday to good congregations—i. e., of men. I guess there are a good many women in Lake Charles, but, for some reason or other, very few of them were at church for either of the services. To one who has been preaching to congregations composed mostly of women, this seemed very odd. Perhaps this phenomena was due to a cold north wind, which came sweeping down the lake all day Sunday. Still, two or three of the oldest women in the church were on hand to welcome the "new preacher."

When we reached the parsonage at 4:30 P. M., Friday, there was a large number of the good women of the church, headed by Sister Bradley, waiting to serve to us a good, hot dinner, cooked with their own dainty hands. Everything about the parsonage was in good order, and our first night was one of comfort and rest.

When Conference adjourned at Homer, I was at the parsonage there sick, and under the influence of morphine and atropia, without which, just at that time, it seemed I could not endure my suffering. When informed of my move—which was wholly unexpected to myself—I woke up, forgot my pain, left the bed, went to the fire, sat down and—and—! Well, I was ugly for a little while. My presiding elder and the Bishop, and my friends at home, seemed all deserters.

I hope, Mr. Editor, you will never be called on to receive an appointment under such circumstances. I do not know whether it were I, or Satan, or the morphine, or the appointment which shook me up so. It was a terrible shaking. It's all right now. Among such kind people, and with such kindly remembrances of the former home, it would be mean to repine.

There is great solace in the thought that we are not here by our own seeking. Out of these thirty-four appointments, I never asked any Bishop for one, nor caused anybody to ask for me. Each one has been accepted as made, and I have lived, raised eleven children—all of whom are now married off except four—and until these three antipodal moves were ordered, I kept out of debt. The expenses of these moves have been equal to about ten per cent. of all my receipts! What business can succeed on such principles? But such is our economy, and no church has succeeded on any other policy as ours has on this. We make sacrifices, but not for place, nor for power, but for the furtherance of the church of God. Yet, when one's honor seems jeopardized, and that by no fault of his, then come fears, speculations—mental—and sometimes we love to say:

"Oh! it is hard to serve the Lord;
To rise and take his part
Upon this battlefield of life,
And not sometimes lose heart."

But under his gracious promises we take heart again, look up through our tears, sigh a sigh of faith, and say, "Not as I will."

This is the first day of the first month of the one thousand eight hundred and ninety-fourth year, and to all we heartily wish "a Happy New Year."

J. A. PARKER.

A Little Plan.

A little plan which I have found serviceable in past years is to put down every night the engagements and duties of next day, arranging the house well. The advantages of this are several. You get more done than if a great part of each day is spent in contriving and considering "what next?" A healthful feeling pervades the whole of life. There is a feeling of satisfaction at the end of the day on finding that, generally, the greater part of what is planned has been accomplished. This is the secret of giving dignity to trifles. As units they are insignificant; they rise in importance when they become parts of a plan. Besides this, and I think the most important thing of all, there is gained a consciousness of will, the opposite of that which is the sense of impotency. The thought of time, to me at least, is a very overpowering and often a very annihilating one for energy. Time rushing on, unbroken, irresistible, hurrying the worlds and the ages into being and out of it, and making our "noisy years seem moments in the being of the eternal silence." The sense of powerlessness which this gives is very painful. But I have felt that this is neutralized by such a little plan as that. You feel that you do control your own course. You are borne on, but not resistlessly. Down the rapids you go, certainly, but you are steering and trimming your own raft, and making the flood of time your vassal and not your conqueror.—Rev. F. W. Robertson.

A Sign of Approaching Church Death.

An account is published of a minister's refusing a flattering call. When a friend asked him why, he said: "The church is in such a bad way that I am afraid it will soon die." "You surprise me," said the friend; "I was under the impression that many of its members were wealthy." "That is just the trouble," said the minister, "all its members are wealthy; there is not a poor man among them; and a church with no poor people in it is, in my opinion, a moribund church." Never were more truthful words uttered. Nothing is more unlike a Christian church than a few wealthy people assembling on Sunday morning, content with themselves, to listen to an address by a liberally compensated master of ceremonies and to music of the highest order, and then going to the world of business or pleasure until custom calls them back to their Sunday club house.

At the same time the young man might have changed the situation; for some wealthy churches need only a leader who will show them "a more excellent way."

A New Heart.

In speaking of the necessity of a new birth, one day, Mr. Moody said: "The sinner must have a new heart. A man has bought a farm, and he finds on that farm an old pump. He goes to the pump and begins to pump. And a person comes to him and says, "Look here, my friend, you do not want to use that water. The man that lived here before used that water and it poisoned him and his wife and his children—the water did."

"Is that so?" says the man. "Well, I will soon make that right. I will find a remedy." And he goes and gets some paint, and he paints up the pump, putties up all the holes, and fills up the cracks in it, and has got a fine-looking pump. And he says, "Now, I am sure it is all right." You would say, "What a fool, to go and paint the pump when the water is bad." But that is what sinners are up to. They are trying to paint up the old pump, when the water is bad. It was a new well he wanted. When he dug a new well it was all right. Make the fountain good and the stream will be good. Instead of painting the pump and making new resolutions, my friend, stop it, and ask God to give you a new heart.

Ruts.

Ruts! You can trace them everywhere. They are the wear-lines of a narrow-gauge conservatism. Many of them are accidental. The road needs to be broadened, to be relaid and smoothed over. Ruts! You find them in science and art, politics, social customs, and in the curious relics of old traditions. They are the grooves of precedent, and the quicker we abandon many of them for fresher methods, more reasonable practices, more liberal judgments, the better it will be for us. Keep the best channels a well-laid track, but get out of the iteration, monotony, indirection and irregularity of the old rut.—Christian Register.

Points for Preachers.

The nearer the preacher lives to the Lord the more gospel he can put in a handshake.

The sermon the preacher likes best is not the one God uses most.

The man who is never convicted by his own preaching has no business in the pulpit.

God has not had much to do with the revival that winds up with a church entertainment to pay expenses.

If God's eyes are running to and fro for you, he will find a place that you will fit.

As long as the preacher is wide awake his church can not go to sleep.

Angels probably have to look up to see the man who goes down low to work for Christ.

The devil is doing all he can to help the preacher who is trying to prove that salvation begins and ends with the head.

One reason why it is taking so long to save the world is because so much of the preaching is aimed at sinners who do not go to church.

There are too many men who love to preach, but hate to practice.

There are preachers who would make a good many changes in the plan of salvation if they could.—Ram's Horn.

The Sabbaths of a Year.

Just think of this: You have had fifty-two Sabbaths! What have they done for you? Fifty-two Sabbaths calling you to God; telling you of the eternal life, bringing you near to Jesus; giving you the privileges of social worship, of prayer for each other, of others' prayers for you; leading you away from the world to sit for a time in heavenly places with Christ Jesus; giving you the opportunity of teaching and of being taught. Fifty-two Sabbaths! Each one preaching to you the blessed gospel of the crucified Son of God; each one leading you to the well of salvation that you might draw water from it; each one feeding you with the bread of life. Fifty-two Sabbaths! What have they done for your comfort in sorrow, for your help in struggle, for your restraint from evil, for your growth in spiritual character, for the confirming of your faith, for the brightening of your hope, for the culture of patience and diligence and fidelity in the discharge of all duties? Ah! who can tell the good that has come to him personally from fifty-two Sabbaths? Think this over calmly, intelligently, and see if you do not have occasion to say: "Bless the Lord, O, my soul; and all that is within me; bless his holy name!"

And then these fifty-two Sabbaths all around the globe! What have they done for the whole human race? For the lifting up of the fallen, for the leavening of humanity with the life of the gospel? How they have served to illustrate and emphasize the text: "In him we live and move and have our being."—By late Rev. J. Few Smith D. D.

Can't Help It.

A little girl often followed her father around when he came into the house with this question: "Father, what can I do for you?" And never was she happier than when he gave her something to do for him. Once he said, perhaps, tired with her asking, "Child, why do you ask that question so much?"

"O father," she answered, with tears in her eyes, "because I can't help it."

It was love that put the question, and her readiness to undertake whatever he set her about was proof of the genuineness of that love. She wanted always to be doing something for her father.

People sometimes are in doubt whether they love God or not. I will tell them how they can find out. Are you often asking your heavenly Father the same question this little girl asked her earthly father? Is it one of your first thoughts, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" And do you keep on asking because you can not help it? It so fills your heart that it must come out. And you not only ask, but are on the lookout all the time to hear what he bids. This is the way to know whether you love God or not. And if we love him, and trust in the Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us, we shall keep his commandments—that is, doing what he says. This is the proof of the genuineness of our love. Try yourself by this test.—Selected.

Your Position in Life.

Perhaps you are not exactly suited with the position in life you occupy. You think you are made for better things, and that you are not appreciated along the line in which you have been working. Then join God; consecrate your life to his service, and commit your way to him. There is no latent possibility in your nature which he will not develop; no hidden talent that he will not expand. The best and highest gifts of the present life come through disinterested service.—Occident.

HYGIENE.

Sir Andrew Clark on Alcohol.

Sir Andrew Clark, physician to Gladstone and George Eliot, who died recently, is quoted as follows by Francos E. Willard:

Health is that state of body in which the functions all go on without notice or observation, and in which existence is felt to be a pleasure, in which it is a kind of joy simply to see, to hear, to touch, to live. That is health, and everybody knows it. Now that is a state which can not be benefited by alcohol in any degree; indeed, I will go further and say that this state is also in some way or other injured by alcohol; it is a state in which a sort of discord is produced by the use of alcohol, a sense of being injured in the perfection of its loveliness, for I call perfect health the loveliest thing in this world, but alcohol, even in small doses, will take off both the mental and moral bloom.

I will say more: It is not only not a helper of work, it is a certain hinderer of work, and every man who comes to the front of a profession in London is marked by this one characteristic that the more busy he gets the less alcohol he takes, and his excuse is: "I am very sorry, but I can not take it and do my work." Now let me say that I am speaking solemnly and carefully when I tell you that I am considerably within the mark in saying that within the rounds of my hospital wards to-day seven out of every ten that lie there in their beds owed their ill-health to alcohol. I do not say that seventy in every one hundred were drunkards; I do not know that one of them was, but they used alcohol. Day by day, just as the grass grows and we can not see it; day by day those little excesses are doing their work, for alcohol upsets the stomach, and the stomach upsets the other organs, and bit by bit, under this fair, jovial outside, the constitution is being sapped.

I will say one thing further—certainly more than three-fourths of the disorders in what we call fashionable life arise from the use of this very drug that we call alcohol. But there is another side to this question, and it is no abuse of language to say that it is an awful side; so soon as a man begins to take one drop, then the desire begotten in him becomes a part of his nature, and that nature, formed by his acts, inflicts curses inexpressible when handed down to the generations that are to follow him, as part and parcel of their being. Can I use stronger words than these? When I think of this I am disposed to give up my profession—to give up everything, and to go forth upon a holy crusade to preach to all men, Beware of this enemy of the race.—Exchange.

Brain Work and Vitality.

As a factor in longevity, the "London Speaker" calls attention to the fact that those people who have been accustomed to the continued disciplinary use of their brains daily, and who have thus placed their nerve power under a highly developed condition of constitutional training, are enabled by these very means to escape the so-called early decay, and to avoid those alarming accidents to health to which so many apparently healthy men succumb. People who use their brains, and observe ordinary hygienic care of their bodies, resist disease in the first place, and when they are actually ill prolong their lives or recuperate sooner than do those who have lived less intellectual lives. Thus there is given a new force to the assertion "that you may kill a man with anxiety very quickly, but it is difficult to kill him with work."

"Whether the brain can actually give power to the muscles is not certain, though the enormous strength sometimes developed in a last rally looks like it; that it can materially affect vitality is quite certain, and has been acknowledged by the experienced in all ages."—The Healthy Home.

Position for Healthy Sleep.

Many people sleep on the left side, and this is the most common cause of the unpleasant taste in the mouth in the morning, which is generally attributed to dyspepsia. If a meal has been taken within two or three hours of going to bed, to sleep on the left side is to give the stomach a task which is difficult in the extreme to perform. The student of anatomy knows that all food leaves the stomach on the right side, and hence sleeping on the left side soon after eating involves a sort of pumping operation which is anything but conducive to sound repose. The action of the heart is also interfered with considerably and the lungs are unduly compressed. It is probable that lying on the back is the most natural position, but few persons can rest easily so, and hence it is best to cultivate the habit of sleeping on the right side.—National Educator.

Do not wear impermeable and tight-fitting hats that constrict the blood-vessels of the scalp. Use Hall's Hair Renewer occasionally, and you will not be bald.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. Geo. H. Thompson: "I am now in my new home and ready for the new year. No preacher has received a heartier welcome than the preacher at Lauderdale. If any brother wants to swap charges, let him go somewhere else to swap. I am going to start a campaign for the ADVOCATE at once."

Rev. J. H. Evans, Raleigh, Miss.: "We are safely landed at Raleigh, and are making preparations to commence our labors on the circuit, and I believe we are all in good spirits. Everything looks like it was on the improvement. Well, I will write more on this subject in the future. Pray for us."

Rev. R. P. Goar, Ackerman, Miss.: "As I start out on my new work, Chester circuit, Kosciusko district, North Mississippi Conference, I will send you a subscriber. I hear of storms, cyclones, poundings; but this preacher and family know what a constant shower of good and useful things mean. The good people of Ackerman have been untiring in their kindness toward us. May the good Lord bless them, and may we grow in favor with them all. Chester circuit is composed of six appointments, and I have been heartily received by them all."

Rev. J. A. Poe, P. C., Belzona circuit: "The Bishop and his cabinet saw fit, in their wisdom, to send me back to this work for the third year. So I am here again, in the midst of another year's labor for the cause of the Master. But, looking at things in a natural way, the outlook is very gloomy. Many of our members have moved off and some of them have fallen, if dancing and drunkenness is failing. Crops were short this year, and it seems that the country is poverty-stricken, especially when it comes to the Lord's part of it. Spiritual life is at a low ebb, and it seems that we are so far from God; we can only get a glimpse at his smiling face ever and anon. Realizing our spiritual condition, we most earnestly request the Christians of the Methodist Church of God, South, to pray for us of the Methodist Church, South, of God 'down here in this swamp.' You need not think that we don't have any money or religion either down here, for we have a little of both. I fear money predominates."

Rev. W. J. Burt, Kossuth, Miss.: "We never spent a happier Christmas. Bro. T. W. Lewis, our new presiding elder, was with us and preached twice on Christmas Day. In the morning he preached on the ascension of Christ. He talked about the 'blessed Christ' until most of us got happy. At the close of the service he said he was not very old, but he was an old-fashioned Methodist, and would like to shake hands with everyone who would promise to live nearer to God during the new year. We all shook hands with him—Methodist and Baptist. The Lord help us to remember the covenant and to keep our vows. At the close of the evening service he took a collection to help furnish the district parsonage and got ten dollars. Bro. Lewis won the hearts of all who heard him. He admired our new church very, very much, and was delighted with Kossuth. The preacher's motto this year, suggested by our presiding elder, for the Corinth district is: 'A thousand souls for Christ, and all the collections in full.'"

Rev. W. W. Hopper, Jan. 3, 1894: "The Spirit of God has been upon my church in great power since my return from Conference. Our watch-night service was of special interest. We spent six and a half hours at the church the last night of the old year in preaching, song, prayer and testimony, and for at least one hour before twelve o'clock we were upon our knees at God's altar seeking for a fresh baptism of the Spirit with which to begin the work of the new year. And we were not disappointed; for the good Spirit fell on us in great power, and at least two dozen people received the power from on high, and while the world ushered in the new year by the blowing of whistles and ringing of bells, we hailed its advent by shouting God's praise. And, best of all is, just a little before the new year was born, two precious souls received the experience of entire sanctification. And last night at our holiness meeting another soul entered Beulah land. Thank God for these renewed tokens of God's presence with my church. So we have begun the year's work, and we are planning, praying, and expecting great things this year of 1894."

Rev. P. A. Johnston, P. E., Jackson, La., Dec. 29, 1893: "I have just held my first Quarterly Conference for the Conference year, 1894. I preached in Jackson last Sunday, and administered the Holy Sacrament in the church in which I was licensed to preach in 1858—Barnabas Pipkins, P. E.; J. A. B. Jones, P. C. I held the Quarterly Conference on Thursday afternoon, at which time Bro. C. C. Miller was licensed to preach. Bro. Miller is a son of the Rev. A. G. Miller, of precious memory, who was a superannuate member of the Louisiana Conference at his death. May the mantle of the father fall upon the son! I have had a wrestle with la grippe for two weeks. Am better now. I have tried to examine myself, to see if there is anything in the way of making this the most successful year of my life. I believe I am more consecrated to my life-work than I have ever been, and I start with a greater determination to do the Master's work than any previous year of my life. Some of the preachers have not yet reached their work. I suppose they are tussling with the grip. I shall expect you to visit our district and preach some for us. Let me know when you can come, and you shall have a ride behind the two grays. The old year is dying, the new is nearing its birth. What sorrows hang about the old! What hopes cluster around the new! A few more goings and comings, and the battle will be over. The dear old ADVOCATE shall not be forgotten in the rounds. I have started right in my first Quarterly Conference by making a talk for it, and exhorted the pastor and officials to try and send some new subscribers. I pray the blessings of God upon you in your new and delicate position."

Rev. Ben P. Jaco, P. C., Abbeville: "At the recent session of the North Mississippi Annual Conference I was changed from Panola circuit, which charge I had served for three years with great pleasure and profit to myself, to this work, the Abbeville circuit. As soon as was practicable, we took up our baggage and started for this place, arriving early Wednesday morning, Dec. 12, having good appetites whetted by early rising. We were met at the train by Bro. A. R. Bogard, who showed us at once the way to Sister Graham's, where an excellent breakfast was held in readiness for the coming of the itinerants. After breakfast our pleasure was increased, being informed that the good women had arranged for us to spend a week in this hospitable home, to await the vacation of the parsonage. We are now pleasantly arranged at the preacher's home and getting into the work, of which there is plenty to do. Following such men as Davis, Huggin, and Anderson, I am sure will require the best of efforts. I have met four appointments, and had good warm, spiritual services and good congregations. We are expecting and praying for great blessings this year. The quietude of our home has not been disturbed by a 'storm' of beneficence, a 'ponnding' with good things, nor a flood of generosity, but have enjoyed that which is much better. A great stream of kindness rising in the warm hearts of these good people, and constantly flowing into the reservoir of our necessity, has deposited many kinds and much of that which is good to eat, and other substantials as well as that which touches the heart and calls forth thanks constantly. Truly our lines have fallen to us in pleasant places; so we pray that the 'goodness and mercy' of the Lord shall follow them all the days' of our pastorate, and that God will 'establish the work of our hands, yea, the work of our hands establish thou it.'"

Better than a gold mine. Raise your own coffee at one cent a pound. Let the high tariff store coffee go. Most delicious and healthy. The poor man's friend and the rich man's delight. Matures North or South in four months. Plant any time up to the 20th of June, rows three feet apart one bean eight inches in row. Has produced over 40 bushels per acre. Some prefer it to store coffee. For the benefit of my fellow-men, I will send a starting package to all who will send stamps to cover trouble of packing and mailing, or enough to plant 200 hills, 50 cents, and will make 200 pots of most delicious coffee, good enough for a king. I have been working the soil nearly 60 years and never found anything beginning to compare in true merit with this wonderful and valuable coffee, which is superceding store coffee as fast as its merits become known. Order my free catalogue and see what my patrons say about it, who have tried it all over the country. Over twenty thousand farmers supplied, and nothing but praise comes from every direction. Two crops per year on same land.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLES.

Largest Type Teacher's Bible in the World.

We have for years been trying to get a large type Teacher's Bible which was not too large and heavy. We have it in this series. Besides this feature, the helps are entirely new, and were written by the greatest scholars of both America and Europe, which guarantees their superiority over all others. Everyone who is familiar with the Oxford and Bagster Teacher's Bibles knows that the book printed in Minion type makes the most desirable sized volume, but the Minion type is too small for any but the best eyes; and while their books in Bourgeois type suit the eyes, they are entirely too large and heavy for convenient handling. This International Series overcomes both these faults by having the Bourgeois type book no larger or heavier than the much smaller type (Minion) Oxford and Bagster books, while the prices are much less than for books of corresponding type in any other series, and the bindings are not only similar in design, but equal in every particular to the older Teacher's Bibles; and some of these bindings are finer than those of any other Teacher's Bibles we have ever seen.

We are specially glad to be able to say that the prices of these Bibles are in many cases much cheaper than the Oxford or Bagster Books, while they are altogether equally well made and have the newest and best helps and Maps. We claim for these new Teacher's Bibles that they give

The Largest Type in the Smallest Book.

The Newest and Best Helps.

We confidently assure our patrons that in the INTERNATIONAL TEACHER'S BIBLE SERIES we have the very BEST line of Teacher's Bibles ever offered.

NOTES.

Bro. J. G. Cammack's postoffice will hereafter be Fannin, Miss., instead of Brandon.

***

Quite a number of our preachers are diligently at work for the ADVOCATE. Wise pastors they are.

***

The Northwestern Christian Advocate says that Bishop Warren gives half his salary this year to embarrassed churches in Colorado.

***

The postoffice address of Rev. Chas. P. Montgomery is Jackson, Miss. Correspondence should be addressed to him in care of Millsaps College.

***

Last Sabbath night we had the privilege of worshiping at Dryades Street Church, where we heard a very timely, spiritual sermon by the pastor, Rev. F. S. Parker, on the text, "O spare me, that I may recover strength, before I go hence, and be no more." (Psa. xxxix, 13.)

***

Rev. A. E. Clay preached at Felicity Street Church, Sunday night, and presented the claims of the organization of which he is the honored head, the Louisiana Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. The discourse was a stirring one. This society has the confidence of all the churches and of the general public.

***

Rev. S. H. Werlein, of the St. Louis Conference, is spending a week in the city visiting relatives. The many friends of his boyhood and early manhood are rejoiced to meet him again. Dr. Werlein is now presiding elder of the St. Louis district. He is in fine health and spirits and seems pleased with the work of a sub-bishop.

***

On Monday, Jan. 22, at 7:30 P. M., at the Coliseum Place Baptist Church a lecture will be given for the benefit of the Rescue Mission by Dr. Sarah F. Wells, author of "Ten Years Around the World," and member of the Woman's National Press Association, Washington, D. C. The title of the lecture is "Tour of the World." The work of the Rescue Mission is such as to commend it to the philanthropy of our people.

***

On Friday night we attended a meeting of the Carondelet Epworth League. The attendance was good and the exercises were very entertaining. Besides good music, there were several essays and recitations, and also reports from the several departments of work. The reports show the league to be in fine working order. Such a league in every church would solve many of the problems which are now perplexing many of our best pastors.

***

In our editorial, of last week, on "Work for the General Conference," we wrote in regard to the proposed change in the law as to the trial of a traveling preacher the following sentence, "Is there any objection to this change in the law, except that of the man who ploughed with a crooked stick 'cause Dad ploughed that way?" The types substituted "he" for "Dad," thus robbing the sentence of its essential point. Mistakes will occur sometimes in the best-regulated families.

***

Rev. S. H. Werlein, D. D., occupied the pulpit of Felicity Street Church Sunday morning. It was fitting that he should do so. This was his last pastorate in the Louisiana Conference. It was during his pastorate and largely through his instrumentality that the present elegant house of worship was erected. He received a royal welcome from his old parishioners. There was a large congregation in spite of threatening weather. The discourse presented strong, stimulating, scriptural thought in diction, correct, elegant and appropriate.

A Cheerful Prospect for the South.

The commercial reports for 1893, now completed, reveal some facts that ought to be decidedly encouraging to our Southern people. Dividing the United States into five sections—the Eastern, the Middle, the Central Western, the Western and the Southern—and comparing these sections with each other, it will be seen that the number of business failures in the South is very much smaller than in any other section. While in the whole country the number of failures was fifty-one per cent. larger in '93 than in '92, there are four Southern States in which the number of failures is actually less than in '92. These are Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Florida. Moreover, the sum total of losses in the South is comparatively small. With two or three exceptions, the firms that failed in the South had small liabilities. With the return of normal financial conditions, the South will, therefore, have the start of any other section in the race for prosperity. This would be the case even if the South had to rely upon her own resources alone. But according to the laws of trade, which are as unalterable as those of the Medes and Persians, the South will not have to rely upon her own resources; she will receive help from extraneous sources. Eagle-eyed capital, true to its native instinct of self-preservation, other things being equal, always seeks investment in a region least liable to monetary disaster, or to fluctuation in financial values. It having been demonstrated that the South is, par excellence, such a section, it is, therefore, absolutely certain that capitalists from other sections of the United States and from other countries will soon be peregrinating through all parts of the South with an eye to dividends. Not only our town lots and our State, county and city bonds, but also our lands will be marketable at remunerative prices. And when we speak of lands, we do not mean arable lands alone. The timber lands of the South are an immense item in her inventory of resources. Not only has she almost immeasurable forests of magnificent pine, whose products of lumber, tar, turpentine, rosin and charcoal are destined in the near future to be an immense source of revenue, but in addition to these she has such a variety of manufacturing woods, as can scarcely be paralleled in any other section. The manufacturers of the North are sadly in need of many of the woods which our farmers in the South burn for fuel, or cut down to make room for unremunerative cotton. With an increase of transportation facilities, and of manufacturing establishments, our farmers will have a market for all these woods. This is only one item out of many that might be mentioned that give ground for lofty hopes as to the future of the South. Let us then not be despondent, but cheerful. The night has been dark; "but the morning cometh."

The Blood Sucker.

Not only men, but institutions have a posthumous influence. The Louisiana Lottery is gone, but its influence remains. It has created a generation of gamblers who apparently think life not worth living without the excitement attendant upon gaming. Demand creates supply, and so in the absence of the great legalized gaming institution an illegal one has come into existence. Its whereabouts are not known to the general public; but it has its agents in all parts of the city, the agents being in many cases the same persons who were formerly agents of the Louisiana Lottery. These agents are doing a thriving business. As the victim of "the worm of the still" so soon as he recovers from the effects of one bite of the venomous reptile seeks its haunts for the sole purpose of being bitten again, so with the victim of the lottery. Having once lost blood at the hands of this professional blood sucker, the poor fool is never content to remain away from the blood sucker's habitat as long as he has a drop of blood remaining. Whether the blood sucker exists by law or in defiance of law is a matter of no consequence to the blood loser. If the State fails to provide a blood sucker for him, he will provide one for himself.

A number of these vendors of illegal lottery tickets have been arrested and are now in the clutches of the law. What the final results will be in the courts the future must determine. "Will the law be enforced, or will it in a little while be a dead letter like the Sunday law?" is a question which is now being asked by our best citizenship. We think there is very great danger of non-enforcement, unless the moral forces of society are brought into requisition. The Anti-Lottery League, which did such noble service in destroying the legalized lottery, has an equally important work before it in the extirpation of the illegal lottery. We believe the anti-lottery sentiment here is strong enough to accomplish the desired end, if organized and put into action.

The Home Atmosphere.

BY REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

In a few days Christian people will assemble for the "week of prayer." In such gatherings requests are often handed in for prayer to be offered for the conversion of unconverted persons; many such requests may come from parents in behalf of their own children. Now sincere prayer is a petition to God for his help in the obtaining of what we are ourselves willing to live and labor for. If we ask God's Spirit to convert our child, we should certainly co-operate with the Holy Spirit in every possible way. The pastor and the Sunday-school teacher can reach the young only occasionally; but the father and mother reach their children, for good or evil, every day in the week. And they influence their children mainly by the atmosphere of the home. Before they ask their fellow-Christians to pray for the conversion of their children, let them ask themselves solemnly the question, Is the moral atmosphere of our house favorable or unfavorable to wholesome, godly character?

For let it be observed that the family is the primary training-school of character. Let anyone read the heroic old Missionary Paton's description of his humble home in Scotland, and learn from it what a godly parentage can do in moulding childhood for Christ. Some of my readers may recall the beautiful account which the veteran missionary, Dr. Goodell, gave of that lowly New England farmhouse in which his God-fearing parents trained up him and his brothers and sisters. There was a rag carpet on the floor, and a pine table held their frugal meal; but the Bible ruled the dwelling, and his hard-toiling mother sang sweet hymns as she plied her spinning-wheel. Such Puritan homes made Puritan character. From them went forth the noble army of New England ministers and missionaries, and the very salt of the New England churches. If we had more such homes in these days, there would not be such a famine of sturdy, powerful preachers, or of men and women ready to consecrate themselves to the heathen abroad or the heathen in our cities.

The atmosphere of the household—which either converts to Christ, or else perverts to fashion, folly, or impiety of all kinds—is commonly created by the parents. They are responsible for it. If the whole trend of household talk and thought and ambition runs towards money-making, or social frivolities or general godlessness of any sort, it is the father and mother who give the pitch. Nowhere is it so difficult to make the best preaching or the best Sunday-school teaching effective on character as in the malarious air of such a home. Just as soon expect to grow sugar-cane in Greenland as to rear thrifty plants of grace in such an atmosphere. The parental influence penetrates through the house with as subtle a poison as escaping gas from an ill-built furnace, or ill-constructed sewer pipes.

If the father begins God's holy day (as too many professing Christians do) with his Sabbath-breaking morning newspaper—loaded with stocks and sporting news and scandals—the family will help him read it. If the parents go irregularly to church, the children will hardly care to go at all. If the father puts a decanter on his table the boys will soon begin to practice with the fatal glass. If the parents do not make home cheerful and attractive by every means in their power, the boys and girls will be off to the theatre or the ball-room, or the club or elsewhere for their evening amusements. A wise Christian father who presented his children for admission to my church years ago, said to me, "I have always anchored my children to their home." That was his way of trying to anchor them to Jesus Christ. Could he and his Christian wife have had any better way?

Moral atmosphere is the most powerful of all educational forces. In some schools nearly all the pupils are converted, and simply because they breathe a Christian atmosphere. My chief dread of the present "athletic craze" that is raging in certain colleges is that it will poison the air of those institutions with coarse ambitions, and the passion for betting, sporting, drinking and other demoralizing propensities. There may well be a "day of prayer for colleges" just now; and Boards of Trustees and faculties may well be subjects of prayer that they may have the courage and wisdom to resist the farther spread of this mischievous mania.

This subject has a wide application; but my object now is to emphasize the vital importance of a pure, cheerful, wholesome Christian atmosphere in the household. The sad inconsistencies of many professedly Christian parents set their children against religion instead of winning them to it. Ill temper sours the very air of some families; frivolity poisons others. The best preaching of the pulpit is nullified by the malaria that pervades too many households, and in all such families early piety is seldom to be looked for. Even if the children are converted to Christ it is rather in spite of parental influence, than by means of it. It was the atmosphere of Elkanah and Hannah's home that made Samuel; it was the wretched air of Eli's house that ruined Hophni and Phineas. In both houses there was a profession of godliness; in only one of them was it a wise and consistent reality. Do you want to see your children brought to Christ? Then don't content yourself with asking other people to pray for their conversion. Pray for them yourself; and live as you pray. Make your religion winsome if you want to win them to Christ. Let them breathe a pure, sweet atmosphere in their own homes, and a faithful God will not turn a deaf ear to your honest and fervent prayers.—Exchange.

A Second Monte Carlo.

HOW THE LOUISIANA LOTTERY WILL RUN THINGS IN ITS NEW HOME.

A Richmond man who has returned from the South, says a late Richmond, Va., telegram, tells some interesting things about the Louisiana Lottery's new establishment. He said the lottery company has bought an island on the coast of Honduras, about eight hundred miles from Port Tampa, Fla. A fine line of steamers will be put on between Port Tampa and this island, which, besides being the home of the lottery, is to be made a superb Winter resort, with opera houses, gardens, a great open-air orchestra, and, in short, a second Monte Carlo.

At Port Tampa the lottery company has already put up an immense structure, six stories high, where they will do their printing and other work incident to handling their business in the United States. He says further that it is supposed they intend to reach the public through the express companies. Their preparations are certainly on a tremendous scale. They have great wharf facilities and an immense capital. The railroad authorities are looking forward to a steady flow of Winter visitors to the Honduras resort by the line of steamers that is to be put on between Port Tampa and Honduras.

We clip the above from the Shreveport Daily Caucasian, not merely as a matter of news, but in order to say that we think Congress has a duty to perform just at this juncture. Exclusion from the mails will amount to little, if express companies are allowed to become agents for the lottery, circulating its tickets, collecting its funds, and distributing its advertisements. Those congressmen who will at once initiate a movement to prohibit all common carriers from handling lottery tickets and advertisements will receive the hearty thanks of the best element of society everywhere. Our preachers and other influential citizens can lend a helping hand by writing to their representatives in Congress, and, if necessary, getting up petitions for legislation against this mammoth iniquity.

Preachers' Meeting.

The Preachers' Meeting met in pastor's study of Carondelet Church, Jan. 1, and organized for the year. C. W. Carter, president; T. K. Faunt LeRoy, vice-president; J. M. Henry, secretary. Committee on Program: W. H. LaPrade, F. N. Parker and J. T. Sawyer. This committee will map out the work for the meeting. The meeting welcomed the new pastors, T. K. Faunt LeRoy, F. S. Parker and L. F. Jackson; also passed a resolution inviting Dr. W. C. Black to take part with the brethren in the meeting. The following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That in parting with Bros. H. S. Johns and J. M. Beard, who have been for several years past members of this body, we do so with great affection and high esteem, and, assuring them of our continued interest in them and in their work, we beg that they will keep us also in heart and in their prayers.

The Thing Can Be Done.

In behalf of the Arkansas Methodist we visited last Fall a growing county town of more than 2,000 population. Getting a list of names representing nearly thirty homes not reached by this paper, we secured in a few hours twenty new subscribers, about half as many as we already had at that office. Eight months later we visited the same town, and on comparing our list of subscribers with the pastor's roll of members, we found outside of the familes taking this paper the names of sixty-four persons, many of them recent accessions to our church. With the pastor's aid in a canvass of about three hours we saw nearly half of the sixty-four persons mentioned, and secured twenty-four new subscribers. But why relate this? For one reason: simply to indicate that in most pastoral charges many new subscribers can by diligent efforts be secured for the Conference paper.—Arkansas Methodist.

"The History of Methodism in Alabama," by Dr. Anson West.

This work is a very valuable contribution to the history of Methodism in the Southwest. It is a work of nearly eight hundred pages, and is well printed and well bound. It covers a period of fifty-seven years—from 1808 to 1865. The work evinces prodigious research. While the author has drawn materials from all available sources, he has not produced a mere scrap book made up out of previous histories. He has sifted, assorted and arranged his material in accordance with a well-defined plan of his own. Moreover, a large part of the book consists of matter not previously published. It is evident that the author has been painstaking in his efforts to be accurate in all his statements. He has rescued from oblivion the names of many of the heroes who laid the foundations of the splendid structure of Methodism which greets our eyes to-day as we travel through the great Southwest, and has added new lustre to other names, about which our information was exceedingly scanty. Such a work deserves a wide circulation. One of the sad—we might almost say, alarming—features of latter-day civilization is the absorption of our people, especially the young, in the present—their utter indifference to the past with its glorious record of high endeavor and lofty achievement. In no way can our young people employ their leisure more profitably than in studying the lives and characters of those who made our civilization and our church what they are. Familiarity with their lofty ideals, their heroic endurance, their self-sacrificing toils and their dauntless courage is exactly the need of the many thousands among us who seem to have no higher purpose in life than simply to have "a good time." We cordially commend it as a valuable contribution to the history of Methodism in the Southwest. It is published by Barbee & Smith. Price, $2.50.

"Sam Williams: A Tale of the Old South."

This book is by W. S. Harrison. Southern Methodist Publishing House. Price, $1.

This is a charmingly written story of Southern life before the war, and will aid in rescuing from oblivion a phase of civilization that is now a thing of the past. All those interested in the study of the customs, manner of life and dialects that prevailed in the "Cotton States" in ante-bellum days will read the book with pleasure and profit. Charles Egbert Craddock and others have given us pictures of life in certain quarters of the South, but plantation life as it was in Mississippi and Alabama in slavery times has before this been but imperfectly mirrored. The author, however, has undertaken the task of picturing this unique condition of society, and has succeeded admirably. His rendering of the negro dialect is as perfect as that of Thomas Nelson Page or of Joel Chandler Harris. In fact, it is the best rendering of the dialect of the Mississippi darkey we have ever seen in print. Our Southern youth should all read this entertaining story in order rightly to understand the state of things which existed in the days of our fathers. "Having lived among the characters represented, the author claims the right to speak." The book abounds in eloquent passages. It should have a wide circulation both North and South.

"The World's Parliament of Religions."

"The World's Parliament of Religions," by Dr. John Henry Barrows, published by "The World's Parliament Co.," a notice of which we gave in our issue of Dec. 28, is one of the noteworthy literary productions of the day. It consists of two large octavo volumes of nearly eight hundred pages each. It is printed on first-class paper and is well bound and handsomely illustrated. Whatever contrariety of opinions there may be as to the wisdom of holding such a parliament, now that it has been held there is a very general desire to become acquainted with its proceedings. Such a desire can best be gratified by procuring this work. The author, as the official head of the parliament, had exceptional facilities for writing such a work. The country will be flooded with works of this character; but this work will be the standard. More than 30,000 sets had been ordered before the work of publishing was completed. It can be ordered through the E. R. Harris Publishing Co., Cotton Exchange Building, New Orleans, La.

A young man offered to be a teacher. There was no class for him. He went out and brought eight boys. A hint to the wise.

For the Young People.

My Young Friends: I greet you, this day, with a Happy New Year. You have had your Christmas, and I would be glad to know that all of you have enjoyed the occasion, and have received many nice presents from loving relatives—from papa and mama, and other thoughtful friends. When you remember the kindness of your friends and look at the nice things you have received, do not forget that you have been celebrating the birth-day of your Savior, and that all good things come from him; even the loved ones who have so kindly remembered you. While your hearts have been made glad, and you have clapped your hands as your eyes foll upon the tokens of friendship and love, did you not forget that many little boys and girls have had no Christmas presents, and no glad tokens of love? Many have neither father nor mother to think of them; and many fathers and mothers, though they love their children, have no money to spend at Christmas to cheer the young hearts of their little ones. Can you not think of some little boy or girl who has had no Christmas present, and can you not make that child's heart glad by a small token of friendship? It takes a very little thing to make a child happy. Sometimes even a kind word or a pleasant smile cheers the heart.

Try to make some one happy every day you live, and in this way you will increase your own happiness.

Another revolution of the wheel of time has closed the pleasures and sorrows of another year, and added another to your life. You have enjoyed many pleasant seasons, and you think on them with delight; but your path has not been all sunshine. Some of you have had sorrow, and your young hearts have been almost broken when you have seen your father or your mother, your brother or your sister born away to the cheerless grave. Tears have rolled down your cheeks, and sorrow has thrown a pall of sadness over your young hearts. And while you remember these loved ones, now gone forever, do you not regret that you did not love them more, and were not kinder to them? You now call to mind many things you did that you are sorry for. But the past is gone forever. All you can do is to do better in days to come; and it is the wish of all good people, that all of you, my young friends, may grow wiser and better as time rolls on.

May you have a pleasant year; and may you find something every day to please and instruct you and help you in your good resolutions; and may each one of you build up for yourself a noble character of Christian manhood. I greet you with a Happy New Year. May all of you have a pleasant future, and grow up to be good and great. Again, to all a Happy New Year.

A Bargain.

DON'T MISS IT.

During the next thirty days we make the following offer: For $2.25 in cash we will send the ADVOCATE one year and a copy of "Christian Womanhood." The price of the ADVOCATE is $2; the price of the book, $1. This book has had an extensive sale, the sixth thousand being now on the market.

This offer is made only to new subscribers.

The following notices, selected from a vast number that have appeared in the church papers, will give some idea of the character of the work:

The best thesaurus of facts concerning womanhood with which we are acquainted.—Dr. C. F. Deems.

We hope it will be read by every man and woman in the church.—Florida Advocate.

We hope it will be extensively circulated and carefully read.—NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE.

Heartily recommended.—Dr. John E. Edwards.

This volume is the result of patient investigation and thoughtful study of the whole question treated. In the formulation of the case and in analyzing the testimony a vigorous, well-poised, legal mind is brought to bear. Dr. Black, moreover, establishes the points of his discussion as a skillful general establishes his lines in the face of an alert enemy. As he begins, so he closes, leaving the impression that a master in Israel has written bravely and tellingly of Christian womanhood, maintaining his position at every turn. The book is needed, and will long be in popular demand.—Sunday-School Magazine.

Don't miss this opportunity.

Our Church Papers.

A NOTE FROM THE FIELD.

Within the last fourteen weeks we have met eighteen of our Annual Conferences, at each of which, save one, we took the usual collection at the missionary anniversary. And while we have not pressed the collections as heretofore, because of the scarcity of money, yet these collections have ranged in amount from $100 to $300. The aggregate from the eighteen Conferences adding something more than $3,000 to the missionary funds.

We find church and missionary finances in much better condition than business finances. The shrinkage in values and things material has seemed to open to our people a clearer view of "the things which are not seen." "Less earthy and more spiritual" is the apparent effect of the times upon the church. Revival fires have swept through almost all the Conferences. As many as 2,000 conversions in one presiding elder's district, and as many as 1,000 in many of the districts in the several Conferences.

The aggregated increase in conversions and membership in our church this year will far exceed that of any recent year in her history.

The missionary debt has been reduced to where it does not now oppress, and to where it is easily handled, and may soon be entirely removed. We have urged, and the Conferences have pledged, to raise the entire assessment for the present year if possible. If only this be done, our missionary treasury will be in condition to meet all demands and make even advance movement.

There is loyalty, harmony, energy, hopefulness, and even more spiritual power, in the Annual Conferences than we have observed heretofore.

The large addition to our ranks during this Conference year makes us but the stronger for greater conquests during the year just opening upon us. But while we give thanks for the thousands saved, and rejoice in thickening and doubling ranks, let us trust not in "Israel's numbers," but let us "have faith in God."

H. C. MORRISON.

Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 20, 1893.

—Nashville Advocate.

We learn upon inquiry of Bishop Wilson that, in addition to the labors of the Annual Conferences, much time was given to the Epworth Leagues. This work made wide travel necessary. Nine addresses were delivered. In no part of the church has this society awakened more interest than in Texas, where many leagues have been formed. The good wrought through them is evident; especially, the young have enlisted and given themselves to the work which the organization is intended to promote. Notwithstanding the severe drought, which was distressing within the West and Northwest Texas Conferences, and in a less degree in the North Texas Conference, the reported number of conversions is greater than usual, and the financial condition encouraging. The drought left little for man or beast. Large sections were so far depopulated that it became necessary to combine charges so that support might be had for the preachers; and this, in turn, left a surplus of preachers, some of whom retired. Texas is truly a wonderful State—territory and resources for an empire, and withal is hospitable to Methodism. It now has five Annual Conferences, besides the German Conferences.—Baltimore Episcopal Methodist.

Editor Hoss, of the Nashville, reports himself as declining communications from "nearly everyone of our most popular Bishops." And not one of them will ever utter an evil word against him. It is only the pert and callow pulpiteer that trots around and voids his rheum on the editor who protected his readers from stilted nonsense, or gentlemen from an anonymous slanderer.—Richmond Advocate.

An unknown kinsman of the editor, Dr. Jacob Miller, of Oregon, sends $25 through his pastor, Rev. J. W. Craig, to be given to the superannuated preachers. If any of the rest of our relatives, of whom we are happy to say that we have many thousands, should conclude to follow the example of this generous act, we shall think none the less of them.—Nashville Advocate.

A handsome tablet to the memory of Dr. P. A. Peterson was unveiled at Trinity Church, this city, last Sunday afternoon. It was the gift of the Sunday-school children, and was presented through their superintendent, Mr. C. P. Rady—the pastor, Rev. Joshua S. Hunter, accepting it in behalf of the church.—Richmond Advocate.

Dr. H. B. Yacoubi, the native Armenian, whom the Missouri Conference has educated for missionary work, will spend the Winter in St. Louis in attendance upon the clinics at the hospitals. He will be glad to deliver lectures at any of the churches that desire him.—St. Louis Advocate

The Greensboro Watchman speaks in terms highly complimentary of the work of Dr. J. O. Keener, at Greensboro. No more important charge is there in the Alabama Conference than is Greensboro, and no man has filled it to greater satisfaction that has Dr. Keener.

At the late session of the California Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Los Angeles, Rev. H. M. Du Bose, D. D., editor of the Pacific Methodist Advocate, was appointed fraternal delegate to the next session of the Southern California Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church.—Pittsburgh Advocate.

The South Georgia Conference unanimously adopted the following about the Nashville Advocate:

Our connectional organ, the Christian Advocate, takes position among the foremost of that great family. It is worthy of a place in every Methodist home. We heartily endorse its attitude in the leading issues that are before the church to-day. In times like these, when the resiliveness under the restraint of constituted authority that pervades the country has begun to be manifest in the church, we are glad that our chief organ stands, not servilely, but steadily for respect for authority and obedience to law.—St. Louis Advocate.

D. A. LITTLE, P. E.

MR. EDITOR: Uncle Dave McRee, of Caseyville, Miss., died yesterday, the fifth instant, at 1 o'clock P. M., in his eightieth year. A good man gone to his rest. We will bury him to-morrow, Sunday.

H. P. LEWIS.

Brookhaven, Miss., Jan. 6, 1894.

The deceased was an uncle of the editor—the only surviving uncle on the maternal side. He had been ripening for the grave for some time. We have no doubt that he has joined the hosts above. To the sorrowing widow—one of the excellent of the earth—we express our deepest sympathies. Our tears mingle with hers over the new-made grave. May the great Head of the church comfort her and the other members of the bereaved family!

CHOICE ROSES AT 5 Cts.

Good & Reese's Roses are on their own roots.

OUR RAINBOW COLLECTION OF 20 ROSES FOR $1. PREPAID BY MAIL.

The roses we send are on their own roots, from 10 to 15 inches high, and will bloom freely this summer either in pots or planted in yard. They are hardy, ever bloomers. We send instructions with each order how to plant and care for them. Please examine the below list of 20 choice fragrant monthly roses, and see if you can duplicate them anywhere for an amount so small as $1. They are nearly all new kinds.—We guarantee them to reach you in good condition, and we also guarantee them to be the best dollar's worth of roses you have ever purchased. THE RAINBOW COLLECTION OF 20 ROSES FOR ONE DOLLAR MUST BE ORDERED COMPLETE.

The List:—Bridesmaid, the best pink rose by far ever introduced. Princess of Wales, amber yellow, deepening to orange. Snowflake, pure white, always in bloom. Princess de Rudolstadt, lovely coral red. Pearl of the Gardens, deep golden yellow. Beauty of Stapleford, bright rosy crimson. Queen of Fragrance, in clusters of six to ten roses, white edged pink. Rheingold, beautiful shades of saffron and fawn. Sunset, golden amber, resembles an "afterglow." Dr. Grill, coppery yellow and fawny rose. Duchess Marie Immaculate, an intermingling of bronze, orange, yellow, pink and crimson. Lady Castlereagh, soft rosy crimson and yellow. Papa Gontier, lively dark red. Star of Gold, the queen of all yellow roses. Waban, a great rose in bloom all the time. Lady Stanley, great garden rose. Viscountesse Wandrey, one of the best roses grown. Cleopatra, soft shell pink, lovely. Sappho, fawn suffused with rose. Letty Cobb, very chaste and beautiful.

THE PROOF OF THE PUDDING IS IN THE EATING. This applies to Floral matters as well as to matters culinary.

Ballinger, Texas, Nov. 29.

The GOOD & REESE CO., Springfield, O.: Gentlemen: The 20 ever blooming roses you sent me for $1, arrived yesterday in the most splendid condition, and allow me to say that I was absolutely surprised at the size of the stalks and the amount, length and thriftiness of the roots. I have wondered many times how you could afford to send out such roses for such a small price. Every home in the land should have their yard full of ever blooming roses at this price.

Yours,
Judge C. H. WILLINGHAM.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Sept. 20, 1893.

The GOOD & REESE CO., Springfield, O.: Gentlemen: I wish to thank you for the excellent assortment of roses contained in your Rainbow Collection. On May 3, I planted them, 19 of them lived. About six of them bloomed in June, since which all have bloomed either monthly or perpetual, true to their color. On Sept. 1, I counted 186 buds and blooms on the 19 roses. They were much admired by my friends and neighbors, and allow me to thank you for furnishing this source of pleasure so cheaply.

Very respectfully,
E. D. SMITH.

HOME CIRCLE.

ONE OF THESE DAYS.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

One of these days it will all be over,
Sorrow and mirth, and our loss and gain,
Meetings and partings of friend and lover,
Sunshine of pleasure and cloud of pain;
One of these days will our hands be folded,
One of these days will our work be done,
Finished the pattern our thoughts have moulded,
Ended our labors beneath the sun.

One of these days will the heart-ache leave us,
One of these days will the burden drop;
Never again shall the hope deceive us,
Never the hindrance our progress stop,
Freed from the chill of the vain endeavor,
Winged with the power of endless life,
One of these days we'll forget forever
All the defeats of the earthly strife.

One of these days we shall know the reason
Happy of much that perplexes now;
One of these days, in the Lord's good season,
Seal of his peace shall adorn the brow.
Blessed when brought out of tribulation;
Lifted to dwell in the Lord's own light,
Happy to share in the great salvation,
Well may we watch through the passing night.

One of these days the darling faces
Vanished here from the household band,
Haunting yet our familiar places,
Wooing us yet to the better land,
Smiling then in the life of heaven,
Once again will be all our own.
One of these days 'twill to us be given
To stand with our darlings before the throne.

Patiently then our cross we'll carry,
Joyously onward daily fare;
What though the word of the King may tarry,
One of these days he will want us there.
One of these days! Some pearl-bright morning?
One of these days! Some golden noon?
Or the evenings gray, or the midnight warning?
Even so, Lord, come late or soon.

Come, beloved, and find us serving,
Come, we cry with our longing soul,
Come to save from our faithless swerving,
Come to touch us and make us whole.
"Till he come!" 'tis our song and story;
One of these days its thrilling chord,
Echoing through the immortal glory,
We shall lift to our risen Lord.

The Power of One Living Bible.

In a young man's home there lived a young lady who was a relative of the family. Her fretful temper made all around her uncomfortable. She was sent to a boarding-school, and was absent some time. While there she became a true and earnest Christian. On her return she was so changed that all who knew her wondered and rejoiced. She was patient and cheerful, kind, unselfish, and charitable. The lips that always used to be uttering cross and bitter words, now spoke only those that were sweet, gentle and loving.

Her infidel cousin George was greatly surprised at this. He watched her closely for some time, till he was thoroughly satisfied that it was a real change that had taken place in his young cousin. Then he asked her what had caused this great change. She told him it was the grace of God which had made her a Christian and changed her heart.

He said to himself:

"I don't believe God has anything to do with it, though she thinks he has. But it is a wonderful change that has taken place in her, and I should like to be as good as she is, and I will be so."

Then he formed a set of good resolutions. He tried to control his tongue and his temper, and kept a strict watch over himself. He was always doing and saying what he did not wish to do and say. And as he failed time after time, he would turn and study his good cousin's example. He would read this living Bible and say to himself,

"How does it happen that she, who has not as much knowledge, as much strength of character as I have, can do what I can't do? She must have some help that I don't know of. It must be, as she says, the help of God. I will seek that help."

He went into his chamber, and prayed to God whose very existence he had denied. He prayed earnestly. God heard him, helped him, and he became a Christian.—Exchange.

Dr. T. L. Cuyler says: "What a young man earns in the day-time goes into his pocket, but what he spends at night goes into his character."

Don't Scold.

It is the cheery, gentle-mannered wife and mother who is a blessing to husband and home.

Certainly there are a score of things happening each day in a woman's life to rub the most angelic, peace-loving disposition the wrong way. No one knows that better than your humble servant.

Being told that the cultivation of the habit of scolding is bad form and unrefined—nay, that it is a positive vice, is not going to work reform if this trait has become part of a woman's personal make-up.

It is not meekness, which too often amounts to feminine insipidity, that will win the day. I have a friend, a merry, light-hearted creature, who seems to have things just about as she wants them. It is not that the family exchequer is in good condition; it is not because her better half is especially infatuated, or her children are especially sunny, but because she has long ago learned the preciousness of silence when things are all awry.

One day, when in a confidential mood, I said:

"You never seem to get ruffled. How is it that you manage so perfectly that unruly member which gives womankind such a deal of trouble?"

"Do I? That is a pretty compliment, and one which I appreciate, I assure you, more than words can express."

How her eyes sparkled and her cheeks flushed with real pleasure as she said this!

"I have learned," she continued, "the art of knowing when to speak and when to keep silent; of saving my nervous vitality by refusing to argue; of not taking up the cudgels in defense of unimportant issues; of bringing, in fact, good common sense to bear upon important questions, letting the trivial ones take care of themselves. Things have a way, you know, of getting into a topsyturvy state, which all the scolding, fretting and fuming will not straighten out. I can accomplish more in one hour if I resolutely drive irritating thoughts out of my mind than I could in a week if I allowed them to remain there. When I am very angry I try the method adopted by my dear mother in her management of us children. She would quietly order an hour's banishment, 'to think it over,' as she would say. At the end of the sixty minutes the one in durance vile would be very apt to calm down into a more peaceable frame of mind. I find a little 'think' all by myself is an excellent remedy for a perturbed spirit."

If you are angry, very angry, try what retirement will do for you. A woman who has lost her temper should know that she is not a presentable object for polite society. A woman given to tantrums need never hope to fill a very useful or extended sphere in life.

She may seem to have things about as she wants them for a time, but it will not take long for her to find out that her methods are as blighting to her hopes for happiness as a heavy frost is to the delicate peach blossom.

Then, too, the scolding woman will be old at an age which the pleasant-tempered, politic and repressive woman would call the hey day of youth.—Exchange.

How to Treat a Child.

If you would see a woman or a child, graceful, beautiful, and charming, you must find one that is loved. The child that dreads to be corrected or criticised for every word or movement never has a manner of elegance or an expression of charm. Fill your child's soul with an ideal of good manners, of benevolence and beauty; teach it abstractly to dislike vulgarity, selfishness, rudeness, and to feel that you love and admire it, and expect of it charming manners, and the work is accomplished.

It is impossible for a slave to have any style. If you would have your child dignified, you must treat it with dignity.

It is wrong to correct a child in public. Any proud child feels degraded by it. It should be a case of dire necessity when you find fault with a child before strangers, and to destroy a child's pride is to do him an irreparable injury. Take advantage of some intimate hour when parent and child are alone together, and then let the parent tenderly explain how the child has behaved ill the day before or that morning, and why the child's conduct was wrong, and how it should have behaved, and show the child that the parent respects and loves it, and believes in its capacity to do all good things. This will have ten times the effect of punishment, when the child is in a state of excitement and the parent usually angry.

Get in the habit of explaining the reason of things to your child. Let there be as little confusion in its mind as possible. Above all, keep the fact of your love uppermost in the child's mind, and let it understand that you have no wish to domineer over it, only that being older and wiser, and loving the child so much, you would save it from its inexperience, that this is your duty, that you are teaching it to be its own master.—Harper's Bazar.

THE BROWN THRUSH.

BY LUCY LARCOM.

There's a merry brown thrush sitting up in the tree.
"He's singing to me! He's singing to me!"
And what does he say, little girl, little boy?
"O, the world's running over with joy!
Don't you hear? Don't you see? Hush! Look! In my tree
I'm as happy as happy can be!"

And the brown thrush keeps singing: "A nest do you see,
And five eggs, hid by me in the juniper-tree?
Don't meddle! don't touch! little girl, little boy,
Or the world will lose some of its joy!
Now I'm glad! now I'm free!
And I always shall be,
If you never bring sorrow to me."

So the merry brown thrush sings away in the tree,
To you and to me, to you and to me!
And he sings all the day, little girl, little boy:
"O, the world's running over with joy!
But long it won't be,
Don't you know? don't you see?
Unless we are as good as good can be?"

Economize Your Strength.

There is one word I must say as the old year dies. Let false economy die with it. So many of us are practicing it daily, without in the least realizing it; women, old before their time; tired and worn while still young, all because they have saved and economized everywhere and everything but themselves. The spare room and the parlor are furnished at the sacrifice of the living rooms; the home dresses not warm and tasteful that the appearance on Sunday may be as good as our neighbor's.

Realize that you are your husband's and children's most precious possession. Use your pretty things where they will most enjoy them; have the home dresses bright and cheerful. Pretty colors cost no more than dingy drabs. Remember that happiness radiates from your own, not your neighbor's heart. If you are worn out nervously, there is no inclination to wear a pretty gown, the children will be impatiently corrected, and thus much of your power destroyed. You can not be your husband's companion and your children's confidant; you can not read, and thus keep in touch with the outside world.

Break the shackles of habit; economize first of all your own strength, no matter what "they say."—Dixie Farmer.

Who Was the Gentleman?

One cold Winter day an Italian stood at a street corner grinding from his organ some doleful music. A group of children, large and small, were gathered around him. Among them were several good-sized boys, who seemed disposed to make sport of the organist. One of them said to the others, "Boys, I'm going to hit the old fellow's hat." In a moment he had a snowball in his hand, and he threw it so violently that it knocked the Italian's hat off, and it fell into the gutter.

What do you suppose the organ grinder did? Strike the boy, knock him down, shake his fist at him, curse him, swear at him? Some men would have done this after being treated in that way. But he did nothing of the sort. He stooped down and picked up his hat, knocked the snow from it, and put it on his head. He then turned to the rude boy, bowed gracefully, and said, "Now, I'll play you a tune to make you merry." Who was the gentleman, the boy or the Italian?—Ram's Horn.

Johnny's Calculations.

Johnny was poring over his mental arithmetic. It was a new study to him and he found it interesting. When Johnny undertook anything he went about it with heart, head and hand.

He sat on his high stool at the table, while his father sat just opposite. He was such a tiny fellow, scarcely large enough to hold the book, you would think, much less to study and calculate. But he could do both, as you shall see.

Johnny's father had been speaking to his mother, and Johnny had been so intent in his book that he had not heard a word; but as he leaned back in his high chair to rest a moment, he heard his father say: "Dean got beastly drunk at the club last night; drank ten glasses of wine. I was disgusted with the fellow."

Johnny looked up with bright eyes.

"How many did you drink?"

"I drank one, my son," said the father, smiling down upon his little boy.

"Then you were only one-tenth drunk," said the boy, reflectively.

"John!" cried his parents sternly in one breath. But Johnny continued with a studious air:

"Why, yes; if ten glasses of wine makes a man beastly drunk, one glass will make him one-tenth part drunk, and—"

"There! there!" interrupted his father, biting his lips to hide the smile that would come; "I guess it's bedtime for you, and we'll have no more arithmetic to-night."

So Johnny was tucked away in bed and went sound asleep, turning the problem over and over to see if he was wrong. And just before he lost himself in slumber he had thought: "One thing is sure, if Dean hadn't taken the one glass, he would not have been drunk. So it is the safest way never to take one; and I never will." And the next thing he was snoring, while Johnny's father was thinking: "There's something in Johnny's calculation, after all. It is not safe to take one glass, and I will ask Dean to sign a total abstinence pledge with me to-morrow." And he did so, and they both kept it. So great things grew out of Johnny's studying mental arithmetic, you see.—Temperance Banner.

Making Honest Men.

Who does not believe that on the honesty of our men depends the safety of our republic? And does not the honesty of our men depend in large measure on what their mothers are and how they were trained in boyhood and youth?

If those men lately convicted of fraud and embezzlement (an elegant term this for thievery) had been trained in boyhood to be just in swapping knives, not to cheat at marbles, not to take advantage of those less able than themselves, to be true to trusts reposed in them, does anyone suppose they would now be filling felons' cells?

The boy is father to the man. "As you are now," was the constant saying of a principal to his pupils, "you will be till you die. If you are faithful in your discharge of duty, obedient to law, reverent toward God now, you will be so when you are grown, and as long as you live."

In the children is mirrored the mother's soul and life. What she is impresses them more even than what she says or does. The delicate films of their consciousness are infinitely more sensitive than those on any photographic plate, and, unlike these, can not be destroyed or effaced. And when she sleeps in dust the images on them stand out clear and indestructible in the hearts of her children.

The First Wrong Button.

"Dear me!" said little Janet, "I buttoned just one button wrong, and that makes all the rest go wrong," and she tugged and fretted, as if the poor buttons were at fault for her trouble.

"Patience, patience, my dear," said mama. "The next time look out for the first wrong button, then you'll keep all the rest right. And," added mama, "look out for the first wrong deed of any kind; another and another is sure to follow."

Janet remembered how one day, not long ago, she struck baby Alice. That was the first wrong deed.

Then she denied having done it. That was another.

Then she was unhappy and cross all day because she had told a lie. What a long list of buttons fastened wrong just because the first one was wrong.

Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass" lamp-chimneys do not break from heat, not one in a hundred.

They are made of tough clear glass, clear as crystal.

They fit the lamps they are made for. Shape controls the draft. Draft contributes to proper combustion; that makes light; they improve the light of a lamp.

MALLETTE—On Saturday, Dec. 16, 1893, DANIEL PIERRE MALLETTE, son of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Mallette, of Green county, Miss., quietly passed away.

We had known Pierre but a few short weeks, and as pupil and teacher those short weeks were fraught with many pleasant memories. Never had we a pupil more earnest and honest in his work. We donht not that had the reaper spared him, he would have been a source of pleasure to his family, an ornament to society, a useful member of the Methodist Church, of which he was a member, and an honor to his State. We can not but ask ourselves the question: Why is it that death is allowed to reach forth his icy hands and pluck from earth its rarest flowers?

When we remember that the death of the righteous is but a transplanting to a purer and a far more glorious realm, all murmuring should cease. Then, dear father and mother, what a source of consolation to have heard from his lips the sweet words, "I am ready when he calls me!" So take courage, dear parents, and never cease to be truly grateful and meekly submissive to the will of him who doeth all things well, and for the good of those who love and serve him.

FITZ—SAMUEL H. FITZ was born Dec. 8, 1874, and died Dec. 24, 1893. He was brought to see the need of a Savior early in life, and during the Summer of 1879 was brightly converted under the ministry of Bro. Hargrove. Though young, he took a firm stand for Christ, and was always ready to pray in public, testify and conduct prayer meetings. Shortly after his conversion he felt called to the ministry, and began saving money to educate himself for his life-work. He left home early last Fall to go to Burges to school, where he was taken sick with typhoid-malarial fever, and was moved home about two weeks ago, where he died in the peace of the gospel of Christ.

This is a severe affliction to his parents, yet "their light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for them a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," and in the meantime they are enabled to look back with joy to the fact that their son while with them was obedient, kind to his mother in her blindness, industrious and devoted to Christ. Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.

BIXLER—Mrs GEORGIA A. BIXLER, wife of Dr. J. B. Bixler, was born Aug. 18, 1853, in Bossier parish, La.; married Dr. Bixler, Feb. 28, 1871; died Dec. 25, 1893.

Sister Bixler was a member of the M. E. Church, South; a loving and kind wife and mother, and a true Christian. She leavee a husband, five children and many friends to mourn her loss. Sister Bixler had a presentiment of her death two months beforehand. She told her husband while in health that she would not live to see the new year. Her house was set in order and she was ready to meet the Master at his coming. Let the bereaved ones cherish a hope of a blessed reunion with the dear departed in the "home over there."

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

They whose hearts are whole and strong,
Loving holiness,
Living clean from soil of wrong,
Wearing truth's white dress—
They unto no far-off height
Wearily need climb;
Heaven to them is close in sight
From these shores of time.

Only the anointed eye
Sees in common things—
Gleams dropped daily from the sky,
Heavenly blossomings.
To the hearts where light has birth
Nothing can be drear;
Budding through the bloom of earth,
Heaven is always near.

All hindrances are tests. They try the reality of our resolutions and the genuineness of our purposes. A black sky of a Sunday morning tests the strength of a Christian. Those who are physically and morally weak stay at home. This is but a homely illustration of one of the constant truths of human life. God is every day testing us, and in every way. He himself knows us; he has no need for himself to test us. But we do not any of us know ourselves perfectly well. And the tests which come with hindrances bring us revelations of ourselves. We all imagine that we are patient and forgiving and honest and faithful, until we are tested. After that, imagination is translated into knowledge. That is one of the blessings which God sends with every difficulty and grief and trial. Every day we are tested. And the tests dispel delusions. We come to see ourselves as we are. We discover where we are weak. And thus we find out where we need to fortify ourselves and to get strong.—Rev. George Hodges.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The State Board of Liquidation has advertised its readiness to purchase for cash, to the amount of $425,000, the consolidated and constitutional bonds of Louisiana.

Governor McKinley was inaugurated as chief magistrate of Ohio on Jan. 8 There was a big demonstration in the way of a parade of military and Republican clubs.

The Casino, Music and Liberal Arts Halls, at the World's Fair Grounds, in Chicago, were burned on the night of Jan. 8. Many exhibits awaiting shipment were destroyed by the flames. The loss is estimated in the millions.

Reports to the comptroller of the currency from nine national banks in New Orleans show resources $25,740 995 and reserve 29.84 per cent.; the loans and discounts were $13 141 936 and the individual deposits $15 490,301.

Since the departure of the Louisiana State Lottery from this city at the close of last year, the shops of most of the ticket vendors have remained open, and vendors are arrested daily for selling tickets for the New Orleans Premium Club.

Notwithstanding the objections of the residents on Peters avenue, this city, to a railroad track on that street, the track was laid on last Sunday by a force of 1,000 employees. The protesting property holders threaten a suit, attacking even the original franchise.

It is reported that a syndicate with a capital of $10 000 000 has been organized in St. Louis for the purpose of developing anthracite coal lands in the State of Sonora, Mex. The company proposes to acquire 3,000,000 acres on the Pacific coast, which is said to be the only anthracite land in Mexico.

In the courts of Indiana there has been a suit of much interest. A liquor saloon was opened in a building, which adjoins the residence of Mrs. Mary Haggard. She sued the saloon keeper for damages because of this. The case was carried up to the Supreme Court of Indiana, and that court has rendered a decision that the saloon keeper is liable for damages to her.

Gold discoveries still progress at a surprising rate in Colorado, and presently the yellow metal will be scarcely more valued than the white. The last reported, which is said to be the greatest ever made in the State, is on the Camelia Lode claim, in the Cripple Creek district. Thirty-three feet under ground the lead was struck. It is thirty inches wide, and assays an average value of $1 405 a ton.

Anthony Comstock, whose mission in life is to protect the morals of New York City, has declared war against the nickel-in-the-slot gambling machines, which, he says, are great corrupters of the youth of the city. There are said to be no less than 10 000 of these machines in the saloons and tobacconist shops of the city, inviting the passers-by to put in their nickels and take their chances of winning something.

The tariff bill will occupy the entire attention of the House during the week, or, if not the bill itself, then the row over the attempt to get it before the House. After four days of fruitless effort to secure the presence of a voting Democratic quorum, the House adopted, just before adjournment, Saturday night, the extreme expedient of ordering the arrest of all members absent without leave. Of the forty members absent without leave twenty-one are Democrats and nineteen Republicans.

FOREIGN.

Yellow fever has broken out in Rio de Janeiro, adding its burdens to the suffering already endured by the people of that city.

It is reported that since the outbreak of the disease there not many months ago a thousand and more deaths from cholera have occurred in the island of Teneriffe, one of the Canaries. Trade has been paralyzed, and little has been known of the state of affairs, as vessels have avoided touching at the island.

The raising of the American minister to Germany, the Hon. Theodore B. Runyon, to the rank of ambassador, has just been given fitting significance by a special compliment paid by the Emperor, who marked the occasion by driving up to the embassy on New Year's morning and sending up his card, personally inviting Mr. Runyon to a reception.

The cold was severe throughout Great Britain, last week, in places the thermometer registering the lowest point known; while the lowest reported temperature on Jan. 5 was 5 to 10 above, it involves as much suffering as would a temperature of 20 degrees below zero in the United States. The people were entirely unprepared for such a terrible cold wave, and the result is that the suffering among the poor is intense.

Recent advices from Sicily have reported a number of more or less serious riots, in which it has been necessary to call upon the troops. In several instances the soldiery have been compelled to fire on the people, with fatal results, of course, in each case. The immediate cause of the disturbances is the collection of what is known as the octroi duties by the local or district officials. These taxes are violently opposed by the peasantry.

Reason? BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic.

PERIODICALS.

Our Little Men and Women, for January, is suggestive of a "Happy New Year" greeting. The author of Lady Gay begins to tell about "A Dozen Good Times," and Greta Bryar in "Nurse Powell's Giant" suggests something unique on Electricity. "My Pussy's Adventures," by C. P. L., is a charming story. Poems and shorter stories by Mrs. M. F. Butts, Lavinia S. Goodwin, Lilia Barnard and Helen A. Hawley need only their authors' names to tell of their worth. The new feature begins in this number, 'Our Kindergarten," under the charge of Miss Sara E. Wiltse. Price $1.00 a year; 10 cents a number. D. Lothrop Company, Boston, publishers.

Godey's Magazine, for January, issued Dec. 15, has a rich and varied table of contents. The complete novel in this number is by Franklyn W. Lee, and is called Mam'selle Paganini. L. Clarkson has a Christmas story, Monsieur Vigot's Diamonds; Julius Chambers one called The Princess of Barron Island; Conyers C. Converse contributes a parlor comedy, Till Luther Proposes; Herbert Wilbur Green writes of an incident in the life of Ole Bull, and Florence Hull conducts The Home Department. The poems are by Flavel Scott Mines, Frances Isabel Currie, Eleanor Waddle, Harry Romaine and W. J. Lampton. All the departments are up to their standard.

Table Talk announces in its prospectus for the coming year that additional advantages and redoubled effort will achieve for it a higher standard than ever before. It will present, in the culinary department, all new dishes both foreign and American, and the "Inquiry Department" will, as heretofore, be open free to all subscribers, and questions answered, recipes given. "The Now Bill of Fare" will be replete with the latest styles of table decorations and service and decorative meals. The fashion articles and general reading never fail to interest, instruct and enable many a busy woman to keep up with the times as well as lighten household duties. Published by Table Talk Publishing Co., Philadelphia, Pa., at $1 per year. Sample copy free.

Frank R. Stockton's letters, under the title of "Pomona's Travels," can only be found in the January Ladies' Home Journal. Mrs. Burton Kingsland gives suggestions for a new form of entertainment under the title of "Fifty-Cent Luncheon Clubs." A sketch of Mrs. Donelson Wilcox, who was born in the White House during the administration of Andrew Jackson, furnishes the biography. The second installment of Mr. William Dean Howells' "My Literary Passions" is as full of interest as the first. The editor discusses with much earnestness the vexed question of the education of our American girls. Miss Julia Magruder's serial, "A Beautiful Allen," furnishes the fiction. The four prize hymns, to which were awarded the prizes in "The Journal's Musical Series" of last year, are given in their entirety. Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett and Mr. Birch continue to delight with fact and picture concerning 'Little Lord Fauntleroy." J. Macdonald Oxley writes of "Literary Recreation Clubs." Mothers will be interested in Miss Scovil's "Kindergarten Work at Home," and all housekeepers will be helped by Miss Parloa's "Household Hints." The Ladies' Home Journal, with a circulation of over 700,000, is published by The Curtis Publishing Company, of Philadelphia, for one dollar a year.

The Treasury of Religious Thought begins the year with an excellent number. The reader will find in the monthly visits of this magazine an invaluable repository of sermons, articles, illustrations and other matter admirably adapted to the wants of any preacher and Christian worker. The portrait of the Rev. Russell T. Hall furnishes the frontispiece, his sermon has the first place, and a view of his church, with a sketch of his life, is also given. There is a full sermon by Dr. O. P. Gifford, an Expository Lecture by Rev. J. F. Forbes, and Sermonic Thoughts by Drs. MacDuff and Alexander, and Revs. S. G. Hillyer and W. M. Roger. Prof. G. H. Schodde discusses The Divinity of Christ in the Old Testament; Dr. Cuyler writes of Famous Hymn Writers; Dr. E. M. Popular Everywhere.

To-day Hood's Sarsaparilla stands at the head in the medicine world, admired in prosperity and envied in merit by thousands of would-be competitors. It has a larger sale than any other medicine before the American public and probably greater than all other sarsaparillas and blood purifiers combined. Such success proves merit.

If you are sick, is it not the medicine for you to try? Hood's Sarsaparilla Cures.

Cruelty to Children.

We make the following extract from the Times-Democrat's report of the proceedings of the monthly meeting of the Louisiana Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children:

The president, Alfred E. Clay, said that he was glad the philanthropic public had confidence in the society and its method of work, and intrusted their benefactions to our judgment for distribution. The list of helpless is gradually increasing. One lady this month has set aside $1 500, the interest of which is to be paid to the home each month as long as she lives.

This month's work has been chiefly in the interest of the children of need. But few acts of cruelty have marred the history of the month, but the need and suffering have been greater than at any previous time.

It had carried sunshine into several families where half-clad and hungry children were shivering and crying for bread. In one family there was a helpless sick mother and seven children; in another the same condition, and four children, and in another a helpless father and four children.

It has in the hospital, now slowly recovering, a young boy whose brother last year died of neglect, and a little girl, whose mother, in a fit of temporary insanity, had shot her.

It is now working on two cases of infanticide, and hope to state soon that the wretches have been caught and are in the hands of the law.

The work has extended over Algiers, Gretna and one or two other parishes of the State this month.

It has been called upon to find three lost children, and to remove five young girls from immoral surroundings. It has placed in asylums or private homes, 6; in the charity hospital, 3; and sent one person to the Home for Homeless.

There have been seventeen children abandoned by the fathers or mothers this month, for whom the society has interested itself. It has distributed nearly sixty suits of clothes to the most needy children. It has had three children in the Waifs' Home. In all it has bettered the condition of one hundred and eighteen children this month.

Mr. Clay announced his intention of making a tour of the State in the interest of the society. He hoped to interest a great many people in the work of the society.

The president read the following letter:

"To the Board of Directors of the Louisiana Society Prevention of Cruelty to Children:

"Dear Friends: In answer to your request, made at the December meeting, that I relinquish my ministerial work and devote my time exclusively to the work of the society, I beg leave to say that after much thought and consideration, I have done so. At the last Annual Conference of my church, Dec. 14, 1893, I asked and received a location.

I now enter fully and entirely into the work, in which I find the supremest delight, and which is so much needed in this State.

It must not be forgotten by you, my co-workers, that I have enrendered every means of making a living for myself and family, and that it now becomes incumbent upon you to so interest yourselves and others in our work that we may, at least, be fed. I have no fears as to the future so long as we do this work faithfully and impartially. The people of this great State can judge of our work whether if it be of God and in the best interests of the most needy of the earth, and as they judge they will support us.

A. E. CLAY."

At the suggestion of the president the following Committee on Ways and Means was appointed, consisting of three vice-presidents and two directors: Page M. Baker, Dr. S. E. Hale, Mrs. Wm. T. Hardie, Mrs. Henry Haag and David Zable. The Auditing Committee is composed of Henry Haag and Lyman S. Widney.

$100 Reward, $100.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment, Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

A capilone and hypercritical man, a minister himself, once said to a fellow-clergymen, after having heard him deliver a strong discourse on the divine origin of Christianity: "I heard you preach that sermon twenty years ago, and I remember everything in it, even the illustrations." "And I," said the other, "heard you preach thirty years ago, but I do not remember a word you said." A sermon that stays in the memory thirty years is surely worthy of repetition. Thoughts that are original, well related and forcibly put will not suffer in being repeated. It is only the limping, ill-clad, nondescript brood of ideas that provokes displeasure or resentment at its reappearance.—Pacific Advocate.

A SERMON IN RHYME.

If you have a friend worth loving,
Love him. Yes, and let him know
That you love him ere life's evening
Tinge his brow with sunset glow.
Why should good words ne'er be said
Of a friend—till he is dead?

If you hear a song that thrills you,
Sung by any child of song,
Praise it. Do not let the singer
Wait deserved praises long.
Why should one who thrills your heart
Lack the joy you may impart?

If you hear a prayer that moves you,
By its humble, pleading tone,
Join it. Do not let the seeker
Bow before his God alone.
Why should not your brother share
The strength of "two or three" in prayer?

If you see the hot tears falling
From a brother's weeping eyes,
Share them. And by kindly sharing,
Own your kinship with the skies.
Why should anyone be glad
When a brother's heart is sad?

If a silvery laugh goes rippling
Through the sunshine on his face,
Share it. 'Tis the wise man's saying—
For both grief and joy a place.
There's health and goodness in the mirth
In which the honest laugh has birth.

If your work is made more easy
By a friendly, helping hand,
Say so. Speak up brave and truly,
Ere the darkness veil the land.
Should a brother workman dear
Falter for a word of cheer?

Scatter thus your seeds of kindness,
All enriching as you go—
Leave them. Trust the Harvest Giver,
He will make each seed to grow.
So, until its happy end,
Your life shall never lack a friend.

The Influence of Methodism.

BY J. M. SKINNER.

The following paper was read before the Epworth League of Como, Miss., Dec. 31, 1893:

The subject I am to discuss is one upon which volumes have been written by the ablest scholars and divines the nineteenth century has produced. Indeed, it is a subject which touches all the vital operations of the most active and aggressive century of the Christian era. With the time at my disposal, I can do little more than briefly outline it. Suffice it to say in the beginning that "the Methodists themselves were the least result of the Methodist revival." Formally organized at a time when Walpole's good-natured contempt for all those whose calumnies were heaped upon him for his short-sighted policy of "harmony at home and peace abroad," and his dismissal of honored dignitaries from their offices had well-nigh plunged England into another civil war, Methodism came in for no small credit in bringing about those changes that "bridged the difficulties and allowed the political energy of the nation to return to its natural channel."

To the casual reader, and vastly more to the close student of history, is apparent the moral degeneracy of the century and a half preceding the Methodist revival. This was so not only in England, but on the Continent as well. From the day that Luther raised his knees from the papal steps of penance to the culmination of the Reformation in Methodism, politics was one vast scheme of intrigue, while religion was little more than frigid formality. True, Puritanism had offered a check to the libidinous actions and practices of this gross age, but once in power, Puritanism had found its level in a formal austerity as revolting as the former indulgences had been. Then followed the Restoration, which "opened wide the flood-gates of licentiousness and vice," making the court a brothel and the theater the temple at whose magic shrine, decorated by the incomparable foulness of literature, the dignitaries of the realm worshiped. The clergy were not only ignorant, but grossly immoral, while the study of nature and natural phenomena had gone so far that Butler's Analogy was brought forth in reproof. With such unauspicious surroundings, Methodism appeared, to use Mr. Wesley's words, "just at the time when we wanted little of filling up the measure of our iniquities."

With this preliminary sketch of history we can the better appreciate the influence of Methodism, which, as a light from the eternal world, manifested itself in dispelling the gloom of doubt and vice and licentiousness, and "strangely warmed" the hearts of men with the wonderful and quickening pulsations of that "Spirit which beareth witness with our spirits that we are the children of God."

Into the church, fashioned according to the precise rules of formality, Methodism breathed the breath of true life which made it a living, active and aggressive power under God for breaking to hungry souls the Bread of Life, which brings contentment and a real joy. What if wits laughed and cynics jeered! What if Mr. Wesley was called an ascetic more austere in his manner of life than the Roundheads! The Word was preached with power, and it was fully manifest that "now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be."

This was not all accomplished in a day. But the enthusiasm of Methodism was so intense that the clergy awoke from the lethargy of centuries, applied themselves to the mental discipline necessary as a preparation for instructive preaching, and, above all, sought a higher moral life and a deeper spiritual experience. Instead of spending their time fox-hunting, through the direct influence of Methodism the clergy were compelled to study and prepare sermons, and, instead of making long visits, during which inefficient curates officiated, they were aroused to the importance of directing the religious affairs of their own parishes.

We are, or should be, a very modest and humble people; but it is certainly a source of gratification to us that Methodism has earnestly taught and firmly maintained from its beginning to the present, that we can know when we "have passed from death unto life," and that wherever in Christendom to-day there is a manifestation of spiritual power in church work, it can be directly traced to Methodism.

Of the profligacy of those times it is hardly necessary for me to speak. It has been estimated that at the advent of Methodism every sixth house on the principal streets of London was an alehouse. This tells its own story and needs no comment. But you may be curious to know whether this was local or general; also what class of people was infected. I have the authority of history for saying that all England and Continental Europe, so far as a reasonable degree of civilization existed, were in "the gall of bitterness and the bonds of iniquity." All classes of society were infected. Clergymen shared this profligacy with their demoralized parishioners. The cynical prime minister, Horace Walpole, who believed that the "enthusiasm" of Methodism would soon pass away, was a calculating, licentious drunkard. If we find this condition in the upper class, who can portray the abject degradation of the lower classes? While these evils have not altogether disappeared, Methodism has been a wonderful check to their progress.

In literature Beecher says that the most dangerous writers in the English language are those whose artful insinuations and mischievous polish reflect upon the mind the image of impurity, without presenting the impurity itself. Such was the moral condition of the church at the time of which I speak that two eminent clergymen of High Churchism were the most licentious writers of the age, and their writings an abomination in the sight of Heaven. Need I say that I refer to Dean Swift and Dean Sterne?

Indeed, the wits of the age vied with each other in serving "literary banquets of indelicacies that would have brought blood to the face of a Roman priest, and have shamed an actor of the school of Aristophanes." Yet this "witty, brilliant, suggestive indecency" was not only tolerated, but complimented for the "sake of its genius." The ten plagues were turned loose upon our literature; "water was turned to blood, frogs and lice crept and hopped over our most familiar things—the couch, the cradle, and the bread-trough." Why was this? Because the age tolerated it.

The influence, outgrowth and development of Methodism turned the tide of desolation in literature and gave us Browning, Macaulay, Tennyson and Ruskin, in England; Longfellow, Emerson, Irving, Hawthorne, Lowell and Holmes, in America, whose names are synonyms for purity, and whose influence is healthful and inspiring.

You may think that I am claiming the earth and "the fullness thereof" for Methodism, but I am claiming only that which is distinctly indicated by history.

Though founded in an aristocratic university, Methodism early partook of that spirit of philanthropy which sees something good in everything God has created. Accordingly the prisons were visited; those confined there were instructed and pointed to the Lamb of God, with whom "stone walls do not a prison make, nor iron bars a cage." Many were imprisoned and subject to all the prison indignities whose only crime was poverty. Here again the influence of Methodism shows itself in bringing about a general change, and making prisons reformatory as well as punitive, at the same time infusing a spirit of clemency and wisdom into the penal laws of the realm. These changes were far-reaching in their influence and elevating in their spirit. Green says that the same spirit, manifested in another direction, abolished the slave trade—that traffic in human souls on which the Almighty can but look with condemnation.

The impulse given to popular education is one of the most important outcomes of Methodism. Mr. Wesley was profoundly learned, and one of the greatest organizers this world has ever seen. Consequently, it was but natural for him to enlist his energies in the cause of popular education, which had been entirely neglected—the nobility being all who were considered entitled to an education. As a result of this great influence, exerted in the first years of the revival, Methodism to-day has more schools, greater investments in school property, and a greater general education diffused among the masses, than any other organization in the world.

But I may say that the crowning triumph of Methodism has been the emancipation and elevation of woman to her proper position and her sacred rights. The study of history presents no sadder spectacle than the debasement and servitude to which woman was subject in early times. At the time of the Methodist revival women of the court, and a few others, were accorded a half-way consideration; but to the vast numbers whose lives were beautiful even in their forced seclusion, no ray of light pierced the blackness of that darkness which seemed eternal in its very nature. But, thanks to the influence of Methodism! "the middle wall of partition has been broken down," and to-day she enjoys a social, intellectual and, in many cases, a professional equality (superiority) with him who formerly lorded it over her with such high-handed authority.

I have briefly sketched a few only of the many influences of Methodism which will be felt until Gabriel, with one foot on the land, the other on the sea, shall proclaim that time shall be no more.

Mission Rooms.

DEAR BROTHER: Emphasis laid upon the regular collections is the true basis for successful financiering at home and aggressive movement abroad. The Board determined upon this policy at Kansas City. The secretaries have strictly adhered to the same and united upon a movement for early collections, which, if carried out, will rednce our interest account and fill our treasury.

EARLY COLLECTIONS MEAN FULL COLLECTIONS.

The treasurer of the Conference Board of Missions of one of our largest Annual Conferences recently asserted that in his experience, where a pastor or presiding elder began during the first quarter to secure and collect the missionary assessment, he almost invariably reported full collections; and, further, that the year his Conference resolved to secure its assessment during the first quarter, it reached the highest financial level in its history.

The converse of the above proposition—viz.: that late collections mean short collections—needs no better illustration than that recurring at every Annual Conference where the preacher, having delayed until the closing months of the year, has been thwarted by sickness, floods, drouth, or financial disaster. Deficient collections mean to the Board either delayed drafts, imperilled work and suffering missionaries, or money borrowed from banks, creating a heavy draft for interest. The statement of the interest account alone is enough to cause every Methodist preacher to spring to the support of the proposed movement. During the past eight years the interest necessitated by delayed collections has amounted to more than $25,000.

How shall this waste be stopped, our obligations met, and our mission fields reinforced? By prompt and hearty co-operation with us in this matter.

Your Annual Conference, at its recent session, fell into line with other Conferences, and pledged itself to move during the first quarter for collections in full for foreign missions.

We beg of you, then, to take immediate and active steps to consummate this work within the bounds of your charge.

I. G. JOHN,
H. C. MORRISON,
W. R. LAMBUTH,
Secretaries.

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 15, 1893

[The above communication from our Missionary Secretaries ought to bring about a revolution in our method of raising missionary money. Just think of it!—$25,000 paid out in the last eight years for interest. That sum could have been saved by early collections. Shall we perpetuate such a policy? Shall we continue such a leakage year after year when we have it in our power to stop it? Let all our stewards think of the unwisdom of our present policy, and resolve that they will co-operate heartily with their pastors in an effort to raise the whole of their foreign missionary money in the beginning of the year. It would be wise to do this even if all the money were sure to be raised in the Fall. But this is not the case. As a rule, late collections will be small collections. We hope the time is not far distant when all our missionary money will be raised during the first quarter.—EDITOR.]

What Kind of Prayer?

BY REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

The Week of Prayer has become an established "institution" throughout our land and a large part of the Christian world. It has been attended with precious blessings on many hearts who have come to God in the right way and with the right spirit. But what kind of prayer should we be offering next week if we hope to prevail with God?

Some people regard prayer as the mere rehearsal of a set form of solemn words, learned largely from the Bible, or in common use in devotional meetings. It is a lip-service, and often nothing more. Genuine prayer is a believing soul's direct converse with God. Phillips Brooks defined it in four words as a "true wish sent Godward." By it adoration, confession of sin, and petition for mercies and blessings ascend to the throne, and by means of it precious gifts are brought down from heaven. The pull of our prayer may not move the everlasting throne, but—like the pull on a rope from the bow of a boat—it may draw us into closer fellowship with God and fuller harmony with his wise and holy will.

(1) This is the first characteristic of prevailing prayer. "Delight thyself in the Lord, and he shall give thee the desires of thy heart." Too many prayers are born of selfishness, and are too much like dictation or demand. None of God's promises are unconditional. We have no such spiritual assets standing to our credit that we have a right to draw our checks, and demand that God shall pay them. The indispensable quality of all right asking is a right spirit towards our heavenly Father. When a soul feels such an entire submissiveness towards God that it delights in seeing him reign and in having his glory advanced, it may fearlessly pour out its desires, for then the desires of God and the desires of that submissive soul will agree. God loves to give unto them who love to let him have his way. They find their happiness in the chime of their own wishes with the will of God.

(2) The second trait of prevailing prayer is that it aims at a mark and knows what it is after. When we enter a shop or a store, we ask the salesman to hand us the particular article we want. There is an enormous amount of pointless, prayerless praying done in our devotional meetings. It begins with nothing, and ends nowhere. The model prayers mentioned in the Bible were short, and right to the mark. "God be merciful to me, a sinner!" exclaims the humble penitent. "Lord, save me!" cries sinking Peter. "Come down ere my child die," is the entreaty of the heart-stricken nobleman. Old Rowland Hill used to say: "I like short, ejaculatory prayer. It reaches heaven before the devil can get a shot at it."

(3) In the next place, the prayer that has power with God must be a prepaid prayer. If we expect a letter to reach its destination, we put a stamp on it; otherwise it goes to the Dead Letter Office. There is what may be called a Dead Prayer Office, and thousands of well-worded petitions get buried up there. All of God's promises have their conditions. We must comply with those conditions, or we can not expect the blessings coupled with the promises. No farmer is such an idiot as to look for a crop of wheat unless he has plowed his field and sowed his seed. In prayer we must first be sure that we are doing our part if we expect God to do his part. There is a legitimate sense in which every Christian should do his utmost for the answering of his own prayers. When a certain venerable minister was called on to pray in a missionary convention, he first fumbled in his pocket for some money, and when he had tossed the coin into the plate, he said, "I can not pray until I have given something." He prepaid his prayer. For the churches in these days to pray, "Thy kingdom come!" and then spend more money on jewelry and cigars than on the Board of Foreign Missions, looks almost like a solemn farce. God has no blessings for stingy pockets. When I hear requests for prayer for the conversion of a son or a daughter, I say to myself, How much is that parent doing to win that child to Christ? The godly wife who makes her daily life attractive to her husband, has a right to ask God for the conversion of that husband. She is co-operating with the Holy Spirit and prepaying her heart's request. God never defaults, but he requires that we prove our faith by our works, and that we never ask for a blessing that we are not willing to labor for. Those churches which imagine that a "Week of Prayer" will answer all the purpose without any effort to win souls, or any self-sacrifice, or any co-operation with the Holy Spirit, will find their prayers as barren as the east wind. Genuine self-denying prayer is always prepaid. The offerer is ready to do anything in order to secure the blessing which his soul desires.

(4) Another essential of prevailing prayer is that it be the prayer of faith, and that it be offered in the name of Jesus Christ. "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son." Much is said about "wrestling prayer," and the phrase is often misleading. The chief wrestling that we are to do is not with any reluctance on God's part; it is with the obstacles which sin and unbelief put in our pathway. What God orders we must submit to uncomplainingly; but we must never submit to what God can better. No church must submit to being barren, and no pastor must submit to have his work without results. Never submit to be blocked in any pious purpose or holy endeavor, if, with divine help, you can roll the blocks out of your path. The faith that works while it prays commonly conquers, for such faith creates such a condition of things that our heavenly Father can wisely hear us and help us.

What a magnificent epic are the triumphs of toiling, trusting, victorious faith! The firmament of Bible history blazes with the answers to prayers from the days when Elijah unlocked the heavens on to the days when the petitions in the house of John Mark unlocked the dungeon and brought the liberated Peter into their presence. Let us find our happiness in pleasing God, and he will surely grant us the desires of our hearts. If the Week of Prayer is followed with many weeks of godly living and generous giving and personal efforts for the salvation of souls, we shall have a round year of glorious harvestings.—Exchange.

Don't Scold.

Every pastor of a church may, at times, feel that duty compels him to reprove and rebuke, as Paul enjoins Timothy to do, but he is to do so with all long-suffering. He is not to make the occasion one for the display of ill-temper, nor for an indulgence in tirade, nor for taking an opportunity to cut and rasp the feelings of his audience, nor to chide with rudeness, or find fault with coarseness. He must never forget that if he is any better in any aspect of his character than those upon whom he is pouring these hot words, he is indebted for the difference to the grace of God, and that Moses lost the pleasure and honor of leading his people into Canaan and of getting himself into that promised land, because of his hasty, ill-advised words to the people at Horeb. The preacher must never forget that his mission is to win souls for Jesus, and to fulfill this mission he must show that he is not a sensational denunciator, but a faithful, judicious, broad-minded, level-headed herald of the Lord. And if he should ever so forget himself as to use rude words in rebuking men or manners, he should instantly ask the forgiveness of his audience, and not be less polite than that character in Shakespeare who, when he was overtaken in a similar fault, said: "Pardon me, 'tis the first time that ever I'm forced to scold."—The Treasury.

LET EVERY PASTOR RESPOND.

PARSONAGE AND HOME MISSION WEEK, FEB. 6-11.

It is hoped that all our pastors will respond to the call for special services in behalf of the work of the Parsonage and Home Mission Society of the M. E. Church, South, to be held Feb. 6-11, 1894.

Let every pastor respond because the connectional character of the work demands a connectional response.

Let every pastor respond because the history of the organization to date demonstrates its utility.

Let every pastor respond because the needs of so many of our preachers and their families in our new and difficult fields are very urgent. The efficiency of these preachers in their work, the health and comfort of their families, and the stability and prosperity of our church are involved in this work.

Let every pastor respond because the good already accomplished by this organization is an incentive to increased zeal and activity in its behalf. In some cases the very life of struggling churches have been saved by the timely aid given by it. Destitute fields have been successfully occupied that could not otherwise have been entered. Other difficult fields would have been abandoned of necessity but for the helping hand extended by the godly women of our Parsonage and Home Mission Society. Did space permit, some striking illustrations might be furnished.

Let every pastor respond because it will require a universal and liberal response to meet the pressing demands that are upon us now.

Let every pastor respond, so that the toilers in our needy fields may feel the throb of the great connectional heart and feel the touch of its helping hand, in the midst of their trials and privations.

Begin, continue and end with prayer. Baptize the facts with prayer, point your appeals with prayer, pour the gifts into the treasury in the spirit of believing prayer. Then blessed will be both those who give and those who receive. O. P. FITZGERALD.

Don't Be Offended at Friendly Criticism.

Every teacher of a school and every professor in a college is expected to criticise, as a friend, his pupil or his student—to praise when praise is deserved, and to criticise adversely when such criticism is needed; and both kinds of criticism should be the words of a friend, for the benefit of the praised or corrected one. It would be a great boon to many a preacher if some kind, judicious friend would communicate to him not only his defects, but his excellencies, and would point out to him the vast importance to his full usefulness, to set about freeing himself of his defects as speedily as possible, and with a determination to succeed that would not succumb to any obstacle. If it be true that Demosthenes battled with such resoluteness to overcome his defects and to attain to excellency of speech and delivery that he might advance the interests of his nation, surely the Christian preacher should be stimulated to greater exertions in eliminating everything from his manner, etc., that would injure his usefulness, and should strive with "might and main" to excel in every way, that God may be glorified in him. The Psalmist seems to have taken the proper view of friendly criticism when he wrote: "Let the righteous smite me, it shall be a kindness; and let him reprove me, it shall be an excellent oil which shall not break my head."—The Treasury.

JONAH'S LESSON AS A "TRAVELING PREACHER."

BY GEO. L. TAYLOR.

When Jonah, in 'Nineveh mission" appointed,
A runaway preacher, for Tarshish set sail.
The Lord took in hand his new prophet anointed,
And sent him to college—inside of a whale!
Three days did the business; and, more than contented,
The graduate promptly was spunted ashore,
And went to his work—a whole city repented!
The grandest revival on record of yore!

You laugh at poor Jonah with thoughtless derision,
Scarce dreaming the cross God's true preachers must bear
To tell guilty sinners God's terrible vision,
How judgment hangs o'er them by only a hair!
But bear the same cross, face the scorn, persecution,
The rage at unpopular duty well done—
And quietly you'll wonder, and ask the solution,
Why Jonahs we find not, a thousand for one!

But, ah! let the preachers and pastors take warning!
If God calls his prophets, then go where you're sent;
No proud parish fearing, nor poor parish scorning;
Be humble and faithful, then power shall be lent.
When preachers are true to their glorious commission,
Then kings sit in sackcloth and cities are won;
But preachers, too oft, are in Jonah's condition,
And needs must be whaled ere God's work can be done!

A Fine Investment.

There are many benevolently inclined persons who desire to contribute to the cause of church and parsonage building in the M. E. Church, South, at some time in the future, perhaps, after death, but whose incomes are not sufficient to enable them to do so now. In order to aid them in carrying out this purpose the Board of Church Extension of the church has adopted the following plan: Any person may pay into the treasury of the Board any sum of money he may choose so to invest (it must be in even hundreds of dollars, however), and receive from the Board its obligation to pay to the investor, or such other beneficiary as he may designate, an annual sum not exceeding six per centum upon the sum so invested during the life of the investor or the designated beneficiary, provided that upon the death of the annuitant the payment of the interest shall cease, and the principal sum shall vest absolutely in the Board.

The merits of the annuity fund scheme are obvious. It is a safe investment. The fund is kept separate from the other funds of the Board, so that even if disaster should come upon us, resulting in the loss of other funds, this one could be traced, and the liens and securities upon which it had been loaned could be specifically subjected for the protection of the annuitant. Pledged to its protection, also, are all the general funds of the Church Extension Board (on account of which no other indebtedness can be contracted), and the faith and honor of the church.

It is a remunerative investment. It pays a higher rate of interest than any first-class securities pay nowadays.

It is an attractive investment, particularly for that large class of persons inexperienced in the management of finances who wish to be entirely relieved of the anxiety and risk involved in the selection and purchase of securities.

It is a particularly convenient form of investment for those persons who desire to make provision for others who are helpless or dependent upon them for support. Aged parents, unfortunate and dependent brothers, sisters or kins-people, aged family servants and ex-slaves, may thus be provided for out of the present abundance, and their future welfare and comfort be placed beyond the reach of the misfortunes that may overtake those whose present duty or pleasure it is to care for them.

It is a sure provision in that it effectually avoids the proverbial uncertainties attending legacies. So critically do the courts scan those clauses in wills which undertake to give charitable direction to the bounty of testators, and so highly artificial and technical are the rules of interpretation applied in such cases, that even so great a lawyer as Samuel J. Tilden, using the most assiduous care in the preparation of his own will, was not able to evade the snares and pitfalls that lay in his way; and that anxiously drawn clause wherein he sought to give the bulk of his large estate to found a great public library in the City of New York was declared void by the highest courts. It is also a fact that some of the States absolutely prohibit legacies for religious or charitable objects.

It begins to produce fruit immediately. The Board can lend the money at once, upon good security, to aid in building a needed church, and so, while the annuitant receives his undiminished income in regular installments, without contingency or delay, churches are being built, the gospel is being spread abroad, and the borders of God's church are being enlarged through the wise use of the capital furnished by him.

Late Session of the Mississippi Conference.

"A feast of fat things—of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow."

Such was the late session of the Mississippi Conference at Hazlehurst. Bishop Key's presidency carried us back to the days when good old Bishop Early presided, and always held a prayer and song service before entering upon the regular minute business of the day. In those days, and farther back, our Bishops found time to attend to business, while at the same time they were careful to invoke the presence of the Holy Spirit among the preachers and the congregation. I do not say this by way of criticism of our Bishops or their administration. They are all spiritual, holy men of God; but refer to the pentecostal feature to show that legitimate business can be as well and as expeditiously conducted with the religious addends as without it. For years past I have thought that the Conference session was too much of a business affair, and too little attention was given to the work of conversion and salvation of souls. I am glad that Bishop Key "called for mourners," Sunday night. Why not let it go out from every session of Annual Conference, as well as from a protracted meeting of four or five days, that souls were converted, sanctified and saved? Surely, if the prayers and co-operation of two or three men can accomplish so much good in so short a time a hundred men could accomplish more. The united prayers of our Annual Conference, composed of earnest, working preachers and devout laymen, should be adequate to the accomplishment of greater good than two men who are "agreed as touching any matter," and "ask it of God," who has promised to give whatever they ask.

In this connection I have thought that it detracted very much from the interest in our quarterly visitations by the presiding elder that these should have become so universally business meetings of the church, and so multiplied that Quarterly Conferences have to be held on week days, not including a Sabbath. The first district I traveled embraced fourteen counties and parishes of Mississippi and Louisiana, and yet I can not recall a single instance in which a Sabbath was not included. Subsequently I traveled districts embracing not half the territory that supported the preachers and presiding elder as well, if not better, than they are supported now. I think the better plan would be to multiply the number of districts, and reduce the number of appointments in a presiding elder's district. Give the presiding elder opportunity to mix with the people. Have the quarterly meetings embrace a Sabbath in every charge, and I think all the interests of the church would be promoted thereby.

Letter from Dr. Grace.

MR. EDITOR: I have not been prompt to welcome you to the chair editorial, believing you had entered upon it from a sense of duty; but I have read and admired your work on "Christian Womanhood," which I think fairly gave you a title to your present position—a bold, earnest stand for a new movement that was much needed in the church and which has gone none too fast or too far yet in our Southland. The early harbinger of such a movement should be capable of following it up with weekly impression upon the public mind, and I doubt not in your present position you will find opportunity of doing so. These feminine auxiliaries have already brought up our work in temperance, foreign missions, education and Christian Endeavor.

As to books that have been written among us and are doing good, I have recently read two which have not yet attained a wide circulation, but are of no common interest. There is "Jackknife and Bramble," by Bishop Haygood, a work of terse style, intense thought, and sound tendency, a book for the times, straightening out several kinks in our theology and slapping infidelity in the face at the same time. The other is Dr. West's "History of Methodism in Alabama," which in its early period covers the same ground with Jones' "History of Methodism in Mississippi," because Alabama was for a long time included in the same Conference. By the way, I never got but one volume of Jones' book, and have long wished to see the others in print. He was an admirable historian and knew what he was writing about.

Dr. West certainly deserves great credit for his industry in searching for the half-forgotten names that planted the seeds of the gospel in the fruitful soil of Alabama. Here one will find the characters of many noble heroes, faithful men and women, drawn to the life, and some rescued from the shades of oblivion whose history had never been written. It is to be regretted that he passed some by who, perhaps, were equally worthy of the artist's pencil and brush. William Weir, George Shaffer and others should be placed by the side of Leroy Massingale and Elisha Calloway. I mention these because they belonged to Mississippi as well as to Alabama. But notwithstanding some defects and oversights the history is a great work and should be read by all who are interested in early Methodism. The conflicts, sacrifices and devotion of our fathers can not but inspire zeal and emulation in their sons.

The year is drawing near its close, and while it has been marked by calamities, physical and financial, there has been good cheer and plenty in our holidays. The merchants never sold so many goods for the same period in this part of Tennessee, and the people never seemed more contented. I have been to Knoxville on a visit and saw nothing but cheerfulness on the way and in the city. If the South has not so much money as the North, it has at any rate a more self-supporting population. We do not depend on tariffs or pensions to grease the wheels of commerce. He that soweth soweth in hope, and he that reapeth gets his reward, so that both the sower and the reaper rejoice together. The enforced economy of the past year will lay the foundation for prosperity in the year to come. The church, too, enjoys prosperity all over our borders. The earth shall yield her increase, and God shall bless us.

F. M. GRACE.

Notes from Meridian.

Well, we are all here and hard at work. The new presiding elder preached at East End the third Sunday in December and made a fine impression. These people think he is the right man to succeed Bro. Mellen.

The new pastor at Central Church occupied his pulpit the fourth Sabbath in December, and, though suffering from a cold, thoroughly ingratiated himself into the hearts of his people.

The Junior stood before his people at South Side for the first time the fifth Sabbath, carrying everything by storm.

Dr. Andrews, of Vicksburg, looked in upon us, Jan. 3, while aiding a North Mississippi brother secure "an helpmeet for him," and the way the audience crowded around him after the ceremony showed the hold he still has on the hearts of this people.

We have reorganized our preachers' meeting with the idea of permanency. Four pastors and a presiding elder, "all with one accord in one place," seeking "the promise of the Father," "the enduement of power," how can we fail in the accomplishment of the Lord's work? We shall not.

Owing to the sickness of the pastor at Central Church, we were unable to hold our proposed union watch-night service. But it was observed at East End and West End instead. They were seasons of spiritual refreshing, especially at West End.

One other fact is worthy of note. On the night of Dec. 28, the Gem Fire Company No. 5 (East End company) held their annual banquet at East End School-house. The three pastors having members in the company—viz., Methodist, Baptist, and Cumberland Presbyterian—were invited to be present and participate in the exercises. The programme was opened with prayer. Grace was said at the table. There was no wine, no dancing—in short, nothing to which the church members could take exceptions. One of the city papers next morning reported that there was dancing at the banquet. While the writer was at breakfast, a member of the fire company called at the parsonage to correct the report, and next morning the paper made the same correction.

Surely God is among us. More anon.

B. F. LEWIS.

Jackson, La.

MR. EDITOR: So far as the reality may be judged by the apparent, the campaign of '94 opens most favorably; and if no unseen antagonistic elements develop, we should come off more than conquerors. The people are in good spirit, in sympathy with the work, appointments and plans. Tokens of good-will—not spasmodic, but constant—come to us as streams of blessings never ceasing, calling for "notes of thanks." Dead, indeed, the heart not inspired to do its best for such a people. Such genuine Christian fellowship keeps warm the heart and makes work a pleasant service. Next to the love and commendation of the Master, I value the love and confidence of my people.

Sister Saunders, a kinswoman of the late Judge Shattuck, and one of the few older members of our church, was gathered a few days ago unto rest. Only one or two of those known as the "old members" of our church remain. Thank God the latter years of their pilgrimage are brighter than the former. They realize that they are nearer heaven now, and the truth of the promise, "even down to old age." God bless and help us to honor the old!

Prof. Chas. C. Miller, son of that Miller long known and much honored and beloved by all, was licensed to preach to-day. He is the second young man reared in Jackson who, within the last few months, has given himself to the high calling—the other being S. Carter Schwing, an honored graduate of Centenary, now at the Theological Department of Vanderbilt.

Those who desire their sons to become and remain Christians, as well as get a good education, can find no better place than Centenary College. Every influence here is for Christ and his church—the teaching, the entire community, and, best of all, the personal influence of the professors. How great an influence upon a boy is the daily contact with his teacher! Certainly one, if not the greatest factors of college life, is the silent influence which goes out from a teacher—the influence of personal character. Either for young men or young ladies, no place can be found where all the facilities are better for physical, mental and religious development than Jackson.

The Religious Porcupine.

BY REV. GEORGE H. HUBBARD.

The porcupine is a fitting symbol of the disagreeable. With his long sharp spines sticking out in every direction, he wounds all who venture to touch him. Some assert that he has a habit, in his more than usually disagreeable moods, of shooting off his quills like darts, and thus wounding those at a distance from him.

In our books on natural history these animals are described as quadrupeds; but we have seen a species of biped that, if not identical, is certainly very closely related to them. We find them in our churches, and occasionally they make their way into the prayer meeting, though they are not regular attendants there. Their religion is of a kind peculiar to themselves, and they wear it as a porcupine does his quills. In their view the chief use of religion seems to be to make everybody uncomfortable who comes in contact with them. And they are nothing loath to shoot a dart now and again at long range. They take a supreme delight in inflicting wounds in the form of reproof, criticism, and the like.

One of these thorny individuals is quite sufficient to disturb the comfort of a whole community of earnest Christian workers. He is always watching for a chance to "hit" somebody; and he is no respecter of persons. At the close of the morning service he often greets the pastor, and with significant emphasis says to him: "That was a capital text you preached from this morning." On the rare occasions when he drops into the prayer meeting, if he speaks, it is to reprove the coldness of his fellow-Christians, and their many failures in service. If he leads in prayer, instead of praying to the Lord, he prays at some one who is present, or at the church in general. Occasionally he is seen at a church social, and when some earnest brother or sister who is trying hard to cultivate a feeling of friendliness and good-fellowship among the people approaches him with a warm greeting and shake of the hand, he replies, with a shade of sarcasm: "If this was prayer meeting night, you would'nt see so many here." And he usually adds some remarks regarding the worldly tendencies of Christians at the present day.

His favorite victims are among the young people. In dealing with the unconverted he does not talk directly to them on the subject of religion, giving them a chance to state their position or to ask for guidance. That might entangle himself. He prefers to shoot his quills from a distance, aiming at them his answers in the Bible class, or giving them side shots now and then when talking to others in their presence. If a young disciple fails to bear his part in the prayer meeting, he of the sharp quills has something to say to him about being ashamed to show his colors. And when, after a hard struggle and much prayer, the timid beginner has uttered a few words in public, he is reminded by the same mentor that religion consists in something more than speaking in meeting.

The one great fear of these people seems to be lest religion should be made too pleasant and too attractive. They are exceedingly careful to strain out every gnat of undue levity from their religion, while they swallow whole two-humped camels of fault-finding, uncharitableness and complaining.

Quadruped porcupines hibernate. So do the bipeds. They roll themselves up in a ball—spines outward—and sleep for months at a time. Don't touch them, however, to wake them up; for the spines are as sharp as ever. You miss them from church, and you ask the reason. Asleep! Oh, no! They never sleep. They never grow cold in the work. They stay away from church because it does them no good to go. The pastor does'nt rise to their level. They are not fed by his sermons. He is afraid to preach the strong, full gospel. Or the church is so worldly, so unspiritual, that they are utterly discouraged. So they stay at home, coiled up in their spiny ball, and live on their own surplus spirituality till the warmth of some revival calls them forth to claim a share in its glory.

The quadruped porcupine is very useful in some countries as a destroyer of vermin. The use of the biped porcupine does not yet appear. We strongly suspect that it was a specimen of this then unnamed species that St. Paul called "a thorn in the flesh." If so, the Almighty still sees fit to allow them to remain in the church as a means of developing in others a deeper experience of grace and charity. It, therefore, becomes our duty to bear with them. Yea, we must love them, if it is possible for love to penetrate their quill armor. But, fellow-Christians, don't imitate them! Be whatever else you please, but don't be a porcupine.—Sunday-school Times.

My Pastor.

The new Conference year is now upon us, and we have new duties to perform, or old ones to repeat—maybe both. Not the least that claims our consideration is our duty to our pastor. There is no service that yields richer results to individuals and churches than thoughtful, timely attention to the man who is sent to take care of the flock. It may be he is a new man—a stranger—and he needs from you hearty assurance that in you he has a friend and willing helper in the work. If he is a young man, and lacks experience, he specially needs your sympathy and prayers. Give them to him at once, and be sure to tell him he has them.

Perhaps he is an old warrior, worn and weakened by the wounds and hardships of long service. Then he needs your cheering words to shout him to the battle again, and your loving ministries to mollify his wounds and render more agreeable the asperities of care and duty. Possibly, he is not the man you wanted. If so, then it is your time to show a magnanimous spirit by making special effort to insure success to his ministry. It may be helpful also to consider that he is not responsible for his appointment, and that he may be as little pleased as yourself. Really, our disappointments are sometimes just means of grace—blessings in disguise. Sure it is that the course herein advised will command the respect of the preacher, and will tempt out of him the very best service he can render.

Much of the success of the pastor and the church depends upon the young people. You can more readily attend upon all his ministry, and co-operate with him in all good works, than many of the old people, and it is your sacred duty to do it. Then go to him in person and tender your services. In your first business meeting cordially welcome him to his place, and formally commit yourselves to the work under his administration. This will insure for you the hearty "God bless you!" of the good man, and will give you a double portion of his thought and his prayers. Try it, and do it right away. Don't wait till you feel more like it, or till you are better acquainted with him. He needs you, and he needs you now. The old proverb says, "He who gives promptly gives twice," and this principle applies here. You doubly bless your church and your own souls by doing, at once and heartily, your duty to the pastor.

The Worth of Education.

Thomas Jefferson used to mention with especial gratitude two services for which he kept his father—who died when the lad was but fourteen years old—affectionately in mind through life. The father sent the boy early to a classical school, and on his dying bed gave definite directions for the continuance of the lad's collegiate education. These counsels were carried out with diligence and devotion, and Thomas Jefferson felt throughout his career that he owed to his father's foresight and wisdom the privileges, opportunities and fruitage which a thorough collegiate training involves. The other help which his father had given him was the inheritance of a large estate, which lifted him above the lot of poverty. When, however, Jefferson compared, in middle and later life, the advantages and blessings of these two benefactions received as gifts from his father's generous heart and discerning brain, he was not at a loss to discriminate between their relative values. He counted his classical education, he often declared, worth more than his patrimonial acres. The incident may stand as a type of the principle that the father who gives his children a good education confers upon them a boon more precious than silver or gold. Next to positive religious example and influence in the home, the greatest blessing the parents can confer upon their children is a good education. The interest which Jefferson took in education began in childhood and ceased only when he ceased to breathe. The nation owes much to him for varied services to the republic in its youth; and especially it needs to keep in mind the work which that illustrious man did for classical and scientific culture in his own commonwealth by founding a great institution of learning. When he came to write his epitaph he indicated in it what his own sense of the relative worth of his public services was, when he expressed his wish that the obelisk over his tomb should bear the inscription: "Here was buried Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of American Independence, of the statute of Virginia for religious freedom, and father of the University of Virginia."—Central Advocate.

Power of Money.

A few years ago we knew a paralytic, unable to move either leg. He was familiar with literature, an attentive reader of the papers, and devoutly religious. On the day before New Year's, Washington's Birthday, Easter, Fourth of July, Thanksgiving Day and Christmas he sent his confidential man to and fro to ascertain where cases of suffering among worthy people were to be found, and to each sent according to his need—to one clothing, to another coal, to a third a stove, to a fourth shoes for the whole family, sometimes employing four wagons to convey his benefactions. So secret did he his benefactions (his name as the giver) that only when they ceased to be distributed after his death did it become known, and then under circumstances which make it impossible to publish it.

Many hands made his investigations, tied his bundles, selected his food, loaded his wagons, delivered his donations, while he sat helpless, yet mighty for good, in his chair. Comparing this case with the one mentioned in the previous note, some might say: "How much more Christ-like to keep the knowledge of his gifts to himself!" Yet the good Samaritan whom Christ commended did not, nor did those whom the inspired apostles commended. It is the heart that decides. The Pharisees' mistake was not that they showed, but that they gave for show.—New York Advocate.

I do say that in young men with abundance of life within them, and around them gambling and betting, if they be not the subject of much thoughtlessness, are signs of a premature demoralization which hardly any other vice can show. In social life, in club, in college, on the street, the willingness of young men to give or receive money on the mere turn of chance is a token of the decay of manliness and self-respect, which is more alarming than almost anything besides. It has an inherent baseness about it which not to feel shows a base soul. To carry in your pocket money which has become yours by no use of your manly powers, which has ceased to be another man's by no willing acceptance on his part of its equivalent—that is a degrading thing. Will it not burn the purse in which you hold it? Will it not blight the luxury for which you spend it? Will you dare to buy the gift of pure love with it? Will you offer it in charity? Will you pay it out for the support of your innocent children? Will it not be a Judas treasure, which you must not put into the treasury because it is the price of blood?—Phillips Brooks.

It is now stated on good authority that the fearful disaster which befell the warship Victoria, resulting in the instant destruction of hundreds of lives, is another of the long list of calamities which may be set down to the credit of strong drink. It is said that the fatal order which resulted in the collision with the Camperdown was given in a fit of recklessness superinduced by too much wine-drinking. On no other ground, it is said, can it be explained why a man ordinarily so cool, discreet and skillful as Admiral Tryon should have given an order which the commonest sailors knew could only result in disaster. It is charitable to believe that Admiral Tryon was not in a condition of mind to realize what he was about when he said that "six cables length," instead of eight, should be the distance between the ships in that maneuver. That two cables of difference meant a swift and awful death to hundreds of brave men, including the admiral himself. It was the wine that did it, and not Admiral Tryon.—Christian at Work.

It is not hasty reading, but seriously meditating upon holy and heavenly truths, that makes them prove sweet and profitable to the soul. It is not the bee's touching on the flowers that gathers honey, but her abiding for a time upon them and drawing out the sweet. It is not he that reads most, but he that meditates most on divine truth that will prove the choicest, wisest, strongest Christian.—Hall.

HYGIENE.

Smoking by Boys.

That the essential principle of tobacco, that which gives it all its value to the smoker, is a virulent poison, is universally admitted. It is agreed also that its primary effect is upon the brain and spinal cord, with a paralyzing tendency.

Even Board, who defends the moderate use of tobacco, admits that its effects are disastrous on some classes of persons. It withers some, he says, while fattening others; causes in some dyspepsia and constipation, while upon others it has a contrary effect. It is soothing to some, but lndnces in others all the horrors of extremo nervousness. He adds that among the brain-working class of our population the proportion of those who can nse tobacoo with impunity is yoarly diminishing, as a nervous tendency more and more prevails among us.

Now, whatever may be urged in favor of moderate smoking later in life, all intelligent persons who have given the subject attention, unite in condemning the use of tobacoo hy the young.

Young persons do not know whether or not they hclong to the class most liable to he injured hy tobacoo. No one denies the danger of its excessive use, and the young have neither the intelligence nor the self-control to resist the tendency of smcking to grow into an uncontrollable habit. Further, the brain and nervous system of youth are specially snscoptible to the banefnl influence of the poisonous principle of tobacco.

That commanding medical authority, the London Lancet, says: "It is time that the attention of all responsible persons should he seriously directed to the prevalence and increase of tobacco smoking among boys. Stunted growth impaired digestion, palpitation, and other evidences of nerve exhaustion and irritability have again and again impressed the lesson of abstinence, which has hitherto been far too little regarded."

It cites a case which lately came before the coroner for Liverpool—death from a fatty change in the heart, due mainly to smoking cigarettes and cigar ends—and adds:

"This, of course, is an extreme example. It is, however, only a strongly colored illnstration of effects on health which are daily realized in thousands of instances. Not oven in manhood is the pipe or cigar invariably safe. Much less can it be so regarded when it ministers to the unhonnded whims and cravings of heedless urchins."—Selected.

Sit Up Straight.

Your backbone was not made for a barrel hoop; so do not cnrve it around, but rather straighten it out. God made man upright; not ronnd-shouldered, humphacked, or bending over.

If you bend over too mnch in yonr studies, get a lower seat. Saw the legs off from an old chair, then sit down so low that your chin will come just above the table, make the hind legs a little shorter than the fore legs, and then read and write with your arms on the table, and it will take out some of the crook from your back.

One mother whose daughter was getting the habit of stooping used to have her lie flat on hor back, without a pillow, for an hour each day, while she read to her out of some interesting book. In a little while she was as straight as need be, and a picture of health and strength.

In some countries the women carry pails, tubs, and heavy loads on their heads—this keops them erect. Throwing back the arms is another means of keeping straight. Remember you may add years to your life hy standing up straight; and you may not only have a longer life, but a stronger, broader, deeper, happier, and more nseful life, if you go about with head ercot, chest expanded, and lungs well developed, with rosy cheeks and fresh complexion, than if you go abont hent over, cramped up, stooping, flat-chested, sallow, nervous, and miserable.

Remembor, "God made man upright."—Exchange,

Care of Feet.

To relievo perspiration and remove unpleasant smell from the feet, bathe in ammonia and water at night; change stockings often, and always when changing rub the feet dry with a clean towel. For chilblains, use strong salt water baths. Corns may be relieved by applying a mixture of olive oil, landanum and oil of wormwood, equal parts, and entirely removed if you add the wearing of light, pliable, perfect-fitting shoes. Don't he afraid of the size Nature intended you to wear.

Go to bed at night to sleep; and not to think over the troubles of to-day, or the anticipated trials of to-morrow. One woman said: "I plan my next day's work each night after retiring." Poor, little, nervous thing, she looked it.

Evangelists According to the Scriptures.

The modern evangelistic move is right or wrong. If it is right, it's according to the will of God and ought to be defended—and God will defend it by its continuation and success. If it is not according to the Word of God, it should by all means he put down. I honestly believe that whatever is taught in the Bible to be right is his holy will, and, therefore, should be believed, endorsed, and practiced by his church. God has three special channels through which he deals with his church—the Word, the Spirit, and providence—and these work in union and harmony together for the accomplishment of bis great purposes concerning the children of men. According to God's dealings with me, I am one of those whose duty it is to prove his calling hy the Word of God.

The first and last proposition I lay down is that many of the modern evangelists are called of God to that special work. The reason why I don't say all are called, is because I don't believe all are called; neither do I believe all are called to any other field of labor who are engaged in it. I believe what Christ said, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Those Scriptures that teach the office and call of evangelists are as true and as much the inspiration of God as any other Scriptures. I quote a few passages: "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers. For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." (Eph, iv, 11, 12) "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily, prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." (I. Cor. xii, 28.) "And the next day we that were of Paul's company departed, and came unto Cæsarea; and we entered into the house of Philip the evangelist, which was one of the seven; and abode with him." (Acts xxi, 8) "But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry." (II. Tim. iv, 5.) These precious Scriptures prove to my mind beyond all contradiction that the evangelistic work was practiced and recognized hy the church in apostolic times, and what was legitimate then in most cases is so now. If not so, who is competent or authorized to take from or add to the Word of God?

I am a Methodist, and as loyal to my church as any man living. Have been a pastor both in Mississippi and Texas. But I have always felt called of God to a special work in the evangelistic field, especially among the children. I am engaged in that sort of work now, not because I am "self-called," but God has called me by his Spirit and providence.

The common cry with many is that "evangelists get too much money." This alone proves the opposition to be contrary to Scriptures. If it were true, I don't believe all of them are out hy divine appointment, but in proportion to the number I believe as many of them are out that way as in any other department of the ministry. In my humble opinion, I think our church had as well enact a law that will recognize what God does and to throw away the balance. The evangelists are here to stay. Many of them are among our most consecrated preachers of the gospel of Jesus Christ. For one, I am most anxious to assist in holding revivals in the most needy places, in town or country, poor or rich. If I have any preference, it is to the poor country people. I am not in it for the money, but for the souls, God being my judge.

In the last place I am willing and anxious to accept the advice given hy Dr. Gamaliel in Acts v, 38, 39: "Repair from these men, and let them alone; for if this counsel or this work he of men, it will come to naught. But if it he of God ye can not overthrow it, lest haply ye be found even to fight against God."

After Twenty Years.

Just twenty years ago, this month, I was received into the Mississippi Conference at Brandon, having been recommended by a Quarterly Conference not far from this place. I was born within eighteen miles of this city, and within one mile and a half of the town of Hickory; grew to manhood twenty-five or thirty miles away. And now after twenty years of wandering here and there I am back at the starting-point. As I write memory gets to work, and I lay down my pen for a time and go into the past and think and think. Forty years ago a dear mother, as good a mother as any boy ever had, prayed, with her last breath, that God would bless and take care of her boy. I see a ragged, barefooted orphan going from place to place, seeking a home among kins-folks, until the age of fifteen; then the war, then an empty sleeve, and then years of struggling against wind and wave. During these twenty years what strange experiences I have had—many of joy, some of sorrow; met many friends, few enemies. After twenty years I come back to the east, I hope, a wiser and a better man.

Many changes have taken place. Most of the older people are gone, while the gray hairs and furrowed cheeks I see remind me that my friends and I are not as young as we were in our school and army days.

In our moves heretofore we have been able to carry the whole family together, but now we leave the oldest son behind, and dear little Mac quietly sleeps in the preachers' lot in the Port Gibson Cemetery. Ah, me! Never again on earth can there he the unbroken family circle. I know such thoughts are childish, but they are natural, for grown people are nothing more than great big children.

So, with farewells to the old friends in the west and greetings to the new ones in the east, I face about and confront the duties and responsibilities awaiting me here. My prayer is that God may help me to do good unto my own people. D. A. Little.

The Salvation Army.

The oddest, sincerest, intensest religious enterprise of the present day is the Salvation Army. The key to it is its purpose—just to save men; nothing else. It does not want to do anything more and attempts nothing else—no schools, no education, no religious training, nothing but to get men into the kingdom of God. It will get them in any way it can. It has no dignity to save, no conventionalities to consider. Why care for a sneer when there is a soul to save?

It is an army in name, and in reality a church; but a very strange kind of a church. It is a cross between Methodism and Quakerism. Like old Methodism, it is religion on fire, or charged with electricity; and, like Quakerism, it has no sacraments. It knows and cares nothing about baptism and the Lord's Supper; and yet it has its confession of the faith, in joining the Army, which does the office of baptism in the early Church; and every meeting is scarcely less than a communion with Christ and one another. The Salvation Army hand-book, Doctrines and Discipline, in answer to the question, "Does the Army consider baptism a duty that must he performed?" says: "Decidedly not! The Army only considers one baptism essential for salvation, and that is the baptism of the Holy Ghost." It reckons baptism with the Jewish rites of circumcision, shaving the head, and other ceremonies never intended to he permanent. All it wants is to save men, and it holds that baptizing them is not saving them. Just so the Lord's Supper is recommended to those who feel that it would help their faith, but it is not essential to membership in the Army or to salvation.

So the Salvation Army knows no formal church. Its members may or may not he members of the churches; but its theory is that the Army takes the place of the Church. Where the rest of us say Church it says Army. It asks no converts to join the Church, only to join the Army. Joining the Army does not save any one; he must he saved first, and then he is asked to join the Army and engage in the work of saving other people. Salvation is its only purpose, and an army its form of organization, because that is the most effective to save people.—Harper's Weekly.

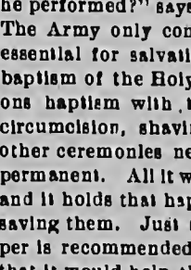
Scrofula in the Neck

The following is from Mrs. J. W. Tillbrook, wife of the Mayor of McKeesport, Penn.:



Willie Tillbrook.

"My little boy Willie, now 6 years old, two years ago had a bunch under one ear which the doctor said was Scrofula. He finally lanced it and it discharged for some time. We then began giving Willie Hood's Sarsaparilla and he improved very rapidly until the sore healed up. Last winter it broke out again, followed by Erysipelas. We again gave him Hood's Sarsaparilla with excellent results and he has had no more trouble. His cure is due to

The Sabbath-School Teacher.

Outside the ministry there is no position in the church that has larger possibilities for usefulness than that of teacher. The church of the near future will be what the rising generation shall make it, and the moral and religious character of the rising generation will be to a large extent determined by the work done in our Sabbath-schools. The time was when the religious training of children was deemed the especial function of parents. Whether it should be so or not, it is a fact that at the present day a large and constantly increasing number of parents relegate this work to the Sunday-school teacher. The parent may give his children sundry moral precepts and seek to bring their lives into conformity to the moral conventionalities of surrounding society, but there is oftentimes no attempt to give in the home systematic instruction in the principles of our holy religion as taught in the Bible. That is to be done by the Sunday-school teacher, if done at all.

This makes the position of Sunday-school teacher doubly important. Exercising to a very large extent the most important function of parenthood, the Sunday-school teacher of the present day has opportunities for usefulness which an angel might covet. He is a sower who may, if he will, carefully sow precious seed in a fruitful, virgin soil not yet overrun with briars and brambles and noxious weeds. To him is committed the task of moulding and fashioning lives that are destined to endure as long as God himself shall live. Heirs of immortality are placed in his plastic hands at the period of greatest susceptibility to religious influences. What more exalted position can mortal desire? What greater honor can humanity aspire to? What are "victor's wreaths and monarch's gems" in comparison with the honor of having wrought a work like this. No man, however high his social station, should regard it as a condescension to take a class in the Sunday-school. It is not a condescension; it is a step upward, Godward.

But if the honors of this position are great, the responsibilities are correspondingly great; and no man can fully meet those responsibilities who is unwilling to exercise the loftiest energies of his nature. The old adage is just as true here as in any other department of life, "There is no excellence without great labor." The preacher who goes into the pulpit without having made any preparation whatever for the work before him may be silly; but he is not a whit more so than the Sunday-school teacher who goes before his class without having carefully studied the lesson. Just at this point we fear there is a folly in Israel. It is said that there are teachers (we hope the number is small) who actually go into the Sunday-school-room and go through the form of hearing a recitation without having even looked at the lesson beforehand. This is a farce that would be laughable if it were not so serious. What would be thought of a man who would attempt to teach grammar, arithmetic, geography, etc., without having studied these branches at all? Is God's Word of less importance than these mere secular sciences? Out with such folly. Every Sunday-school teacher ought to make special preparation for each recitation. If his engagements are such that he can not find time to do this (a supposable case in these bustling times), then he ought to resign. The teacher who has the time is guilty of most culpable negligence, if he fails to prepare himself for the lofty work he has assumed.

And not only ought he to study each week the lesson for the week, but he ought also to be a close systematic student of the Bible. No book so richly repays careful study as does the Bible. While it has surface truths for the careless reader, it has great nuggets of gold that require to be dug for. It is an inexhaustible mine of spiritual truth. The Sunday-school teacher should make it a part of his life-work to familiarize himself with the contents of this rich treasury of things divine; and to this end he ought to provide himself with the very best helps in the way of commentaries, Bible dictionaries, etc., which his finances will justify. Of course, there are many very efficient teachers whose facilities of this character are very meager. By their tact, good sense, deep spirituality and diligent study of the Word, they are doing work whose results eternity alone will reveal. Not one word would we say to discourage teachers of this class. The fact remains, however, that the consecrated scholarship of the present day has placed within the reach of men of quite moderate means helps to the study of God's Word, such as even the millionaire could not have procured a few generations ago. For the same reason that the doctor purchases a medical library, and the attorney a law library, the Sunday-school teacher should provide himself with a biblical library.

We say this because we think it needs to be said. We suppose it would not be difficult to find Sunday-school teachers of considerable means who do not possess a single commentary, or Bible dictionary. The nucleus of a library should be formed at once, and it should be added to as occasion requires or opportunity offers. And just here we would like to make the following inquiry, Could a church make a better investment of a few dollars than by the purchase of Bible helps for earnest, consecrated teachers, who are unable to make such a purchase for themselves?

Another prime qualification for a successful teacher is a consistent life. Nothing is truer than the old adage, "Example is more powerful than precept." However gifted a teacher may be, and however thoroughly he may prepare himself intellectually for his work, his teaching will accomplish little, if his religious character is below par. What a stimulus this ought to be to purity of life and spotlessness of example!

Much depends upon the teacher's conception of the end of teaching. The proper end aimed at in Sabbath-school teaching is not the mere impartation of theological information. That should be subordinated to the great end of leading the child to Christ. The teacher who aims at anything less than this has a very inadequate conception of the functions of his office. The Sabbath-school affords opportunities for soul-saving such as can be found nowhere else outside the pulpit. Thousands of the most consecrated, useful and happy Christians of the present day were led to the Savior by their Sunday-school teachers. Thousands now on their way to perdition might have been saved had their teachers made proper use of the golden opportunities that presented themselves from Sabbath to Sabbath as young, tender hearts were brought under the influence of their tuition and their example. What a boon to the church it would be, if all our Sunday-school teachers had an adequate conception of the dignity, the importance and the possibilities of the place which in the order of divine providence they have been called to fill! Nor should the teacher rely upon his own efforts alone. He should unceasingly pray for God's blessings upon his labors. Each of his pupils should be borne aloft upon the wings of his faith to the throne of heavenly grace. He should start to the Sabbath-school room from his closet.

Let the church pray for a baptism of the Holy Spirit upon the teachers in all our Sabbath-schools.

Millsaps College.

The new year opens auspiciously for Millsaps College. Our work is progressing most satisfactorily. Nearly all the old students have returned after the holidays, and a number of new students have entered during the past week. The church and the friends of our college generally are to be congratulated that the first $100,000 of endowment has been completed, and that another scholarship has been endowed by the liberality of our friend, Mrs. Annie Davis Smith, of Canton, Miss. Major Millsaps, in addition to his generous gifts, has been worth thonsands of dollars to the institution in the judicious investments he has made for us. Surely Millsaps College is blessed in its friends! This seems to be the tide in our affairs. We ought to take it at its flood. It is to be hoped that the present encouraging prospects will stimulate the friends of Christian education in Mississippi to move promptly and rapidly in response to Major Millsaps' second proposition, that the facilities of our college may be greatly enlarged by the beginning of another session.

Our agent thoroughly appreciates our needs, and I hope he will be generously aided in supplying them.

Students who think of entering Millsaps College during the current session should take notice that our second term will begin Monday, Jan. 29.

W. B. MURRAH.

The Religious Journal.

Among the most potent agencies for disseminating the truths of the gospel, and for building up the kingdom of God in the world, is the religious journal. In the special work of evangelization, or in so bringing the gospel to bear on men's minds as to lead them to immediate repentance, the pulpit is, of course, the great agency, for which there never can be a substitute. But in the application of Christian truths to the various phases of human life and to the current questions of the times, and in fostering the great enterprises of the church—missionary, benevolent and educational—the religious journal is, and must ever be, the most important agency which sanctified human wisdom can employ. Unknown to the original propagators of Christianity, it has become the chief ally of the pulpit in the spread of the gospel throughout the world. It is the product and promoter of Christian progress. Hampered as it is in some respects by sectarian bias or denominational zeal, the religious journal is, nevertheless, the boldest witness for truth and righteousness which the world contains. Compare its unflinching advocacy of great moral and social reforms with the timorous and time-serving utterances of the secular press, particularly of the party "organ." Compare its bold denunciation of many popular evils with the hedging policy of professional politicians and party platforms. No doubt there are some religious papers which are restrained by moral timidity or by considerations of popularity and patronage from taking the highest ground on great moral issues, and from uttering the full truth as they see it; but we must believe that these are the exceptions to the general rule, and their true character is soon discerned.

The religious journal that does not stand for principle as against mere policy; that does not contend fearlessly for the right regardless of the effect such a course may have on its subscription list, does not deserve to be recognized as a religious journal. It has forfeited its prophetic character and dropped to the plane of secularism. Many a hobbyist who has failed to secure space in a religious paper for his pet hobby, has denounced the editor for moral cowardice, but sensible people know that it is the editor's level-headedness which the hobbyist or extremest has mistaken for lack of courage. More and more the religious newspaper that is to survive and to exert a wide-spread influence, must be independent in its tone of all mere party trammels, religious or political.

There is no better standard of measurement of the religious culture, spirit and breadth of a religious body than the journals which it produces and sustains. Are the people narrow, bigoted and illiterate? These traits are certain to be reflected in their representative journals. Are the members intelligent, thoroughly Christian in thought and spirit, and catholic in their aims and principles? The columns of the religious journal will be sure to furnish evidence of this fact. "Like paper like people," is the modern rendering of the old proverb. This is because the people make the paper, and the paper, in turn, helps to mould the people. Their reciprocal influence establishes an equilibrium between them, in mental and moral qualities, which makes one a true exponent of the other. It is this truth, more or less clearly perceived, that prevents self-respecting persons often from handing their religious paper to a neighbor of a different ecclesiastical connection.

There is before us, as we write, a large, neatly printed journal, with excellent paper, clear bold type, and the finest mechanical work. As we turn over its inviting pages we notice a great variety of themes of general interest, treated in an able manner by scholarly men. The tone of discussion is courteous, dignified, reverent. From some of the theological positions we dissent, but the ability, the spirit, and general scope of the paper compel our respect. Here, we feel instinctively, is a religious body with an educated ministry, and an intelligent membership. They are not superficial or semi-skeptical, but thoughtful and devout. The journal they support tells the story. Is the investment a wise one? Who can estimate the value to the church and its various interests, to the family and to the individual, of such a paper as we have described—beautiful in mechanical execution, sweet in spirit, devout in its treatment of divine things, sound in faith and in charity, and freighted with the best thought of the best minds on the highest themes? Equally impossible would it be to calculate the evil a religious paper may accomplish which, in the name of religion, sows the seeds of dissension among brethren, magnifies mole-hills into mountains, casts slurs upon men who have devoted their lives to God's service, and tithing mint, anise and cummin, neglects the weightier matters of the law of God, as justice, mercy and truth. But papers of this latter class, to whatever body they are attached, represent only a "vanishing minority," and are destined soon to die of inanition. Never did the religious journal have more responsible duties than those which the present time devolves upon it. To promote union, cultivate charity, foster liberality, meet the taunts of skepticism, defend the faith, oppose popular evils which threaten society and the church, stand by the poor and oppressed, expose counterfeit reforms, and push on the evangelization of the world—these are some of the tasks God has given it. Well may we exclaim, "Who is equal to these things?"—Christian Evangelist?

Criticism AND Criticism.

Let us not despise criticism. We ought rather to get help from it. Two heads are better than one, and, however wise we may think ourselves, we can not know everything, and many things we do not know are revealed to us in judicious criticism. The knowledge of no man is encyclopædic, and if one wishes to make one's knowledge as perfect as possible, one must have recourse to outside aids. No one will deny that a great amount of information and help is to be found in the rightful perusal of critical literature. Naturally we are blind to our own faults. We are too closely identified with our own life and work to be unbiased observers or just critics. We need outside help. We need other looking-glasses presented to ourselves than those of our own making. We are all the better of having a look at ourselves "as others see us." The best-made man is, no doubt, the one who has had the benefit of wholesome criticism. His life is developed on all sides. Faults are corrected, angles are rounded, and his life made such as to be of real benefit to those around him. But there is only one way to get profit from criticism. We must be unbiassed, we must be in touch with the writer, and at the same time ready to reject what in our unprejudiced opinion is not in accordance with the Spirit of Christ. Some people are not so. They handle criticism, good and bad, alike as if it were a snake or something to be dreaded and put out of the way as quickly as possible. They have such an opinion of their own judgment that all who think or speak contrary to them must be wrong, and so they utterly refuse to accept criticism, however kindly it may be, or indeed, any suggestion which looks to anything different from what they have done. Have we not met people of that sort, who unless everything is to be done as they want will either forsake the undertaking or brand the fancied improvement as a "needless innovation." We knew of two men who left a certain church in Scotland, one because the minister preached too much to the heart and too little to the intellect, and the other because the minister appealed only to the intellect and never to the heart. It is hard to get on with people of this kind, and such a spirit is very unwise, not to say foolish. We ought always to keep ourselves ready to receive instruction. Of course, there are different ways of pointing out a fault either of judgment or of conduct. It can be done bluntly, even rudely, or it can be done with a spirit of humility, in the spirit of the words of Paul, "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such a one in the spirit of meekness considering thyself lest thou also be tempted." This is the Christian way.—The Reaper.

Children at Church.

A minister was wondering how he could reach the large number of children in the homes of his people. "How am I to get them interested in the church?" he said. "To be sure they attend Sunday-school, but that is not enough. I seldom see them at the preaching services, and never on Wednesday night at prayer meeting." No, the children, as a rule, do not care for the preaching service. Why? Because the minister has forgotten in preparing his sermon that the children would be there, and has prepared it only for the older ones. It was announced from a certain pulpit that on the following Sunday the pastor would like as many of the children of the Sunday-school as would attend the morning service to take seats in the gallery, as they could all sit in a body. He especially asked the teachers of the Sunday-school to urge the children to come. He would "preach a sermon for the children." Sunday came, and so did a goodly number of the children. When it came time for the sermon the minister glanced up in the gallery and said: "Girls and boys, it gives me great pleasure to have so many bright faces before me this morning. I wish you would come every Sunday and fill up those vacant seats." Then he went into his sermon with a will. But he soon forgot "the gallery." He just soared right over their little heads way up in the arches in the roof, and only came down long enough to speak to some of the boys that were whispering a little too loud. Then he went back to the roof.

Dr. Joseph Pullman, pastor of the First Church, Bridgeport, Conn., does not do this way. He makes his sermons so plain to every child present they feel he really means what he says about being glad they were there. He talks to them. My boy of twelve said, "I like Dr. Pullman, mama, because I can understand him." There are many like Dr. Pullman in our churches, and pastors who are not like him would better adopt his plan. We must get the children to love the church so well that when they grow older they can not be induced to remain away. It will soon become the habit of their lives, and habits are not easily forsaken.—The Epworth Herald.

Diligent in Business.

"He becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand: but the hand of the diligent maketh rich."—Prov. x, 4.

This rule applies alike to the business of life, and the concerns of the soul. Diligence is necessary to the laying up of treasures, either within or beyond the reach of rust. The law holds good in common things. The earth brings forth thorns, instead of grapes, unless it be cultivated by the labor of man. This is an infliction because of sin, and yet it has been turned into a blessing. Even human governments have learned so to frame the necessary punishment as to make it a benefit to the culprit. The Governor of the nations did this before them. A world bringing forth food spontaneously might have suited a sinless race, but it would be unsuitable for mankind as they now are. If all men had plenty without labor, the world would not be fit for living in. The fallen can not be left idle with safety to themselves. In every country and under every kind of government the unemployed are the most dangerous classes. Thus the necessity of labor has become a blessing to man. It is better for us that diligent application is necessary to success, than if success had been independent of care and toil.

That diligence is necessary to progress in holiness is witnessed by all the Word of God, and all the experience of his people. Indeed, it would be a libel on the character of the divine economy to imagine that the tender plant of grace would thrive in a sluggard's garden. The work is difficult; the times are bad. He who would gain in godliness must put his soul into the business. Labor laid out here is not lost; those who strive, and strive lawfully, will win a kingdom. When all counts are closed, he who is rich in faith is the richest man.—Wm. Arnot.

To Our Patrons.

We are well into the last quarter of our fiscal year, and are drawing near to the session of our General Conference. Our next report closes the four years' business that will go before that Conference for review. Mention of this will, we hope, move all who are on any account in arrears with the House to bring up or reduce their balances as promptly as possible. We are concerned, and we suppose all indebted to the House are no less so that the smallest possible amount of unpaid accounts shall be found on our books by the General Conference Committee. Our outstanding accounts for the most part are small. They can be paid without embarrassment to anybody.

We respectfully request all our Sunday-school superintendents to look into the state of the accounts of their schools with the House. Let old scores be settled and collections for the literature of the current year be taken and results remitted to the House. The first six months' literature of the year must go to the schools before our accounts close. Let us be able to show the Conference that it is paid for.

There are many little remnants of accounts on our books that in the aggregate come to an important sum. We hope brethren who know of these balances against them will clear them off. Where the exact amount has been forgotten let a fresh statement be called for.

Help us, brethren, to take up to the General Conference the cleanest sheets possible. This will be to our common credit, and will tend to confirm what we believe, and have so often said, that no other ecclesiastical organization in the land has a more loyal or public-spirited constituency than the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

BARBEE & SMITH, Agents.

A Word to Subscribers and Agents.

If subscribers fail to receive their paper regularly, we hope they will notify us, so that the wrong may be righted if possible. Oftentimes the fault is not in our office. Papers that are put into the mails are sometimes not delivered. Why we can not say. In such cases, if brethren will notify us, we will send the missing paper, provided our stock is not exhausted. While we are always glad to have brethren write us about wrongs that need righting, we deem it proper to say that postage stamps are sometimes wasted in writing us about imaginary mistakes. A brother, for instance, orders a renewal of a certain subscription. The next week he ascertains that the label on that subscriber's paper has not been changed. He at once pens an epistle to the publisher calling attention to what he supposes is a delinquency. This is a waste of time and money. Our mailing list is revised monthly. When the proper day of the month comes, the label will be changed; and no amount of letter writing will change it one day sooner. If the subscriber gets his paper regularly, he ought to be satisfied to let us change the label according to the long-established rules of the office.

"Daily Thoughts."

"Daily Thoughts" is the title of a dainty little volume bearing the imprint of R. H. Woodward and Company, Baltimore, Md. The work consists of selections from the writings of the late Bishop Phillips Brooks and Prof. Drummond, with a brief biographical sketch of each. The selections are arranged in diary form, one selection being given for each day in the year. Some of the selections are quite brief; others occupy more space. That the book contains many good thoughts hardly needs to be said. The names of Brooks and Drummond are a sufficient guarantee of that. Personally, we have never had any particular fancy for compilations of this sort. We prefer to see beads of thought strung on some other than a chronological string. Tastes differ, however, and "there is no disputing about tastes." Those who like this sort of literature will, no doubt, be pleased with this beautiful little volume. It contains a little over two hundred pages. Paper, typography and binding are all in the highest style of the book-maker's art.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Bro. D. A. Harmon, of Meridian, let the light of his countenance shine in upon us a few days since.

Dr. Werlein dispensed the bread of life Sunday morning to a large congregation at Carondelet, and, as usual, showed himself "a master of assemblies."

Our sanctum was enlivened a few days since by the presence of our senior Bishop, who is as genial as ever, and as fully alive to all the interests of our Zion.

The pulpit of Rayne Memorial Church was filled Sunday morning by Rev. J. W. McLaurin, agent of the American Bible Society, who delivered an able discourse upon the divine origin of the Bible and the obligation of the church to send it to the nations that sit under the dark shadows of paganism.

We have received a copy of the report of the Board of Trustees of the State Blind Institute of Mississippi to the Legislature, in which the superintendent, Dr. P. Fairly, is completely vindicated from the charges recently made against him in the public prints. We congratulate the superintendent and the State.

We had the pleasure of greeting recently in our sanctum Mr. Hampton Singleton, son of Rev. H. R. Singleton, of the Mississippi Conference. Bro. Singleton was passing through the city en route from San Francisco, Cal., to Jackson, La., where he expects to enter Centenary College, to take a thorough course preparatory to the work of the ministry.

The North Georgia is the largest Conference in the connection. It sends sixteen delegates to the General Conference. Next come the Northwest Texas, the South Carolina, the Tennessee and the Virginia, each of which sends fourteen delegates. The Holston, Missouri, North Alabama, North Texas, South Georgia, Western North Carolina and Baltimore send twelve each. The Alabama, Louisville, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, North Mississippi, Southwest Missouri, send ten each.

We invite special attention to the communication of Rev. A. D. Miller, in another column, with reference to the Indian Mission. It is gratifying to know that Methodism in Mississippi has at last begun to realize its obligation to dispense the bread of life to the aboriginal inhabitants of the land. Neither China, nor Japan, nor any other Pagan land, has a greater claim upon us than have these red men of the forest. These savages, as we are want to esteem them, respond readily to the appeals of the gospel. The Lord's money can not be more wisely expended than by giving it for the support of our devoted Bro. Cammack and his equally consecrated wife.

Keep an Eye on Them.

The land is being flooded with Sunday-school literature from the "Teacher's Bible" down to the "Lesson Leaves" and "Little Folks" publications. Publishers and booksellers are bestirring themselves to furnish the country's increasing demand for this class of publications.

Not only the several denominations, but a number of so-called undenominational (?) societies, are pushing their claims to popular favor with all their might and main.

As to the denominational literature we have nothing to say. The honor of the church standing behind such publications is evinced by the imprint on the title page; but we warn our readers against the pretended "non-sectarian" and "union" concerns. They are disguised dynamite against all that Methodists hold dear. They are chock full either of Calvinism or Unitarianism, and the principles they instill, without the pupil knowing it, is wide of the doctrines and teachings of Methodism and the Holy Scriptures.

A good deal of this stuff is from the presses of the Seventh Day Adventists. They are not honest enough to put their name to the literature in some cases, but if the title reads, "Oakland, California," or "Battle Creek, Michigan," let it alone.

We most earnestly commend the above editorial, which recently appeared in the Texas Christian Advocate, to the serious consideration of pastors and Sunday-school workers in the North Mississippi Conference. We can not be too careful of the books, papers and songs used in our Sunday-schools. A brother recently wrote enquiring about union literature, stating that he "would have to use such in some schools in his charge." But why so when we have it of our own, better adapted and far more safe for our children than any other?

Let us heed the above wise and timely admonition, remembering that to be "forewarned is to be forearmed."

Union Gospel Mission.

While the success of our mission is a source of joy and Christian pride to our hearts, it is also a cause of solicitude and trial. Our growing usefulness in the breadth of its touch constantly brings us into contact with larger demands upon our material resources and other needs. As we gather in the poor little children to our Sunday-school we see their wants; visiting the homes of their parents, these are seen to be often in great straits. We are in a position that impels us to appeal to the benevolence and liberality of the Christian public, for wearing apparel for women and children, garments both of inner and outer wear. Our poor young Sunday-school scholars must be clad. Even yet some are barefooted!

Another need is larger quarters. Our capacity for housing our infant class is greatly taxed. Mrs. M. B. Hillyard had under her charge, last Sunday, forty-two young children in a little room, 10x13 feet. Think of it! And her unflagging zeal and devoted affection are constantly adding to the numbers, last Sunday witnessing fifteen new scholars. What shall we do? Turn these precious little souls from our doors, and say we have no more room? "Go on with your Sabbath-breaking, little ones. We pity you, but we can't help you?" Our proper way out of this is a chapel. May God put it into the heart of one or more wealthy Christians to respond to this sad cry for help!

We are praying and expecting a glorious work among these children in their salvation. The very atmosphere seems rife with such a spirit. If one could see how these children are touched and softened and melted at the persuasive appeals of Mrs. Hillyard to their impressionable young hearts, it would convince them of the justice of our hope. Tears trickle down their cheeks. Exclamations break out here and there: "I love Jesus," "I want to work for Jesus," and such like. Here is a little illustration of this spontaneity shaped in one of the many touching phases of love—a little note from a member of the infant class:

My Dear Teacher: I will rite this little now, because I love Saviour. And my teacher to and every one in the Sun-school.

This is an unexpected, unsolicited letter to Mrs. Hillyard from one of her loving members of the infant class. It came from the heart, and went to the heart!

Very soon Mrs. Hillyard will re-organize her Juvenile Temperance Band, which will, under God, do great work.

Our hearts are so glad at the glorious successes of our works, that we had to prolong our letter. On the other hand, the voices of poor young children who are crowding our doors say, "Let us in, let us in." Won't the Christians help us?

Indian Mission.

I received a letter from Bro. Cammack yesterday, and he wrote me that the first service (fifth Sunday in December) he held after Conference with the Choctaws, he received and baptized one adult and baptized one infant, and on the next Thursday (Jan. 4) he married a couple; so you see he is making a pretty good start on the new year.

And now I want to ask all the Methodist people to make Bro. and Sister Cammack and the Indian Mission a special object of prayer during this year. When you pray, pray for them and the mission. And then answer part of your prayer by sending me a liberal contribution to help carry on the work. We need six hundred dollars to pay missionary and assistants for 1894, and about two hundred and thirty dollars to finish paying for land already bought. We want to buy more land as soon as we are able. Now, brethren and sisters, let us help in this great work. Let us hold up the hands of Bro. and Sister Cammack while they work for the elevation and salvation of the poor destitute heathen Choctaws in our midst. In our midst, shall I have to say it.

Now, can't I find a man or woman that will give one hundred dollars or more—half to go on salary and half to land during the year 1894. And let those that will give smaller amounts from twenty-five cents up send it on, and especially those that have promised on the five years' installment plan, or on any other plan. Send as before by postoffice order on Vicksburg, check or draft on Vicksburg or Jackson, or registered letter. Send to me at Oak Ridge, Warren county, Miss., and be sure to send. Please lay your paper down and write me at once. And if you can't send the money now, send your name and the amount you are willing to pay during the year.

And now, in conclusion, may I ask the presiding elders and preachers to make a statement to their congregations with regard to the necessities in the case, and the editor to exhort for me a little, and everybody to send me a contribution. Bro. P. A. Johnston raised on the Woodville district last year about one hundred dollars, and I doubt if it interfered with his other work at all. What say you, Bro. Johnston? Did it interfere with your Bishops' or other collections? Now, if all our presiding elders will do that well this year, we will get seven or eight hundred dollars from that source. Brethren, please help. And may God graciously bless you all, presiding elders, preachers, and people, and especially the Indian Mission. Amen. A. D. MILLER.

Oak Ridge, Miss., Jan. 9, 1894.

NOTICES.

To the Members of the North Mississippi Conference:

Brethren: The Minutes of our Conference will be out in a very short time. They are the most voluminous I have brought out. They will cost all the collection to print them. I will have no money with which to mail them. I will, therefore, send them to you by express. Brethren who live off the railroad, away from express office, if it suits better, will send me stamps to cover mailing, at the rate of a cent and a half each in packages; two cents each single copy. I have made arrangement to have packages expressed at minimum rate. The Minutes will, I think, be a fine one—full, and a fine picture of Bishop Hargrove and good ones of Bro. and Sister Brooks. The pamphlet will be worth keeping. If some of the brethren do not get any Minutes, write to me. You will then probably find out that your charge did not pay anything on Minutes. In which case if you want any, I will send them at the rate of fifteen cents a copy. I am forced to this in justice to my own pocket, as well as to the charges that have paid for Minutes. I have done my best with these Minutes. May God bless you all, and give wonderful results to the labors of the Conference this year. Your brother,

To the Members of the Class of the Fourth Year, North Mississippi Conference:

Dear Brethren: Your examination at the next session of the Annual Conference will be written. You will have ten questions on each book, and three hours in which to write your answers to the questions on each book. We will have four "sessions" of the class and committee, and dispose of a book at each session. A copy of the questions will be provided for each member of the class, and furnished to him at each session of the class as the books are taken up. Each question will be valued at ten, and you will need to answer seventy per cent. of the whole value, and not less than fifty per cent. on any book.

This is written to answer a number of questions from members of the class.

Respectfully,

Mr. Carnegie's Offer.

The munificent offer made by Andrew Carnegie of money to be used in supplying work to the unemployed of Pittsburgh is deserving of commendation. He proposes to duplicate any amount that the citizens of Pittsburgh may contribute to this purpose, up to five thousand dollars a day for the next sixty days. This is equivalent to an offer of a quarter of million of dollars for this purpose, provided that the citizens of Pittsburgh shall contribute a similar amount. The condition attached to this offer is calculated to stimulate the charitably minded to their utmost efforts.

The letter in which Mr. Carnegie makes his proposition is alike creditable to his heart and his head. The committee having the securing of aid in hand evidently feared the effect of an announcement of a large sum contributed to this cause from Mr. Carnegie, on the ground that a liberal contribution from him would paralyze charitable effort on the part of others. Mr. Carnegie, however, shrewdly forestalls this effect by making the amount of it dependent on the liberality of others.—Methodist Recorder.

ALL OVER THE GLOBE—Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are known. Pills of American manufacture easily lead. Why? Because they're smaller; the very cathartic extract is concentrated. There are many liver pills, yet there must be a reason why Dr. Pierce's Pellets give the best satisfaction. Probably because they're sugar coated, small as grains of mustard seed, therefore, easily swallowed. Most of all—they act in a natural way, and are effective in result. Then, too, after they're taken they can't be felt—so different from the old-fashioned pills, with their griping and violence.

For indigestion, pain in stomach, costiveness and habitual constipation, as well as sick and bilious headaches, these "Pellets" bring such a lasting cure, that they can be guaranteed. Your money is returned, if they do not give satisfaction.

The stepping-stone to Consumption—is Catarrh. It don't pay to let it go, when the makers of Dr. Sage's Remedy will give $500 if they can't effect a permanent cure of your Catarrh.

LOVE LIGHTENS LABOR.

A good wife rose from her bed one morn
And thought with a nervous dread,
Of the piles of clothes to be washed and more
Than a dozen mouths to be fed,
The meals to get for the men in the field,
The children to fix away
To school, and the milk to be skimmed and churned,
And all to be done that day.

It had rained in the night, and all the wood
Was wet as it could be,
There were puddings and pies to bake, besides
A loaf of cake for tea;
And the day was hot, and her aching head
Throbbed wearily, as she said,
"If maidens but knew what good wives know,
They would be in no haste to wed."

"Jennie, what think you I told Ben Brown?"
Called the farmer from the well,
And a flush crept up to his bronzed brow,
And his eyes half bashfully fell,
"It was this," he said, and coming near,
He smiled, and, stooping down,
Kissed her cheek, "'Twas that you were the best
And dearest woman in town."

The farmer went back to the field, and the wife
In a smiling, absent way,
Sang snatches of tender little songs
She'd not sung for many a day;
And the pain in her head was forgot, and the clothes
Were white as the loam of the sea;
Her bread was light, and her butter was sweet,
And as golden as it could be.

"Just think!" the children all called in a breath,
"Tom Wood has run off to sea!
He wouldn't, we know, if he only had
As happy a home as we."
The night came down, and the good wife smiled
To herself, as she softly said,
"'Tis so sweet to labor for those we love,
It's not strange that maids will wed."

Generous of Praise.

How much better the world would be if only people were a little more generous of praise! Let no one suppose that we are speaking of flattery; we mean simply praise, or, as Webster gives it, "honor rendered because of excellence of merit." How easy it is to find fault when everything does not run smoothly, when anything is omitted which ought to have been done! Why should it not be just as easy to give commendation for the right done?

The day is drawing to its close, and the wife and mother, weary with household care, sits for a moment waiting the sound of the home-coming feet. The door opens quickly, and they have come.

"How bright and cheery you look here! But you always make home that!" and the husband's kiss on her cheek brings back the careless girlhood days, and the life looks suddenly bright again.

"The boys wanted me to stay all night, mother, it was stormy; but I thought I would rather come home, and I am glad now I did!" and the boy glanced around the pleasant sitting-room with a look that told plainer than words how attractive a spot it was to him. The mother's weariness had gone like the shadows before the light.

How many homes are rendered unhappy by too much fault-finding and too little just praise! And if one can not praise, what then? Whittier, in his beautiful poem, "My Birthday," says:

"Love watches o'er my quiet ways,
Kind voices speak my name,
And lips that find it hard to praise
Are slow, at least, to blame."

Yes, one can always be "slow, at least, to blame." The fact that little faults try and vex us in those dear to our hearts only goes to prove that the general character is good, and there is much to praise. The whiter the snow, the darker look all objects against it. Why not admire the whiteness which forms the background?

Then, if we look within, if we see with impartial eyes the shortcomings of our own lives, will we not be slower to notice flaws in others? Shall we not say, in the words of Shakespeare: "I will chide no breather in the world but myself, against whom I know most faults?" If, then, we are so frail, so weak ourselves, so dependent on the kindness and forbearance of others, shall we not do the little we can to make the world brighter in turn for them?

If there is anything to admire or praise—and there is always something—speak the word now; it will brighten the weary hours, it will prevent, mayhap, a failure to-morrow—a failure caused by discouragement and pain. O, there is no time like to-day for speaking the words of praise; and then, to-morrow may never come!—The Churchman.

Killing Time.

"Spare a copper, sir; I'm starving," said a poor, half-clad man to a gentleman who was hastening homeward through the streets in the great city one bitter cold night—"Spare a copper, sir, and God will bless you."

Struck with the poor fellow's manner and appearance, the gentleman replied:

"You look as if you had seen better days. If you tell me candidly what has been your greatest failing through life, I'll give you money enough to pay for your lodging."

"I'm afraid I could hardly do that," the beggar answered with a mournful smile.

"Try, man, try;" added the gentleman. "Here's a shilling to sharpen your memory; only be sure to speak the truth."

The man pressed the coin tightly in his hand, and, after thinking for nearly a minute, said:

"To be honest with you, then, I believe my greatest fault has been in learning to 'kill time.' When I was a youngster, I had kind, loving parents, who let me do pretty much as I liked; so I became idle and careless, and never once thought of the change that was in store for me. In the hope that I should one day make my mark in the world, I was sent to college; but there I wasted my time in idle dreaming and expensive amusements. If I had been a poor boy, with necessity staring me in the face, I think I should have done better. But somehow I fell into the notion that life was one continued round of pleasure. I gradually became fond of wine and company. In a few years my parents both died; and you can guess the rest. I soon wasted what little they left me; and now it is too late to combat my old habits. Yes, sir, idleness ruined me."

Family Worship.

Do you live a prayerless life? Are you in a prayerless home? Are you really satisfied to live day in and day out, and never lift up the voice of thanksgiving to your heavenly Father? One who has travelled over much of our country, who has been in very many Presbyterian homes, was greatly surprised to find a minister's home where the family altar was banished. What could that brother expect of his people or of the Lord, when he omitted so important a duty and privilege? Time and again our travelling friend was entertained in elders' homes where no blessing was asked at the table, and where no family worship brought the household together at the beginning of the day's labor, or at its close. Is it any wonder that so many are professing Christians and not possessing Christians? If it is so important to have daily food for the body, why not feed the soul? Why starve it when there is an abundance that can be had for the asking? How can we expect the little ones in the homes to know the Bible or love the Savior, if parents neglect the important home training that comes in daily reading God's Word and communing with him? It has been a pleasure to note the manner in which family worship is conducted in various homes. In one home, husband and wife read alternately. In another, all the family read, say two verses each, about the little circle. It is interesting to see the zest of the little ones as they endeavor to perform their part. At the close of the reading their father leads in prayer. In some homes a psalm or hymn is sung before the reading. It is well to vary the exercise. Now and then ask all to bring a promise for the next morning's worship. Give some attention to the worship. Come with your own heart full of the love of God, and you will be cheered to see the interest taken by all the household, old and young.—Rev. W. H. Jordan.

THREE LITTLE CHICKS.

BY MAC.

Three little chicks
Got into a fix,
Would you like to know what about?
Well, listen a minute,
There's something in it,
It is well for you all to find out.

Hear the old hen say,
In an old hen's way,
That each little chick understood,
"Oh, dear! oh, dear!
I dreadfully fear
You are all very naughty and rude!"

But they stretched up their necks,
And continued their pecks,
As they wickedly fought with each other,
And the hen saw beside her
A hairy, fat spider,
And then she knew what was the bother.

It hung by a thread,
From the rafter o'er head
And Whity and Speckle and Grey
Each wanted the bite,
And you see how the fight
Began in the usual way.

Whity crowded off Speck,
And gave Gray a peck,
And said, "Go away; it is mine."
But Speckle and Grey
Said, emphatically, "Nay!
I'm hound on that spider to dine!"

And now would you see
Just which of the three
Secured the nice prize he was after?
While they were fighting
And scratching and biting,
The spider went home to the rafter.

And each little sinner
Had lost a good dinner,
And the spider might chuckle and say,
"Ha, ha, my fine chicks,
That is one of my tricks,
And I gain and you lose in that way!"

The old mother hen
Turned soberly then,
And said to her children three,
"You may see, if you choose,
How you always will lose,
By acting so selfishly.

"You go hungry to bed,
With each a sore head,
While the spider sits up on the rafter
To enjoy your defeat
In taking his meat,
And is shaking all over with laughter."

From this little fable
I'm sure you are able
To learn what we all ought to know—
That selfish contention,
As I hardly need mention,
Will never a good thing bestow.

Colored Glasses.

"Oh, dear! I do not see why it is," exclaimed Grace.

"And when you are always so ready in every good work," answered her mother.

"What is the matter?" questioned Aunt Mary.

"So many slight me of late, and are so cool when I meet them."

"Are you sure, dear, that you do not see them through colored glasses?"

"Why, what do you mean, aunt?"

"Just this. Take a piece of colored glass and look through it, and see how everything has the shade of the glass. Are you not inclined to look on the dark side of things? You imagine people are cool to you because you look through gloomy glasses. They may be pre-occupied, or your gloominess repels them. Try a change. Look on the bright side and meet people with a smile and cheery greeting, and see if your colored glasses do not become clear and white."

The next morning Grace came home smiling from a trip down town. "Oh, Aunt Mary, 'tis truly so! I met Mrs. H——, who was so cool, and when I tried your plan she stopped and shook hands, and asked if we were all well. She says they have been so anxious about her brother's illness that she has neglected her friends. I am going to keep it up, and if people do not respond cheerily I am going to think they are worried, or have the blues, and are not thinking of me."

"Well, well," exclaimed her mother; "behold how great a fire a little matter kindleth. Here I have been fighting your battles in the church when there were really none to fight. I thought people slighted you. Mary has given us a lesson."

"Yes, 'tis a remedy I never knew to fail," said Aunt Mary.

If you get the blues, go and do some kind act and they will disappear.

"This world is not so bad a world
As some would like to make it;
But whether good, or whether bad,
Depends on how we take it."

"As one lamp lights another, nor grows less,
So nobleness enkindleth nobleness."

—Herald and Presbyter.

There are thousands amongst us who are keenly alive to the importance of training for dogs, or horses, or cattle, who would practically allow boys to grow up anyhow.—Diggle.

Wheelbarrow Folks.

There are a good many children, and some grown people, who go like a wheelbarrow—that is, they go just as far as you push them, and when you stop they stop. You tell them to do a thing, and they do it, and that is all they will do. If you want a thing done again, you must tell them to do it again. If you want it done forty times, you must tell them forty times to do it.

There are other people who, when you set them going, can keep on themselves. They have some "go" in them. If you complain that a thing has been neglected this week, next week they will see that it is not neglected.

There is a great deal of difference in the value of these two kinds of people, because the wheelbarrow kind of folks need somebody to run them, just as much as a machine needs somebody to attend to it. They only go while you watch them and push them; so if you have one such person at work, you must employ another one to watch him and keep him going; but if you have one of the other kind at work, he will watch himself, do his work, and make you no trouble about it.

It is very important for all boys and girls to decide which class they will belong to, whether they will be wheelbarrow folks, that go as far as they are pushed, and then stop, or whether they can be depended upon to keep in motion after they are once started. Boys or girls who must be told what to do, and watched while they do it, are not worth their salt; but if a person can do a thing with once telling, and continue doing it without further care, such a person is worth more than gold. —Little Christian.

Which is it to be, little worker? Will you go forward with the work yourself, bravely and cheerily? or will you wait to be pushed along like a wheelbarrow?

How to Quarrel.

In the depth of the forest there lived two foxes, who never had a cross word with each other. One of them said one day, in the politest fox language:

"Let's quarrel."

"Very well," said the other, "as you please, dear friend. How shall we set about it?"

"Oh! it can not be difficult," said fox number one; "two-legged people fall out, why should not we?"

So they tried all sorts of ways, but it could not be done, because each one would give way. At last number one fetched two stones.

"There," said he, "you say they're yours, and I'll say they're mine, and we will quarrel and fight and scratch. Now I'll begin. Those stones are mine."

"Very well," answered the other, "you are welcome to them."

"But we shall never quarrel at this rate!" cried number one, jumping up and licking his face.

"You old simpleton, don't you know it takes two to make a quarrel any day?"

So they gave it up as a bad job, and never tried to play at this silly game again.—Messenger.

A rich gentleman came one day to a large orphan asylum to take a little boy and bring him up as his own son. He was shown into the children's play-room and soon became interested in two boys whose looks and actions he liked very much. They were both bright and intelligent, and he hardly knew which to choose. As he stood watching them in their play and trying to decide, one of the girls stumbled and fell. She was a cripple and unable to rise at once from the floor. In a moment one of the two boys was helping her on her feet as politely and kindly as a boy could. That act decided the gentleman's choice.

"I want a boy who has a good heart," he said, and he took him away to a happy home and loving friends.

The boy did not know why he was chosen, or that the gentleman was watching him. He aided the little girl because he had the spirit of the white dove in his heart, and it was the gentle spirit that brought him a home and friends. It is always the right heart that brings us joy and peace, and the wrong heart that brings us sorrow and punishment. —Christian Colonist.

CROSSLEY.—ANDREW CROSSLEY was born in the State of Georgia, Sept. 1, 1816; moved to Mississippi while quite a child, and settled in Amite county. He died at McComb City, Miss., Dec. 27, 1893, aged seventy-seven years three months and twenty-six days.

In 1852 he joined the M. E. Church, South, at Adams Camp Ground, in Lincoln county, Miss., under the ministry of Rev. Allen Cassels. During his life he was twice married, leaving his second wife and five children to mourn their loss. All are members of the church. Rev. C. M. Crossley is a member of the Mississippi Conference.

Bro. Crossley had united in him those virtues which go to make up a thorough Christian life. After he laid himself on the altar a living sacrifice, he spent the remainder of his mortal life building, by the grace of God, a character and influence that remain in the hearts and minds of his family and friends. So far as this writer knows, our brother never shirked or neglected a known duty. He was never happier than when singing and praying with a penitent sinner. He never stood on excuses commonly made by men, but when duty called he was always ready to go. His religion did not consist in creeds and dogmas, but in purity, keeping constantly before him the inspiring thought, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." He was a loyal man in every department of life. The church has lost a godly, spiritual man; the community, a true neighbor and faithful citizen, who could always be counted on the side of right, and he has gained a home in that "house not made with hands."

May God bless the bereaved family, and give them the consolation which can come only from the presence of the Holy Spirit!

M. L. BURTON.

LEWIS—QUINEA MONROE LEWIS, son of Barney and Kiziah Lewis, was born in Holmesville, Pike county, Miss., and died at his home at Norfield, Lincoln county, Miss., Sept. 16, 1893, aged forty-four years five months and twenty-nine days.

Quinea was a quiet, good boy; developed into a good man; lived a quiet, peaceable life; joined the church in early life; served God to the best of his knowledge and ability; died in the faith and is gone to rest. He was a grandson of Uncle Quinea and Aunt Martha Lewis, (late of Holmesville, Miss.), of precious memory.

May God bless and take care of his widow and children!

H. P. LEWIS.

Summit, Miss.

VAIL—BARBARA ALLEN VAIL (nee Blakeney) was born in Chesterfield district, S. C., Aug. 29, 1835. She was married to Henry Vail, Oct. 17, 1852. On Oct. 28, 1893, she fell asleep in Jesus, in Lowndes county, Miss., and was buried at Trinity Church. In early life she gave her heart to God and joined the M. E. Church, South; in Pickens county, Ala.

Sister Vail leaves a husband, a son and three daughters. May the blessing of God fall on each of them, and bring them to the home God has for all who will love and serve him!

D. L. COGDELL.

CARTER—GEORGE E. CARTER, son of Dr. L. E. and A. M. Carter, was born in Copiah county, Miss., April 10, 1863, and died Nov. 9, 1893. He seemed to realize from the beginning of his helplessness, which was thirty-nine days before his death, that death was hovering near, and he was ever making preparations for his future home. He was constantly heard praying, and asked those around him to pray for him; but during the last days of his life he became resigned and seemed perfectly satisfied. His last words were: "Pa, do meet me in heaven." What a sacred request! What a loving thought! What a consolation! God grant that not only his father, but all his relatives and friends may also join him in his sublime abode. He was not a member of any church, but he said shortly before his death that he had fully decided to join the church and become a thorough Christian.

He was a loving son, a devoted brother, a loyal and constant friend. He was always patient and kind, and ready to assist the needy and befriend the friendless. With an aching heart we say, Farewell, but not forever. We'll meet again. His sorrowing friend,

ALICE.

HAMBERLIN—Died, on Nov. 28, 1893, at his home on Bayou Cocodrie, Mr. JOHN I. B. HAMBERLIN, aged sixty-four years and seven months. His last illness was pneumonia. He had it several times previously, but his age and feebleness rendered him unfit to battle with the terrible disease, and on the ninth day he died. He said to his daughter before he took his bed that it would soon be over with him. His life was one of many trials and sorrows, which he bore with much patience and submission. He joined the church in 1877, and, though living where he was denied church privileges, he was always ready to attend the house of God whenever opportunity offered. His mind wandered, but he would speak of peace, happiness and joy. We trust he is now resting in the beautiful home above, where no sorrow ever comes.

He was twice married. His last wife and one daughter with five children are left to mourn the loss of a devoted father, kind husband and grandfather. May God comfort the bereaved ones as he only can!

ONE WHO LOVED HIM.

BURCH—Mrs. MARTHA H. BURCH was born of Lahan and Mary Temple, near Cheraw, S. C., Dec. 25, 1819. She joined the Methodist Church in early life, and rejoiced to live within its pale through all the coming days of her pilgrimage. On March 23, 1842, she was united in marriage to Mr. Joseph Burch in Hamburg, S. C. He lived only about one year. Thus for fifty years our sister remained in widowhood. She experienced the promises given by the "widow's Judge." Since 1879 she has had a pleasant home in Edwards, Miss., with her sister, Mrs. Mary Boyer, and her kind husband, our brother, Henry Boyer, lately deceased. Here she lived quietly till the summons came, Dec. 7, 1893.

In the midst of the suffering of her last painful illness she loved to have prayer and the singing of such good old hymns as, "How firm a foundation," etc. May the now doubly bereaved sister and other friends find consolation in the good hope of meeting her where parting is unknown!

J. P. DAAKE.

Edwards, Miss.

BAKER—ELLA BAKER was born in Woodville, Miss., April 13, 1861, and died Nov. 13, 1893. It was the privilege of the writer to know her well from early childhood. A more faithful wife, dutiful daughter or loving sister can nowhere be found. She was always tender and sympathetic. For several years she had suffered a great deal, and none can realize the intense suffering she underwent during the last few weeks of her life; but she bore it all with great fortitude. God saw that it was best to take her home, even in her young life, not only to make heaven more glorious, but to attract the loved ones of earth heavenward. Her death has cast a gloom over her home and over the entire neighborhood.

Let us all strive to meet our sister in heaven where there is no more sorrow, and where there is rest forevermore. May God bless the dear friends that were so kind to us in our sorrow! Her brother, CECIL I. BASS.

EVANS—JOHN EVANS was born in Tennessee, Sept. 9, 1805, and died Jan. 1, 1894, aged eighty-eight years three months and twenty-one days. He came to Rankin county in early life and joined the Methodist Church in 1860. He came to Lincoln county and united with the Methodist Church at Hopewell, and remained a consistent member till death. He was twice married.

Mr. Evans leaves a numerous family and a host of friends to mourn his loss. Bro. Evans died in peace. Just before his end came he was asked what about the future. He said he was ready to go home. May the blessings of Heaven rest upon all the family! Amen.

REV. R. HAVENS.

Auburn, Miss.

THOMAS—LUCILLE, daughter of D. J. and Laura Thomas, died Oct. 1, 1893. Only eleven months and four days was this heavenly bud permitted to remain in its earthly home—just long enough to entwine herself in our affections, long enough to leave an aching void in parental hearts.

Sorrowing ones, weep not. Your precious babe awaits you, and doubtless stands "at the beautiful gate" with outstretched arms to greet "mama" and "papa" when their journey here is done."

"And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death neither sorrow nor crying." ORA HART.

ALEXANDER—Died, near Howard, Miss., at the home of her grandfather, J. W. DeLoach, little RUTH MILLS ALEXANDER, infant daughter of J. M. and Mrs. Lizzie C. Alexander, born Dec. 31, 1893; died Jan. 8, 1894.

We laid her little form to rest in Liberty Chapel Church-yard. Though the "cup is bitter," may the Lord enable us to say, "Thy will be done!" HER FATHER.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

How many lay up riches which they never enjoy to provide for exigencies that never happen, to prevent troubles that never come, sacrificing present comfort and enjoyment in guarding against the wants of a period they may never live to see.—Jay.

Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has made a name and record in the past fifty years that is enviable. Thousands of people having tried it for coughs, colds, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis and consumption know its value, and would not be without it. Why? Because it cures where other remedies fail. We recommend it for children subject to croup and whooping cough. It will give relief and cause speedy cure. The medical profession recognize it, and physicians frequently prescribe it for lung troubles. These facts have pushed Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar to the front rank. It is the best remedy for coughs, colds, all throat and lung affections, and no family should be without it. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

No mineral water will produce the beneficial results that follow taking ONE or more of "BEECHAM'S PILLS" with a glass of water immediately upon arising in the morning.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

On Monday, in this city, the Sheriff's Association of the State of Louisiana held a general meeting.

More than a thousand persons signed the total abstinence pledge in a late temperance revival in Mont Clair, N. J.

A mob of twenty men entered the jail at Russell, Kan., on Jan. 13, and, taking out three men, hung them to a railroad bridge.

It is said that a perfect underground trolley system has been invented by a Covington, Ky., man, and that it has been patented in all foreign countries.

Six million dollars is due the sugar planters of Louisiana for bounty by the government, and it is reported that there is no money in the treasury appropriated for its payment.

According to the 1892 report on the mineral resources of the United States, by the geological survey, just to hand, the total output of salt for Louisiana for that year is estimated at 200,000 barrels, valued at $100,000.

The race track and gambling laws, passed by the Legislature of New Jersey last Winter, have gotten before the Supreme Court of that State, and have been declared unconstitutional and void. The decision was by Mr. Justice Lippincott.

The foundation of a new church is being seriously discussed in Chicago, and it looks as though something of the sort would be attempted as an outcome of the World's Parliament of Religions. This church is to have for its great principle the abolition of all religious sects and differences, and to be one in which Christian, Pagan, Jew and Gentile may worship together in perfect harmony.

The New York Journal of Commerce, the recognized authority on such matters, has published a statement showing the total fire loss in the United States and Canada during the year 1893, with comparisons with previous years. Large as the totals for the two preceding years were, those of 1893 show a still greater waste from the ravages of the fiery element. The total for the twelve months ending with December was $156,000,000, as compared with $132,000,000 in 1892 and $137,000 000 in 1891.

Another one of the cases for damages against the city on account of the Italians lynched in the Parish Prison, in 1890, is on trial in the United States Circuit Court. This is the sixth in course, five others having previously been decided against the city. The two first brought verdicts in the premises for $5 000 each. Two more resulted in verdicts for damages in the sums of $3,000 and $2 500 respectively. These two verdicts were set aside by the court in response to petitions for new trials, while the court of its own volition annulled another for $1,500 on the ground that it was too little.

FOREIGN.

It is announced upon fairly good authority, that the Russian delegates have agreed to the proposed Russo-German commercial treaty, and that the duration of the treaty, as agreed upon, is to be ten years.

The Russian naval programme for 1894 provides for the spending of £5 500 000, which is between £2,000 000 and £3 000 000 more than the total credits for the last two years. Of this amount £1,800,000 is allotted for naval construction, and £280,000 for new guns.

The New York Herald correspondent in Rio sends word that the year 1893 was closed with a lively rifle and machine gun duel between the rebel launches and the government troops on shore in front of the Sande Storehouse. The fighting continued for two hours and many were wounded in the fusilade. Shot and shell fell in several parts of the city.

The revolution in progress in Honduras, which now practically amounts to a war between that republic and the neighboring State of Nicaragua, promises to eventually lead to a general Central American upheaval. It is reported by recent dispatches in the Picayune that Guatemala is openly siding with the government party in Honduras, and that an outbreak is imminent in consequence between Guatemala and Salvador. There is thus a promise of four out of the five Central American States being in a state of war in the near future, and it is more than probable that the remaining State, Costa Rica, will eventually be drawn into the squabble.

Capt. Wilson, who was in pursuit of King Lobengula, in Africa, suddenly came upon a strong detachment of Matabeles, headed by the king himself. Instructing the center of his force to continue retreating before the British troops, who were pressing their horses onward through the Matabele ranks, in the hope of capturing the king, the right and left flanks of the Matabeles impis was instructed to deploy to the right and to the left, and then to gradually converge inward so as to take the British force on both flanks and in the rear. Thus the English force was massacred. Capt. Wilson's force, outside of a few natives, was thirty-four, while the Africans are said to have been, at least, a thousand.

PERIODICALS.

McClure's Magazine, for 1894. The best literature, the newest knowledge, fully illustrated. Among the contributors for the coming year are: Professor Drummond, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, Archdeacon Farrar, Bret Harte, Rudyard Kipling, Octave Thanet, Andrew Lang, W. D. Howells, Gilbert Parker, F. R. Stockton, Joel Chandler Harris, Conan Doyle, R. L. Stephenson, Charles A. Dana, Archibald Forbes, and many others. 15 cents a copy. $1.50 a year. S. S. McClure, Limited, 743 and 745 Broadway, New York City.

Babyhood, for January, has an article by Dr. C. H. May on "Eye Troubles in Children." Dr. R. Lewis discusses authoritatively the subject of ear troubles, laying down special rules for syringing the ear. In "The Mothers' Parliament" are found entertaining letters on "Neighborly Kindness," on "Hapti of Repose," "The Advent of Little Brother," and other subjects dear to young mothers. The benefits of "Suburban Homes" are the theme of an interesting article, and there is the usual medical advice in reply to questions concerning the promotion of the flow of milk, winter garments, constipation, points of diet, etc. $1 a year. Babyhood Publishing Co., New York.

St. Nicholas, for January, 1894, begins with a Christmas picture, and then transports us in a single instant to India, whose, under guidance of Rudyard the magician, we enter the forest and see how a little "man cub" is adopted by a kindly family of wolves. "Mowgli's Brothers," as this tale is called, is as good in its way as the old legend of Romulus and Remus. Mr. William T. Hornaday begins in this number a valuable series of papers upon Natural History. In the City Series, Frank R. Stockton describes St. Augustine, Florida, with a passing glance at the city's history. Mr. Clifford Howard gives a full picture of the daily routine of the Government Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Dr. Eastman continues his autobiographical sketch of Indian life among the Sioux; and Sarah L. Guerin tells how Hugh McCulloch, when Secretary of the Treasury, once fulfilled the function of a Santa Claus—a story based on fact. The shorter pieces are less important only in length. Stamp-collecting is to have a department of its own in St. Nicholas.

With the January number The School Review begins its second volume. The opening paper, "A Syllabus of Latin Instruction," by W. C. Collar, embodies the experience of one of the foremost classical teachers of the country. The teaching of English is treated in a very suggestive paper, "The Conditions Needed for the Successful Teaching of English Composition," by Samuel Thurber. A paper on "The Outlook for English," by Professor J. M. Hart, outlines the progress made during the year, and suggests the lines for future effort. President Charles DeGarmo has a thoughtful and scholarly paper on "Formal vs. Concrete Studies." J. Howard Gore, professor of mathematics in Columbian University, writes on "The Waste of Mathematics." "The Study of Irving," by Gertrude F. Adams, will prove helpful in class work. There are valuable book reviews by Professor R. W. Thomas, Principal O. B. Rhodes, Professor W. B. Smith, and others. There are the usual valuable summaries of Current Educational Literature. The School Review, $1.50 a year. Hamilton, N. Y.

The Review of Reviews, for January, is particularly strong in its editorial resume of the closing events of the stirring and turbulent year 1893. Dr Albert Shaw, the editor, discusses tariff revision, the relief of the unemployed, recent strikes and labor questions, the Hawaiian question and the Administration's policy with regard to that subject, civil service reform as applied to our diplomatic and consular as well as other branches of the public service, and a great variety of other topics of the day. Foreign affairs are briefly, but clearly presented, and this department, entitled "The Progress of the World," presents in some twenty pages a broad and frank treatment of affairs political and social from Canada to Capetown. Among the portraits interspersed are those of Hon. W. L. Wilson, who gives his name to the new tariff bill; Miss Clara Barton, the American head of the Red Cross Society; Hon. J. P. McDonald, chairman of the New Jersey State Board of Arbitration; Hon. G. Robertson, Jr., chairman of the New York State Board of Arbitration; Mr. Arthur Marshall Chambers, chairman of the English Coal Owners' Federation; Mr. J. R. Sovereign, new Master Workman of the Knights of Labor; Mr. T. V. Powderly, formerly Master Workman; Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, and the late John Tyndall, the eminent scientist.

The January Century opens with the second paper on the Old Dutch Masters by Mr. Cole, the engraver. This number contains a paper in the group of musical articles on the great composers of the past written by well-known composers and musicians of the present. An article of a wholly different character in the same department is Miss Alice Fletcher's study of Indian music, based on her personal residence among the Omaha Indians, concerning whose lore she is an accepted expert. Chief of the literary material is an unpublished essay by Mr. Lowell, entitled "The Function of the Poet," which Professor Norton in a prefatory note declares to be "not unworthy to stand with Sidney's and with Shelly's 'Defense of Poesy'" and "fitted to warm and inspire the poetic heart of the youth of this generation." An addition to the group of articles on "Notable Women" is a paper on George Sand by her friend and protegee, Th. Bentzon (Madame Blanc). A striking portrait accompanies the article. A third literary paper is Mr. Brander Matthews' article on Andrew Lang. A matter of much public interest is discussed by ex-President Harrison in an Open Letter on "Military Instruction in Schools and Colleges." In archæology there is an illustrated paper by Professor Morris Jastrow, Jr., of the University of Pennsylvania, setting forth the relations of "The Bible and the Assyrian Monuments," in which is included an account of the creation and the flood as described on these monuments. Special interest attaches to an article on Sir James Simpson's "Introduction of Chloroform," the circumstances of which are recorded by his daughter. A magazine article of both general and unique interest is Mr. Gustav Kobbe's account of "Life in a Lighthouse." The most prominent fiction of the number is the second instalment of Mark Twain's "Pudd'nhead Wilson." In the editorial department are articles strongly supporting the new movement for the abolition of the Spoils System, and advocating free coal and a systematic policy for the protection and cultivation of the national forests. Room is also made for an article in favor of "The Silver Side of the Question," by Mr. C. S. Thomas, of Denver, who takes issue with The Century's well-known position on the financial question.

THIS CURIOUS THING

GREATLY MAGNIFIED.

Is a Sweat or Excretory Gland.
Its mouth is called a PORE.
There are 7,000,000 in the human skin.
Through them are discharged many impurities.
To close them means death.
Sluggish or clogged pores mean yellow, mothy skin, pimples, blotches, eczema.
The blood becomes impure.
Hence serious blood humors.
Perfect action of the pores
Means clear, wholesome skin,
Means pure blood,
Means beauty and health.

Cuticura Resolvent

Exerts a peculiar, purifying action upon the skin, and through it upon the blood.
Thus its cures of distressing humors are speedy, permanent, and economical.
Like all of the CUTICURAS, it is pure, sweet, gentle, and effective. Mothers and children are its warmest friends.

Bad Complexions

Sluggish action of the pores also causes the complexion and skin to become dark, yellow, oily and mothy, giving rise to pimples, blackheads, roughness, redness, falling hair and baby-blemishes.

The only reliable preventive and external cure is CUTICURA SOAP, the most effective skin purifying and beautifying soap in the world as well as the purest and sweetest for toilet and nursery.

CUTICURA REMEDIES are sold everywhere. Price, CUTICURA RESOLVENT, $1; OINTMENT, 50c; SOAP, 25c. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Proprietors, Boston, Mass. "All about the Skin and Blood," mailed free.

$100 Reward, $100.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

THE NAME IN THE SAND.

BY HANNAH F. GOULD.

Alone I walked the ocean strand;
A pearly shell was in my hand;
I stopped and wrote upon the sand
My name—the year—the day.
As onward from the spot I passed,
One lingering look back I cast;
A wave came rolling high and fast,
And washed my lines away.

And so methought 'twill shortly be
With every mark on earth from me:
A wave of dark oblivion's sea
Will sweep across the place
Where I have trod the sandy shore
Of time and been to be no more,
Of me—my day—the name I bore,
To leave nor track nor trace.

And yet, with him who counts the sands,
And holds the waters in his hands,
I know a lasting record stands,
Inscribed against my name,
Of all this mortal part has wrought;
Of all this thinking soul has thought;
And from these fleeting moments caught,
For glory or for shame.

The Sound in the Mulberry Trees.

BY REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D. D.

"And let it be when thou hearest the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees, that then thou shalt bestir thyself."—II. Samuel v, 24.

There is a scene in Israelitish history which has a happy significance for the present time. It is full of suggestions for the hour. The scene is laid in the valley of Rephaim, southwest of Jerusalem, where an army of Philistines are moving upon the Jewish capital. David confronts them with the Lord's host. An inquiry for divine guidance brings to David this remarkable answer: "Fetch a compass behind the Philistines and come upon them over against the mulberry trees. And let it be when thou hearest the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees, that then thou shalt bestir thyself; for then shall the Lord go out before thee." What this "sound of a going" was exactly we can not tell. It probably resembled the march of an army in the air. A host of unseen angels may have moved above the mulberry [illegible] terror into the hearts of the Philistines and sending them into precipitate retreat. As they retreated they fell into the hands of the Israelites (who had swung around to their rear), and were routed with complete discomfiture.

Whatever that "sound of the going" may have been, it was a direct signal of the Almighty to his servants. David was waiting for the signal. When God moved, he moved. He co-operated with the Lord, and a glorious victory was the result. Now, there are some ears of corn growing in this page of Bible history. Let us pluck and eat.

The first truth we gather is, that God signals to his people to take certain steps at certain times. Then it is their duty to bestir themselves. When the deluge was about to descend upon a guilty world Noah was commanded to bestir himself and prepare an ark for the saving of his household. When the fire shower was coming upon Sodom, Lot was laid hold of by God's angels and urged to escape for his life. When the children of Israel were in peril of being overwhelmed by the Egyptians, God signaled to them the order to advance, and by a majestic pillar of cloud led them through the parted sea. All sacred history is studded with illustrations of this truth. Martin Luther, discovering the "open secret" in the convent Bible at Erfurth, and hammering his theses on the church door of Wittenburg; the young Wesleys, awakened at Oxford and sent out to awaken slumbering Britain, were simply God's agents bestirring themselves at the divine signal.

And, then, God has his "set times to favor Zion." One of these was the memorable day of Pentecost. The faithful men and women in the upper room heard a sound as of a mighty rushing wind, and the baptism of fire descended. God moved, and his people were on their feet promptly. Filled with the Holy Ghost, they began at once to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance. All Jerusalem is stirred with this new and strange activity. Every Christian is at work—one preaching the new gospel, another healing the sick, others ministering to the poor and suffering. Each man, each woman obeys the signal. The Word of God grows mightily and prevails. The secret of this marvelous success is that Christians promptly and thoroughly co-operated with the Divine Spirit.

Here is the lesson for the hour in the American churches. The indications of God's providence are unmistakable. Not more distinctly did Israel hear the sound of the going in the tops of the mulberry trees than the churches of this land now hear the signaling voice of the Lord Jesus to bestir themselves for prayer and personal effort. The widespread financial distress is one indication. Fearful demoralizations in public and private life furnish another proof of the imminent need of a reform such as Heaven's power and grace alone can bring. Let God's people in every community simply conspire with the Holy Ghost and obey the divine leadings. To do this, each man, each woman must feel the drawings of the Master's love, and lay hold of their own individual duty. Each man, each woman, giving himself and herself to Jesus in fresh consecration, must do just what the spirit of God puts in their way. The power of the Apostolic Church laid in personal devotion to Christ's cause. It was not what ecclesiastical bodies did, but what Peter did, and Paul did, and Dorcas did, and Onesiphorus did, that makes up the brilliant record of holy achievement. And if at the present time individual self-consecration and individual effort is swallowed up in the indiscriminate herd of mere numbers, then the looked-for "revival" will end in a rainless gust of wind and driving dust. God's voice now is to each one of his children, "Bestir thyself!" Don't wait for your church to move, or any Moody to come. Ask God's Spirit what to do, and then act with that Spirit. Christians are quickened one by one; sinners are to be led to Jesus one by one. My brother, what art thou doing?

This passage of God's Word has a personal application. There are times when each child of Jesus hears the "sound of the going in the mulberries." Let them be improved. Do not let us lose heaven's fair wind. When we get into close union with Jesus in prayer, let us ask for great blessings. When we get fresh insight into the Word, let us open it to others. When our hearts are stirred with sympathy for sinners, then is the time to "pull them out of the fire." If the Holy Spirit is striving with us, then is the time to strive with him to save men from eternal death. As God moves in us, let us move for the salvation of those within our reach.

One more turn let us give to this text. A time of trial is often a time of especial blessing. I have read of a German baron who stretched between the towers of his castle a set of iron wires. In calm weather the wires were silent, but when the winds arose these metallic chords began to play, and in the height of the gale this hurricane harp gave out glorious music. So is it with a child of God. In seasons of calm and quiet prosperity he may too often become silent, inactive, useless. But when the storms of trial strike him, his soul-harp awakes to new melodies of love and faith, and his life becomes as a stringed instrument struck by the hand of Jesus. Some who read these lines may be in a severe gale of adversity or bereavement. Open your heart, brother, to the voice and the influences of the divine and loving Spirit. Let the time of trial be the time for doing God's will, and at least one soul will taste the joys of a true revival.—The Pulpit.

Aiding Error.

BY REV. O. C. S. WALLACE.

Some clergymen seem to feel that the sacred responsibilities of the pastoral office demand that they should knock the chip off of a heretic's shoulder periodically. The motive is good, and the courage exhibited is often beyond praise; but sometimes, alas! there is a sad lack of discretion. No doubt a heretical chip is enough to make a preacher's argumentative fist itch for action; but before the blow is administered it would be discreet to learn whether or not the saucy chip is spoiling either the wool or the fatness of the flock, or has been even so much as seen by them, and also to walk all around the challenger upon whose shoulder the chip rests, considering carefully the measure of his sinews and the hardness of his knuckles. It was after David had killed a lion and a bear that he walked up to Goliath so pluckily. In this the rosy-cheeked shepherd differed from some who, since that day, have thrown stones at giants. Men who have never succeeded in vanquishing a village skeptic will not hesitate to grapple in the pulpit with the greatest infidel, living or dead. Their arm is feeble and their aim inaccurate. It is quite beyond them to throw a missile straight at the forehead. And yet they will flatter up to some great foe as bumptiously as if a field full of bears and lions had been slain by their prowess, and it was quite a common thing for them to lay a giant low. A seventh-rate minister, obeying the impulse of duty, perhaps, but untaught by judgment, grapples with an infidel of the first rate. He puts forward the arguments of the infidel with force, because using the language in which he has learned them; and then he attacks these cunning, carefully wrought propositions and reasonings with arguments of his own devising. The conflict is most disproportioned. Acute minds perceive at once that Don Quixote has joined battle with the windmill, and is being badly battered in the contest. Or some orthodox preacher, whose piety is thoroughly respectable, but whose controversial gifts are most insignificant, feels called upon to instruct his people upon the new theology, and to argue it into some dim and dusty corner. He states the propositions of the heresy in the language of its ablest advocates, and then attempts to demolish the arguments which have been stated so powerfully. What follows? Grant that he is right, what then? If Error fights with a Damascus blade and Truth with a pine toothpick, which inflicts the deeper wound? The brightest minds in the congregation quickly discover the situation. They see that Quixote is badly bruised and shaken, while the windmill is whirling as before; and though they feel kindly towards the well-meaning, battered Don, they can not but suspect that the windmill is the abler of the two, and wonder if the orthodoxy of the vanquished is not weaker than the heterodoxy of the victor. Mischief has been done simply from want of discretion. Many persons learn their heresies, skepticisms and infidelity from their minister. But for him they would never hear any forcible presentation of mischievous errors. They pay no attention to the vaporings of some blatant fellow, who intrudes his declamations upon them on the street or in the shop; but when, on the Sabbath day, their minister lays down the same positions in a most forcible and telling manner, the novelty of the situation is sufficient to warrant that these will make an abiding impression upon his mind, while, in many cases, it is almost certain that the impression made by the arguments in rebuttal will not be so deep or permanent. And, after all, why should a shepherd let a wolf loose among his lambs, just to let the lambs see him catch it? Perhaps he will not catch it! "There's the rub." The commission of the preacher says, first of all, "Feed my lambs." It does not say, "Fight to amuse my lambs." When the wolf comes, the true shepherd will fight like a lion; but, if wise, he will not import the wolf, but rather will spend his energies in searching for green pastures and clear, cool waters.—Watchman.

Home Religion.

The Bible is in a very special sense a book for the home, full of sweet pictures of home life, and counsels how to make home happy and holy. In the Old Testament we have glimpses into the home in Eden, where Adam had fellowship face to face with God; the home of Abraham, where Isaac was nurtured into piety; the home of Jacob, in which Rachel was the sunshine, and the quarrels of the children the clouds; the home of Jesse, where David learned how to sing and how to do deeds of bravery; and the home of Hannah, where Samuel grew up in an atmosphere of faith and prayer, which made him strong for a great life-work. Equally beautiful are the revelations of the home life of the New Testament. The home of Bethany, in which the Savior always found rest and sympathy; the home of Timothy, where mother and grandmother taught the child the Holy Scriptures; and, above all, the home of Nazareth, where the Son of God, incarnate in the flesh, spent his boyhood, suggest pictures to the Bible student which abide with him as a delight and inspiration. One of the reasons, and not the least of them, why the Bible should be a well-thumbed and much-prized volume in every fireside circle is, because it is so distinctively a home volume.

In the home are the beginnings of life, social, national and ecclesiastical. So it comes about that the religion of the home enters into the religion of the Church and the State as a determining factor. The Bible has much to say about the religion of the homes it describes. Family worship in some form it emphasizes from the very dawn of family life. Patriarchal customs, as depicted in the chronicles of the Book of Genesis and the Book of Job, found a place for home religion. It is very significant that the only acts of worship we read about in the Book of Job are family sacrifices offered by Job on behalf of his children—sacrifices which correspond to the family worship of the Christian dispensation. It was in the capacity of heads of their respective households that Noah and Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, in all their journeys, reared altars to Jehovah. The patriarchal religion was peculiarly and emphatically home religion. The father of the family was always the priest of the household; and the most eminent commentators are of the opinion that the sacrifices they offered were distinctively family sacrifices of thanksgiving for family blessings, or of petition for the removal of family afflictions. When the family organization widened into the tribal organization, the old arrangement still held good, the head of the enlarged family being at once chief and priest of the tribe. Thus Melchizedek was king of Salem and priest of the Most High God. The heads of the families and the chieftains of the tribes remained priests of their respective households and tribes until the giving of the law, when Aaron and his sons were consecrated and the tribes of Levi set apart to priestly functions. Home religion sanctified the family life from its very foundation.

It is instructive to notice that even after the establishment of the Levitical priesthood exercises of family worship had their own place and value. There were frequent family festivals which partook of a religious character. "Our family had a sacrifice in the city, and my brother, he had commanded me to be there." These family sacrifices are supposed to have been continuations of patriarchal customs incorporated into the Levitical ritual, and served not only to cement into hallowed unity the fellowships of the household, but also to preserve the individuality of family religion. Over and over again in the later history of the Old Testament do we meet with hint of the existence of home religion as distinct from the national religion of the children of Israel. Thus, for example, we read that at the close of the solemn celebration of the bringing of the ark into the city of David, "all the people departed, every one to his own house; then David returned to bless his own household." What is the meaning of this phrase but, to quote the words of a capable commentator, "that at the close of a day of great public interest, after he had, as king, taken part with his people in the national rejoicing, David returned to unite with those who called him by the more sacred name of father, in rendering more special thanksgiving for what was, indeed, a blessing to all the people over whom he ruled, but a peculiar blessing to the family of which he was the head."

Home religion is, then, inseparable from the home life of Bible homes. The father is the priest of the household, and in every home there ought to be an altar on which sacrifices of thanksgiving and petition ought to be offered. This is, we fear, a neglected truth in our day, and because it is neglected the vitality of the religion of the Church and the State is seriously threatened. As water can not rise above its level, no more can the religion of a country rise above the level of the religion of the families which make up the population of the country. Of all the problems of our age, not one is more important or urgent than the preservation of the religious exercises of the home in their primitive purity and power. Back of all social and political questions stands this question of home religion, holding in it the key of the position. There can be no doubt that if all our homes were really Christian, the Christianizing of the rest of life would be an easy task. Homes are the need of the world, and the supreme force in home-making is the religion of Jesus Christ as an atmosphere to pervade and an influence to mould the life of the fireside. The highest patriotism seeks the best welfare of the State, and that best welfare is inalienably bound up with the constant and universal practice of home religion.—New York Observer.

Bishop Wilson's Letter.

The Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society begs a hearing from the church. By every token it is entitled to it. Governed by no selfish motive, looking not more local interest, it proposes to contribute along its own lines of endeavor, and, it may be, sacrifice to the furtherance of the one great work of the gospel to which the entire church is committed.

First, by judicious expenditure of the funds entrusted to it, it aims at putting a parsonage—a home for the preacher and his family—wherever one is needed and can not be secured without help from abroad. The worth of such a work can be appreciated by the multitudes of our preachers who have been put to labor in charges, especially in our Western territory, where no provision is made for their families, and the conditions of the community make such provision practically impossible. It is a load taken from the heart of a man and an embarrassment removed from his work when he knows that wherever he may be wandering his household is safely and comfortably sheltered. It is efficiency added to his ministry.

It requires comparatively little to do this work. Many who are given to complaining because of the calls that the church makes upon their resources would be surprised to learn how much is done in this direction with an insignificant amount of money. The annual reports and the little sheet published by the ladies in charge of this department of the church work tell a marvelous story in a modest way. All honor to them, and let them not be left to "make bricks without straw."

Besides, these same ladies have gone into the [illegible] home missions. They are not [illegible] into anybody else's domain, nor proposing to do what can as well be done by the agencies of the church already in the field. They wish to go where nobody has gone before them, and do what nobody else is disposed or able to undertake. They have made a good beginning. They have laid the hand of their love and power—the hand of love is the hand of power—upon the mountains of Kentucky. It is not too much to say that if that sterile region can be made fruitful, they will do it. The attempt ought to win for them the applause, the sympathy, the hearty support of the church. This is only the beginning. Multitudes of other sections of our land are waiting for their coming. And they will come. Their eyes are wide open. They see the distresses and the needs of country and city. Their hearts are yearning over the desolate, the destitute, the outcasts. Of their own means they give as they are able. They have the right to call on all who love the Lord Jesus Christ to help them. Oh, if the church could and would avail itself of all the love and helpfulness of woman's heart, it would not be long until our desert places would rejoice and blossom as the rose!

Men, brethren, ye that fear God and love our Lord Jesus Christ, hear. Help these women who labor with us in the gospel. A. W. WILSON.

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 11, 1894.

A Stirring Reminiscence of Our Late Session.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

None who were privileged to be present can soon forget the touchingly persuasive talk of that "mother in Israel," Mrs. M. I. Lambuth. She briefly reminded us of the dying message of her now glorified husband, Rev. J. W. Lambuth—so like a bugle call to the church at home. Then, modestly veiling her own remarkable work with him and since his departure, she invited us to co-operate with her in the establishment of a school for Japanese girls. In this she desires to combine, at least, some features of the industrial system now so generally admitted to be essential to the class of people she is trying to reach and rescue for Christ. Judged by her past eminent success, as well as her great practical wisdom and knowledge of these affairs, we feel assured that no other branch of work in Japan, or elsewhere, is likely to yield such rich harvests. If the means can be secured, the work will be efficiently done. Who should supply the means more gladly and promptly than the Mississippi Conference—preachers and laymen?

At our anniversary Sister Lambuth's honored and gifted son (worthy of his missionary ancestry) gave us a few more pointers in the same direction, and our beloved Bishop exhorted us to take heed thereto—make it a matter of thought and prayer, so that we might the more liberally offer for this good cause. In view of the financial strain then on us, and the great pressure for time, no collection or subscription was then taken. However, several brethren volunteered to subscribe, some ten dollars, while we understood Bro. Smith (?), of Natchez, to call out fifty dollars. The impending appointments closed this interesting exercise. It naturally devolves upon me to revive these memories and to stir up your pure minds to immediate action.

Brethren, all, please vow unto the Lord in this direction any amount from five to fifty dollars. Send a note at once to our treasurer, Dr. T. S. West, of Jackson, Miss., stating how much you will devote to this purpose, and approximately when you hope to cash same. The sooner enough subscriptions to justify projecting the work into actual being, the better for the great cause and for us also. Write promptly and liberally to Dr. West. He is always in a receptive frame, and ready to report through our ADVOCATE. J. P. DRAKE,

Edwards, Miss., Jan. 18, 1894.

The Insight of Service.

Some Christians are forever standing idle in the market-place—not because they are not willing to labor for the Master, but because they do not know what to do. If some pressing service would only offer itself, some task confront them with immediate necessity of doing, how gladly they would accept the commission, how eagerly they would set about the task! They long to serve, but they actually know not where nor how to begin. So they stand idle, while the precious hours of the day are wasting.

Other Christians scarcely seem to find time for all the things that wait their doing. Service crowds upon service, opportunity upon opportunity. It is always lo here, and lo there; somewhere to go, something to do, some one to help.

What makes the difference? Why is it that service comes readily, invitingly, availably to some, and seems forever eluding others? It is because the more men do, the more they perceive what ought to be done. Active Christians acquire what may be called the insight of service. The performance of each task opens the doorway to another. It is because the idle Christians wait so persistently for something that seems to them suitable, that they gradually grow blind to all opportunities for doing good. Let them do anything at first—if it be no more than to enter the vineyard and tread the grass out of the Master's paths—and they will soon perceive tasks enough that are suitable and needful. It is idleness that spins cobwebs before the eyes of men. "What can I do?" is the weak cry of the man who has never really tried to do anything with all his mind and heart and strength. The first genuine task he performs—no matter whether it seems just suited to him or not—will be his open sesame to all manner of good and blessed works. Let there be no more helpless, self-distrustful folding of the idle hands! Do something, do it heartily, do it thoroughly, and in the doing of it you will find that you have attained, in the measure of your faithfulness, to the insight of service.—Zion's Herald.

The papers give a rich account of a bout on the streets of Petersburg between Dr. Starr and an infidel of note. The infidel managed to stand in his boots until the Doctor told his experience, and a camp meeting became imminent. When the by-standers had done shouting, the perspiring unbeliever was missing.—Richmond Advocate.

Its rubies flash upon the sight,
An adder coils its depths beneath,
Whose lure is woe, whose sting is death."

NO NIGHT IN HEAVEN.

BY ANONYMOUS.

"And there shall be no night there."—Rev. xxii, 5.

No night shall be in heaven; no gathering gloom
Shall o'er that glorious landscape ever come.
No tears shall fall in sadness o'er those flowers
That breathe their fragrance through celestial bowers.

No night shall be in heaven; no dreadful hours
Of mental darkness, or the tempter's powers.
Across the skies no envious cloud shall roll
To dim the sunlight of the enraptured soul.

No night shall be in heaven; forbid to sleep,
Those eyes no more their mournful vigil keep;
Their fountains dried, their tears all wiped away,
They gaze undazzled on eternal day.

No night shall be in heaven, but endless noon;
No fast declining sun or waning moon.
But there the Lamb shall yield perpetual light,
'Mid pastures green and waters ever bright.

No night shall be in heaven, no darkened room,
No bed of death, no silence of the tomb;
But breezes ever fresh with love and truth,
Shall brace the frame with an immortal youth.

No night shall be in heaven; but night is here,
The night of sorrow and the night of fear.
I mourn the ills that now my steps attend,
And shrink from others that may yet impend.

No night shall be in heaven—oh, had I faith
To rest in what the faithful witness saith!
That faith would make these hideous phantoms flee,
And leave no night henceforth on earth to me.

For the Young People.

FLOWERS.

We suppose all young people like flowers. Did you ever see anyone who did not like them? It seems to be a part of our nature to like the beautiful earth, with its variegated flowers, interspersed with the green leaves. These pleasant objects of nature have been placed here for our gratification by a kind Benefactor, and we appreciate them. How often have we admired the flower garden surrounding a neat cottage home, indicating taste, refinement, and culture! Even a few of these specimens of God's handiwork in boxes, or a few rose bushes, with vines in front on lattice-work or supports, give an air of comfort to the dwelling. When traveling through a strange country, we form our opinions of the people by the appearances of their residences. When we see a neat white house, though humble in appearance, surrounded with flowers, we at once conclude that the persons residing there have some refinement, and frequently a desire arises to call and make their acquaintance; and we have been delighted to ride over our broad prairies of the West, when they appeared a vast flower garden, to enjoy their beauty, and inhale their pleasant odors wafted on the balmy wings of a Summer's breeze.

Yes, "everybody likes flowers," and they are pretty, whether we look at them in groups or examine them singly. They are truly a feast to the eyes of all lovers of the beautiful. We never get tired of them from the time the tiny violet peeps out from the earth, in the early Spring, to the latest flowers which scatter their leaves before the early frost to take their Winter's sleep. They can not withstand the icy touch of a bleak Winter. Some persons like flowers so much that they go to considerable trouble and expense to have them in Winter by putting them in houses covered with glass, where the light and heat of the sun can reach them; and very often they heat these houses by artificial means. The houses so constructed are called greenhouses.

Persons frequently become very much attached to flowers because they have been given to them by dear friends, or on account of some association connected with them. During a cold Winter probably many of our young friends have felt sad and have almost wept when they discovered that the little plant or flower which they had so carefully tended had been blasted by the remorseless north wind.

Such has been the attention paid to flowers that they have been not only named and classified, but meanings have been attached to them, so that persons may talk to one another by means of an interchange of these beautiful emblems; and often a more tender sentiment or thought may be communicated than by words. Sympathy, friendship and love, folly, pride and revenge, and almost every sentiment and passion, may be expressed by these silent emblems:

"There is a language in each flower
That opens to the eye.
A voiceless, but a magic power,
Doth in each blossom lie."

For many reasons we would advise our young friends to cultivate flowers, and study their structure and meaning. It would occupy many a leisure hour, which might be worse than unprofitably employed, and, at the same time, be recreation from ordinary study and labor. It would improve the taste, refine the sentiments of the mind, and elevate the finer feelings of the soul. The gratification they would afford you and your friends is another inducement for their cultivation, scattering along life's pathway pleasant smiles, happy associations and kind remembrances. The opening bud, with its tender leaves and delicate hues, reminds us of the early morn of childhood; the mature flower of the prime and glory of riper years, and the fading hues and decaying beauty of the dying bloom speak to us of the decline of life, and of the departure of man from his home on earth to the spirit-land. So live, that when you leave this home of beautiful flowers and happy friendships, you may pass to the bright realms of fadeless hues and undying love. UNCLE JOE.

To the Public Generally,

AND TO THE FRIENDS OF CHRISTIANITY IN PARTICULAR.

Dear Friends and Brethren:

After traveling for thirty-six years as a Methodist itinerant, having served one or more charges in every presiding elder's district save one—viz.: the Brandon district—I have reached the summit, not of human fame, but the top, the highest point, I suppose, between New Orleans, La., and Jackson, Miss. Now, when I was a very small boy I learned that in order to see a long distance it was necessary to get upon some elevated place. Well, here I am, sent here by our good Bishop, Joseph S. Key.

Summit is a nice town of about two thousand inhabitants. We have a membership here of about ninety, and no house of our own in which to worship. True, our generous-hearted mayor, Col. Patten, has kindly offered us the use of our town hall; the trustees of the Peabody School have tendered us the use of the school-building, and our Hebrew friends the use of their synagogue, all of which we appreciate; and we are worshiping at present in the synagogue. You know our blessed Savior went into the synagogue and taught; so we are doing. All this is nice; but, brethren, it is not our house. When I am faint, sick, tired, hungry and sleepy, however good and kind others may be to me, I feel more at ease in my own home, in the embrace of my own family, than anywhere else. So we want a house of worship of our own. But we are poor, and need help. And I feel sure you are going to help us. One of Job's strongest pleas, when affliction came upon him, was, "I was a father to the poor." The good book says: "Blessed is he that considereth the poor, the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble." And again, "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." Our noble women are doing what they can, and I feel sure, with what help they may be able to get at home and abroad, will succeed. "I entreat thee, true yoke-fellows, help those women."

S. D. Percell, postmaster in Summit; R. C. Howel, merchant; W. C. Barnes, farmer; Wm. P. Cassidy, our circuit judge; F. W. P——, ex-United States Marshal, together with myself, constitute the building committee. If any friend or brother wants to help in this noble work, let him address any member of the committee at Summit, Miss.

H. P. LEWIS.

Vicksburg District.

I called an early meeting of the district stewards, that the assessments on the various charges might be placed in the hands of the pastors, with the hope that they would be vigorously pushed. And a note from Dr. John reveals the fact that this action is in line with the necessities of the hour. He says: "Will you please give attention to the enclosed copy of a letter sent to each pastor of your district? A decrease in the missionary collections this year will seriously embarrass our mission work." This is an appeal and a warning that no loyal child of God can afford to ignore. The brave men who are doing service for the Master in these hard fields of labor must be made to feel that they have the support of the home church. None but those who have been with them and endured their hardships, know what they suffer to maintain the cause of Christ. I do not now speak of the self-denials they must endure to give up home and congenial environment, always dear to the heart of man; but I speak of the hardships they must bear in their work.

These are not seen nor are they known to the Bishop, Secretary, nor any other person visiting the cheery homes of these men in the field. He would be more brute than human who would not make the wife and little ones, torn from the blessings and hopes of our Christian civilization, as comfortable as his means would allow. And the sunlight you see in these homes and in the face of the occasional missionary you meet at home, does not come of the natural surroundings of life, nor can all the money of the church purchase the cheery spirit he carries in his heart. It comes, and can only come from above.

If you would know what these men suffer for Christ's sake and the church's sake, go out with them into the field and watch them labor and suffer where no eye of the church ever sees them. I know whereof I speak when I assert that nothing but a conscious fellowship with Christ in his sufferings holds these men in their places. Then, preachers and people of the Vicksburg district, shall we desert them in this hour of trial, or add to their sorrows by withholding from them our support? God forbid! Let us observe Sunday, Feb. 4, as a day of humiliation and prayer to God for the church and her missions, and let every pastor preach on missions.

The Bible the Book of the People.

I believe we shall largely qualify ourselves for a great and enduring work in proportion as we risk everything as to our church life and influence upon a grammatical interpretation of the Holy Bible in the light of human experience and a fearless interpretation of nature in the light of impartial science. I claim the supreme place for the Bible. I do not go to the theologian, but to the living fountain to which the theologian himself went. I have dismissed the priest who pretended to keep the altar of worship, and I will dismiss the priest who pretends to keep the altar of truth. If every man is to have free access to the throne of grace by Christ Jesus our Lord, every man must have free access to the book of Revelations under the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

There is no second Bible. There is no divinely authorized metamorphosis or alias of the Bible. There are helps to Bible reading many and invaluable; but the Bible must be read by itself, for itself, in the light of itself, and every man must be responsible to its divine Author and not to its human interpreters. To some of those interpreters we may have been unjust. We may have made cast-iron of thoughts or expressions which the interpreters themselves would be the first to change under the influence of wider knowledge and clearer visions. My simple claim is that the Bible should always be allowed to speak for itself, because my belief is that whatever is essential to human redemption, pardon, purity and development, is written in the Bible with a pencil of light. Again and again I would disclaim saying one word against learned and reverent interpreters of the Bible. I simply wish them to be kept in their right places as elder brethren, and not to be set up as idols, ruling generations of whose progress and advantages they could have had no personal knowledge.

There is a deep sense in which every man must be his own theologian. Human expressions of theology must change because language itself changes, and every tide of time's great sea brings in riches from the land that is beyond which must be added to the abounding treasures of the church. No one man knows all the truth; no sect has all the truth. That is as certain as that no vision can absorb all the sunshine, and no roof can accommodate all the sky. It does seem to me, then, a thing worth doing to send men into all the villages of England who will help the people to read the Bible and lead the people to see that nature and revelation are expressions of the same God, and that both are open to reverent and patient inquiry without human penalty and without ecclesiastical degradation.

We may not, indeed, be always able to send learned men into the villages of England; but I will tell you whom we can send—we can send men who will say to the peasantry of England: "Let us read the Bible in our mother tongue together; let us read the twenty-third Psalm; let us listen to the Sermon on the Mount; let us commit to memory the parable of the prodigal son; let us watch and wonder and pray at the cross of the Son of man." Can such words be read in a right spirit without Jesus himself drawing near and setting the heart aglow with a love kindred to his own, and making the darkening eventide brighter than the Summer dawn? This is what we aim to do: to get men to read the Bible, to read it in the houses of the people, to read it at the bedside of the people, to read it as the book of the people, and to make the people feel that, come what may, the word of the Lord endureth forever, and is an open vision to the broken heart and the contrite spirit.—Joseph Parker.

The Natural Way.

One of the Rothschilds is reported to have said somewhat as follows: "If you want water and try to catch it with your hands, it eludes you; but if you dig a channel so it will flow to you, you are sure of getting it. So if you want money, dig channels through which it will naturally flow to you, and you are sure to be rich."

The same kind of reasoning is good in respect to all the desirable things of this life. If a man wants friends, let him show himself friendly. If he wants knowledge, and prepares the proper channels, it will flow toward him. A stream of books, papers, magazines is always running into some families simply because the channels are prepared for them.—New York Advocate.

Mrs. M. L. Brogan.

Mrs. Mattie Louisa Brogan, relict of Rev. J. C. Brogan, of precious memory, of the Mississippi Conference, died at her home in Vossburg, Miss., Sept. 23, 1893. She was born in Fayette county, Ala., Nov. 2, 1837, and was the daughter of Rev. John H. Davis. She was married to J. C. Brogan, May 17, 1854. Bro. Brogan was a native of Ireland, and was educated for the priesthood of the Roman Catholic Church. Soon after his marriage, having been converted to Protestantism, and having joined the M. E. Church, South, he was licensed to preach and received into the Alabama Conference. He was for seventeen years a prominent member of the Mississippi Conference. He was a most zealous worker, and had in Sister Brogan a help-meet, indeed. After the death of Bro. Brogan, which occurred at Rose Hill, Miss., Jan. 12, 1888, Sister Brogan moved into Vosshurg, Miss., where she continued to reside. She was the mother of ten children, seven of whom survive her. One of them, her only son, and who was converted in direct answer to her prayers, is in Millsaps College preparing for the ministry.

Sister Brogan was of fine personal appearance and agreeable manners, and possessed a high order of intellect. She was converted at about fifteen years of age. Her piety was unquestioned from the beginning, and it deepened to the day of her death. Her faith in the invisible God was as strong as in anything visible. She daily lived her religion. It seemed perfectly natural for her to talk about religion and the church.

She was regular in attendance upon all the services of the church. Nothing save sickness could keep her away, and she often attended when quite unwell. Her presence, her prayers and the glow of holy joy upon her countenance were a source of inspiration to the preacher. She was specially gifted in her public prayer. We have never known any other woman who could pray with such fervor, eloquence and power. She was very frequently called upon to pray in public, and her prayers from the first word were fired with zeal and enthusiasm. The divine presence seemed to attend her continually, and she always spoke and prayed and acted as though she saw "God face to face." Her impassioned appeals of prayer will linger in the minds of those who heard them and bear fruit for years to come.

She never missed an opportunity to speak in love-feasts and experience meetings, and frequently talked in the regular church services. Her talks were so earnest and evinced such faith that they carried conviction of the truth with them. Who that heard them can forget the music of her voice, the glow of her countenance and the beauty of her tears on those occasions?

She was strongly possessed of the missionary spirit. Our missionaries and mission fields she did not forget in her prayers, talks or deeds. For many years she was the zealous president of the Woman's Missionary Society of Vosshurg, Miss., and the success of that society is largely due to her.

Time would fail us to tell of all the virtues of this good woman. She had family prayer regularly, prayed much in secret; went from house to house and prayed; visited the sick, and talked and prayed with them; talked with sinners, wept over them and prayed for them; attended revival meetings, and was in them a source of power; loved her Bible, and read it constantly; fasted every Friday; prayed without ceasing—she was a living epistle of Christ "known and read of all." She "being dead, yet speaketh."

Her sacred dust, with the remains of husband and departed children, reposes at Marion, Miss., awaiting a glorious resurrection. Her precious memory will be a source of inspiration to many until they meet her again. Oh that we had more of such earnest, zealous, Christ-like characters as our dear Sister Brogan!

B. S. RAYNER.

Not the Least Desirable Way to Die.

On the Sunday before Christmas Robert C. Fisher, fifty-seven years of age, attended the service in the Trinity Episcopal Church, in New Rochelle, N. Y., of which he was a prominent member. He seemed to be in excellent health. At the close he stood at the door of the auditorium, and handed the poorer members and attendants at the church each a twenty-dollar gold piece as a Christmas gift as they passed from the building. Just as the last recipient of his bounty left the building, Mr. Fisher suddenly reeled, and would have fallen had he not been supported by several friends who stood by. He was removed to the parish house of the church and a physician called, but at two o'clock on Christmas morning he died. He was the proprietor of the R. C. Fisher marble works of this city, and leaves an estate worth one million dollars.—New York Advocate.

The Secret of Happiness.

One of the happiest Christians I know is happy on a small income and in spite of some very sharp trials. The secret of happiness is not in the size of one's purse, or in the style of one's house, or the number of one's butterfly friends. The fountain of peace and joy is in the heart. If you would only throw open your heart's windows to the sunshine of Christ's love; it would soon scatter the chilling mists, and even turn tears into rainbows. Some professed Christians pinch and starve themselves into walking skeletons, and then try to excuse themselves on the plea of ill-health or "constitutional" ailments.

The medicines they need are from Christ's pharmacy. A large draught of Bible taken every morning, a throwing open of the heart's windows to the promises of the Master, a few words of honest prayer, a deed or two of kindness to the next person whom you meet, will do more to brighten your countenance and help your digestion than all the drugs of the doctors. If you want to get your aches and trials out of sight, hide them under your mercies.

Bear in mind, my friends, that your happiness or your misery is very much of your own making. You can not create spiritual sunshine any more than you can create the morning star, but you can put your soul where Christ is shining. Begin every day with God. Keep a clear conscience, and a good stock of Bible promises, within reach. Keep a strong, robust faith which can draw honey out of a rock and oil out of the flinty rock. Never spend a day without trying to do somebody good; and then, keeping step with your Master, march on towards home over any road, however rough, and against any head-winds which blow. It will be all sunshine when we get to heaven, and "there is no night there!"—Doctor Cuyler.

The Best Cure for Weariness.

There is nothing which will give a chance for rest to the over-tired nerves so surely as a simple religious faith in the overruling, wise and tender Providence which has us in its keeping. It is in chafing against the conditions of our lives that we tire ourselves immeasurably. It is in being anxious about things which we can not help that we often do the most of our spending. A simple faith in God which practically and every moment, and not only theoretically and on Sundays, rests on the knowledge that he cares for us, at least, as much as we care for those who are the dearest to us, will do much to give the tired nerve the feeling of the bird in its nest. Do not spend what strength you have, like the clematis, in climbing on yourself, but lay hold on things which are eternal, and the peace of them will pass into your soul like a healing balm. Put yourself in the great everlasting currents, and then you can rest on your oars, and let those currents bear you on their strength.—Harper's Magazine.

Reading Dr. Hoss and Dr. Black's accounts of the late session of the Mississippi Conference, published in their respective journals, made us homesick. How we should love to meet again that group of consecrated men who are in our heart always! This feeling was increased when we learned that the Conference session was held in Hazlehurst. Fifteen years ago, in this month of December, we made our first report as a pastor to an Annual Conference sitting in the self-same town of Hazlehurst. It seems an age since then. Many, in this time, have departed from that historic body—some to other fields, some to "the land of the leal," the undimmed and unshaken principality of light won by their faith and the word of their testimony! Many remain whom to know is to love—Andrews, Hunnicutt, Black, Little, Holloman, Singleton—a list too long to be written here. It stirs our heart to think of these. "Joseph is a fruitful vine."—Pacific Advocate.

Encourage your pastor this year as never before. Be at the weekly prayer regularly, and take part in the exercises according to your place and ability. Work in the Sabbath-school. Neglect no communion occasion. Be in your pew every Sabbath morning and evening, if possible. Be attentive to the preached Word. Improve upon what you hear. Ask people to church. Speak well of your minister. Pray for him, and ask a blessing upon his labors. Give him a kind look and loving word. Sympathize with him in his work. Cheer him. Sustain him. Pay what you have promised for his support when it is due. Defend him when assailed. Attend the special meetings he may think it best to appoint. Try to make them a success. If you thus co-operate with him week after week and month after month, at the close of 1894 both you and he will have abundant reason for joy and gratitude.—Presbyterian.

Human Example and Mutual Influence.

The devil never would be able to accomplish any plan in Christendom if he could not get good people to join with the bad in it. Unbelief constantly uses as an excuse, "Such a good man is here;" "The excellent Mr. —— does that." But is the opinion or conduct of a Christian the criterion by which I am to judge? If so, there is nothing I may not fall into; for what evil is there that a man, and even a believer, has not done? You know what David had to confess before the Lord. And this is the way that the devil takes to keep persons quiet in evil. Presumption has nothing to do with the matter, nor is it enough to cite good men. The only question for the Christian is the will of the Lord; and, therefore, it becomes us to search the Scriptures. The sole standard for the believer is the written Word of God; and this is the special security in their last days. When Paul was leaving the Ephesian saints, it was to God and the Word of his grace that he commended them. Grievous wolves might enter in among them, not sparing the flock; and of their own selves, men might arise, speaking perverse things: but the sole safeguard, as a rule of faith and conduct for the saints, is God's Holy Writ.—Selected.

Work for Cheerfulness.

To keep the face cheerful, the voice cheerful, to do good like medicine, we must keep the heart cheerful. This is not an easy matter. One does not simply have to say, "I will be cheerful," and then have it so. He has to work for cheerfulness, just as he works to be honest, or kind, or brave, or learned. He must be looking out for bright things to see and do. He must deliberately, yet quickly, choose what things he will think about, and how. He has to shut his teeth, as it were, sometimes, and turn away from the gloomy things, and do something to bring back the cheerful spirit again. If we are cheerful for others, we are doing for ourselves. Good given means good sent back. Cheerfulness can become a habit, and habit sometimes helps us over hard places. A cheerful heart seeth cheerful things.

A lady and gentleman were in a lumber yard, situated by a dirty, foul-smelling river. The lady said:

"How good the pine boards smell!"

"Pine boards!" exclaimed the gentleman. "Just smell this foul river?"

"Thank you," the lady replied, "I prefer to smell the pine boards."

And she was right. If she, or we, can carry this principle through our entire living, we shall have the cheerful heart, the cheerful voice and the cheerful face.—Selected.

The Highest Compliment.

A little girl in a crowded, slippery street in the great city of London stood still for some time scanning the faces of the people as they passed by. It would be dangerous to cross the street alone. Finally, a venerable figure drew near—tall, spare, thoughtful—his face beaming with benevolence; she saw something in the aged man's face which inspired her with courage to ask his assistance. The good man said, "That little girl's trust was the greatest compliment I ever had in my life." It was Lord Shaftsbury, an archangel of philanthropy, honored by all the world, by kings and queens, by cities and nations. The fulsome eulogy of crowned heads and courtiers could not stir and thrill his great heart like the sweet trust and confidence of this little girl.

God is the supreme philanthropist of the universe. How can his children honor him most? What is the highest praise they can bestow upon him? Simply by trusting him amid the slippery and crowded places of this world. "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." Child-like trust is the loftiest praise.—Exchange.

Shun the Appearance of Evil.

An old Chinese proverb says, "Do not stop in a cucumber field to tie the shoe." The meaning is very plain. Some will be likely to fancy that you are stealing fruit. Always remember the injunction, "Abstain from all appearance of evil." Do not stop under the saloon porch to rest yourself, however shady the trees may be, or however inviting the chairs. Some one may fancy you are a common lounger there, and so your good name be tarnished. Don't go to a liquor saloon to get a glass of lemonade, however refreshing it may seem to you. Rather buy your lemons and prepare the cooling beverage at home, where others may share it with you, probably at no greater expense than your single glass would cost you. Somebody seeing you drinking at the bar will be sure to tell the story, and will not be particular to state that you were drinking only lemonade. Then, too, if you are careless about the appearance of evil, you will soon grow equally careless about the evil itself.—Selected.

HYGIENE.

Take Care of the Eyes.

This is the season of long nights and short days. Now that during so many of our waking hours we must depend for light upon artificial means, and so many thousands of students and working people use their eyes all the long evening, a few statements bearing on this subject are timely and may be profitable.

There are times when much exertion of the eyes is more hurtful than at others. Immediately after a full meal, when the blood is required in the stomach for purposes of digestion, not the eyes only, but the brain, the muscles, the whole body, should rest.

Compression of the throat, the chest, and the feet act injuriously upon the eyes; therefore, if to meet the demands of fashion tight neck-cloths, corsets and shoes must be worn in public, they should be loosened when the pen, the book, the needle, is taken in hand.

After great bodily fatigue, or during mental distress, late at night when one is sleepy, or after a sleepless night the eyes should not be taxed. It is common for convalescents to read much during their recovery. In this way the term of convalescence is often prolonged, and the eyes sometimes permanently injured.

Young, growing persons, especially those near the age of puberty, need to be very careful how they use their eyes. So far as possible they should study only by sunlight, and when they have been refreshed by a night's sleep, rather than after the fatigue and confinement of school hours.

In reading, the more closely the eye is confined to the page, the more it is strained. Works which require thought and reflection, and so give the eye rest while they are being read, are less straining to the vision than a novel reading, which does not compel the removal of the eye from the page. Reading from a broad page, in which the lines are long and the print is small, is very fatiguing, as it is difficult for the eye to take up the next line. Writing is easier for the sight than reading, but copying is harder than either reading or writing. Reading when in motion, in cars, on steamboats, on horseback, is very trying to the eyes because of the instinctive effort of the eye to maintain a steady focus when it is continually changing.

Both eyes when used should be equally exposed to the light, the frequent practice of reading and sewing with one's side toward the window or the lamp is very injurious; light should come slantingly over the shoulder or be so shaded that the eye shall not suffer from its brilliancy. When the eyes are weary great relief is experienced by closing them for a few moments or by looking at objects from a distance.

A flickering light is very trying to the eye. One reason why the eyes can do so much more work without fatigue by day than by night is because the action of the sunlight is equable and unvarying. So far as we may, we should imitate the example of the great Architect, and have our chandeliers suspended from the ceiling, or so that the light will fall on our work from above. Where lamps must be placed so as to shine directly into the eye, shades should be used to soften the light.

In sleeping rooms the beds should be so placed or the windows so shaded that the eyes will not open in the morning on the full light of day, or even on bright rays of light streaming in through crevices in the shutter. Nothing should touch the eye but tepid soft water, unless ordered by a physician. A fruit diet, out-of-door exercise, a clean skin, warm feet, and entire cessation from all reading and sewing will often cure sore eyes.

Taking Cold.

The majority of people (writes a physician) fondly cherish the idea that they become exempt from colds by wearing an inordinate amount of clothing, but I do not hesitate to say that more are contracted by having too much on than too little. We must remember that during the greater part of the time we live in temperature which is about equal to a mild Summer heat, and that if burdened down with flannels the skin will be more or less moist with perspiration. Now when a draught of cold air reaches any part of the body a sensation of chilliness is experienced, in spite of the layers of wool, and this marks the onset of a cold. The prevailing mode of dress for women is extremely faulty, and it is no uncommon sight to see a ridiculous fur cape over the shoulders of one wearing low-cut shoes and thin silk stockings. The most vulnerable part for the reception of colds is the feet, not the chest.—The Churchman.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. W. C. Harris, P. C., Iuka, Miss.: "We begin our second year at Iuka hopefully. While we could hardly hope for the year to be more pleasant in many particulars than was last year, we do hope that more good will be done. Our first Quarterly Conference is past. Our new presiding elder, Bro. T. W. Lewis, has made a fine impression at the very beginning. We have just organized an Epworth League. I think it will do well, though we have not gotten well under headway yet. The parsonage, with many other homes, is being visited by la grippe."

Rev. F. N. Sweeney, L. D., Grand Chenier, La.: "Our pastor, Bro. W. B. Van Valkenburgh, and I were accompanied home on our return from Conference by Rev. C. F. Staples, who so faithfully served this work in 1891 and 1892. He had come to spend the holidays with his many friends here, and our pastor thought that a good way to spend the time would be in a protracted meeting, which began on Saturday night before Christmas, and lasted eight days. The preaching by both the pastor and Bro. Staples was with demonstration of the Spirit, and told mightily on the hearers. The church was greatly stirred, many reconsecrating themselves to God. There were four accessions and several bright conversions. We had a sunrise prayer meeting every morning and a love-feast on Saturday at eleven A. M., which was something new for Grand Chenier, but was certainly enjoyed by all. Our pastor organized an Epworth League, which was very much needed. In all, we are thankful to God for what he has done for us. Our pastor has taken hold in earnest and the people have taken hold with him, and we are hopeful for good results in this part of our Master's kingdom."

Rev. H. S. Johns: "After four years of most pleasant labor in Algiers, I am in Plaquemine, La., by appointment, to do what I can by God's help in this field. A word concerning my parting with old friends will not be out of place. It may be summed up as follows: Many kind words, many little presents as tokens of love and appreciation, some cash towards moving, and finally a free pass for self, wife and effects to this place, which was secured by Bro. A. S. Daniels, in the Merchants, Planters' Packet Co., of which Capt. J. B. Woods, of New Orleans, is manager, which with the fine steamboat, Paul Tulane, Capt. T. C. Sweeney in charge, landed us safe in this town Jan. 4. A large crowd of our Algiers members saw us off, and as long as we were in sight of each other we waved and prayed for each other. Before leaving I did my best to introduce my successor, Rev. L. F. Jackson, and give him a good start; and from all appearances he is already planted in the hearts of the people, which is as I desire. I am now in the midst of a kind people, where there are many souls to be saved, if ever saved at all. May our labors be congenial and effective for Christ! It shall be my desire to do honest labor, looking to God to honor it, with results of a permanent character. Pray for us."

Rev. H. P. Lewis: "For reasons sufficient in the judgment of our good Bishop Key, I was moved from Caseyville to Summit. We landed here on Tuesday night, Dec. 19, were met by a committee of ladies and a few men, who gave us a real hearty welcome, invited us to the dining-room where a nice warm supper awaited us. The usual pounding was given, and provisions enough left to last us several days. We are snugly fixed in our new home, just a little crowded; but we are so happy and contented, with plenty of hard, honest work to do, and we are so intent on doing our duty to the best of our knowledge and ability, that being a little crowded does not trouble us. We are without a church here in Summit; but, with what help we may be able to get from abroad, we expect to have a home of our own in which to worship in a short while. We have here one of the best Ladies' Aid Societies, in good working order, I know of anywhere; also a ladies' prayer meeting. We know the clever men of Summit are going to help these good women, and, with God's blessing upon us and our labors, we anticipate success in more ways than one. I will begin my canvass for the ADVOCATE soon. At the same time we beg an interest in the prayers of all lovers of Zion. May God bless the editor and all the readers of our dear old ADVOCATE!"

Rev. Robt. B. Downer, Covington circuit, La.: "Covington circuit embraces Covington, Mandeville and Slidell, all in St. Tammany parish, La., but in connection with the Seashore district, Mississippi Conference. At the last session of the Mississippi Conference, at the closing hour, Bishop Key said, 'Covington circuit, R. B. Downer.' Yes, my ears did not deceive me. 'I was silent; I opened not my mouth.' I knew where I was going. At Crystal Springs, 1864, Bishop Pelroe assigned me to the same territory, only more of it. I entered the Mississippi Conference at Woodville, 1858. My record is that I have asked for no place, nor refused to go, uncomplainingly, where sent. I accept my present charge in good faith. This is a beautiful country, delightful climate, beautiful waters, and Satan appreciates the importance of being well represented. He is strongly entrenched. Satan's friends here know not the Sabbath day as devoted to rest. It takes much beer and other stimulating drinks to keep up the seven days' tension. Christ's friends are in a fearful minority and struggling for existence. This is a splendid charge in which to exercise faith and trust the promises. The people are clever and kind-hearted. We have been kindly received. On the night of Jan. 4 we were surprised at the parsonage by a visit of many dear young friends, each bearing a substantial token of love. Elijah's ravens are yet ministering to God's prophets. May they never die. Covington is as near heaven as any other charge, and heaven is my home. Many precious friends have gone home since my pastorate in 1865. I am to preach now to their children and grandchildren, some of whom I baptized in their infancy. I feel the Lord's presence to be with me. I aim to render the best year's service of my life. I long to be instrumental in redeeming this land for God and his Christ. This country needs the prayers of God's people, and don't forget the preacher and his faithful few."

Buckingham's Dye for the Whiskers is a popular preparation in one bottle, and colors evenly a brown or black. Any person can easily apply it at home.

THE CUISINE.

CONDUCTED BY L. A. B.

DELICIOUS ORANGE CAKE.—Rub thoroughly to a cream two cups of sugar and two-thirds of a cup of butter, adding three eggs beaten separately. Squeeze the juice of two large oranges into a cup, adding enough water to fill it. Stir this into the mixture, together with three and a half cups of flour, two even teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar, one of soda, and a little of the orange rind, grated. Bake in layer tins. For the filling use one egg, yolk and white. Grate a little of the orange rind into this and the juice of half an orange, adding sugar enough to thicken.—December Ladies' Home Journal.

CHEESE STRAWS.—This recipe is given by Marion Harland: One-half pound of flour, four ounces of butter, one egg, four ounces of strong cheese (grated), one gill of milk, a pinch of red pepper, salt to taste. Put the flour into a bowl, and chop the butter into it. Make a hollow in the centre of the flour, and into this put the egg, well beaten up with the milk, grated cheese and seasoning. Mix well with the hands, keeping the ingredients as cold as possible, and roll out into sheets about one-eighth of an inch thick. Cut in strips and bake in a quick oven to a delicate brown.

ROLLS.—Scald one quart of new milk. Put in a pan two quarts of flour, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, half a cupful of lard, and one cupful of yeast. Cool the milk, and mix altogether. Let it rise, then mix in enough flour to make a stiff dough. Let it rise again, then roll, cut and turn in roll shape. Put it in greased pans to rise again. When raised bake in a rather quick oven. Water may be used instead of new milk by putting in a little more lard and sugar.

LADY FINGERS.—Mix eight tablespoonfuls of powdered white sugar, four eggs—the yolks and whites beaten separately—six tablespoonfuls of flour, a little salt, and a teaspoonful of lemon, orange or vanilla; roll stiff paper into a tunnel, and pour the batter through it upon buttered pans in long, slender little cakes. Dust sugar over them and bake as quickly as possible without scorching.

CHICKEN SALAD.—Chop fine one chicken cooked tender; one small head of cabbage and five cold, hard-boiled eggs; season with salt, pepper and mustard. Warm one pint of vinegar; add half a teacupful of butter, stir until melted, pour hot over the mixture, stir thoroughly, and set away to cool.

COLD MEAT HASH.—An onion chopped fine is browned in butter or fat; add a spoonful of flour; when this is quite brown add a tablespoonful of hot water; then the well-seasoned meat, the yolk of an egg, and the juice and grated rind of half a lemon; brown lightly and serve.

To Keep Pie Crusts from Crumbling.—Just before putting the pies into the oven "paint" the upper crust and rim with a little sweet milk, applied with a clean cloth.

Mrs. Sutherland.

I Had Goitre
Or swellings in the neck since I was 10 years old; am now 52. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla and the swelling has entirely disappeared. It has been very troublesome. When I began I was feeling so discouraged with the goitre and rheumatism, I would as soon be dead as ullvo. Whenever I caught cold I could not walk two blocks without fainting. Now I am free from it all and I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla. I received a letter from Mrs. Jennie Bigelow, now of Fremont, Mich., asking if my testimonial in behalf of Hood's Sarsaparilla was true; I replied it was, and sent particulars. I have a letter thanking me for recommending
Hood's Sarsaparilla
and stating that she also has been cured." MRS. ANNA SUTHERLAND, Kalamazoo, Mich.

Mission Work among the Jews.

In the Epistle to the Romans, the Apostle Paul speaks of the gospel as "the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." In accordance with the creed here announced it was his custom, into whatever city he went, to begin his labors among the Jews. He always preached his first sermon in a town in the synagogue, if allowed to do so, turning to the Gentiles only when rejected by his "brethren after the flesh!" A similar course was pursued by all the other apostles and their coadjutors in the ministry of the Word. As time rolled on, however, all this came to an end. The Jews, many of them, rejected the gospel, and persecuted the disciples of Jesus. Animosities thus sprung up between Christian and Jew which have been perpetuated through all the intervening centuries. When the Christian Church became sufficiently powerful to do so, she snatched from the hands of the Jew his weapon of persecution, all stained with Christian blood, and turned it against him and used it even more ruthlessly than he had done. The cruelties perpetrated upon the posterity of Abraham by so-called Christian nations during mediæval times forms one of the darkest chapters in the annals of our race. Since the new era inaugurated by the Lutheran Reformation, persecution has been gradually dying away, until at present it hardly exists at all outside the realms of the Muscovite Czar. But while persecution has ceased, prejudice against these people has not been entirely extirpated from the bosom of the church. Many speak of living Jews as if they had taken part in the crucifixion of Christ. Prejudice alone can account for the fact that the church in this missionary era has been so slow to inaugurate the work of Jewish evangelization. What has been done in the way of mission work among the Jews has been done in a very small way and with very meagre facilities. The results of this work, however, have been such as to indicate that "a great door and effectual is opened unto" us among these historic people. We invite attention to a few facts bearing upon this point. In the year 1881, Rev. Jacob Freshman, a converted Jew, began mission work among the Jews in New York City. He was backed by no church. He had no treasury, either private or ecclesiastical, to draw from. His work was purely a work of faith. He had, of course, much opposition and many difficulties to overcome; but success has crowned his efforts. His successor, Rev. Herman Warszwiak, recently installed, has now at his command two houses of worship, one worth $35,000, the other worth $80,000. One of these houses has attached to it a sort of "home for the friendless," where indigent Jews are temporarily cared for. The auditorium of the larger building has a seating capacity of eight hundred, and it is often filled. The average congregation here is about four hundred. In addition to this, there are three other Jewish missions in New York City. Moreover, the work is spreading into other cities in New York and adjoining States. We cite this merely as an instance near at hand of successful mission work among the Jews. Many similar instances might be cited from other countries.

The position that the Jews can not be reached is no longer tenable. They can be reached, provided the proper means are used. What reason is there, then, why the church should not enter this field? Rather are there not the very best of reasons why the church should hasten to enter upon this work. The posterity of Abraham have claims upon us on the score of gratitude which can be urged in behalf of no other people. What people have made richer contributions to the world's imperishable literature? What nation has so indelibly impressed itself upon the jurisprudence of the civilized world? Whose history can furnish sublimer instances of noblest heroism? Who have furnished richer gems to the world's great treasury of poesy? In the realm of morals and religion what nation stands alone in the world's history, like a solitary island in a shoreless sea? Take it all in all, is there any race to which we are so largely indebted for all that is highest and noblest in the civilization of the present day as to the race that sprang from "the father of the faithful"?

Then, too, where can the Christian sower find so rich a soil in which to cast his seed as that of Judaism? Imagine the Jews, or any large number of them, converted to Christ, and filled with that love-constrained zeal in the cause of missions which characterized that "Hebrew of the Hebrews," Saul of Tarsus, what would that mean to the Christian Church? Those elements of character which have made the Jews kings and princes in the commercial world would make them an arm of power to the church of God. We have not time to dwell upon it, but there is here much food for careful thought.

Then, too, the time is propitious. There has never been a time in the last fifteen hundred years when the Jew was so receptive to Christian influences as he is to-day. But a little while ago his heart was too full of bitterness growing out of revolting memories of direful persecution to allow him to give ear to the followers of Jesus of Nazareth. These animosities, however, are constantly abating with rapidly accelerating ratio. The Chinese wall of prejudice with which Judaism has hitherto been hedged about is tottering to its fall. Then, too, Judaism is in a state of unrest. The Jew has grown weary of looking for a Christ to come, and is ready—more so than he has ever been—to give ear to proofs that the Christ has already come.

We verily believe that there is here an open door which the church of Christ should not fail to enter. Nowhere does a richer harvest await the sickle of the skillful reaper.

Our readers will find in this issue considerable space given to Market Reports. This will hereafter be one of the permanent features of the paper. Of course, those of our patrons who live in the railroad towns and are regular readers of the great dailies do not need care for this; but many of our readers living in the country will, we are sure, heartily appreciate it. Our reports may be depended upon as trustworthy and of latest possible date.

To Our Readers.

We have been greatly gratified and encouraged lately with the words of commendation that have come to us from our patrons. Within the last few weeks we have received scores of letters expressing high appreciation of the editorial conduct of the ADVOCATE. Many of these letters we would like to answer, did time permit. Thanks to the brethren for their cheering words. It helps us to know that our labors are appreciated. While we have always led a busy life, we have never done more hard work in the same length of time than since we came to the tripod. We have done a great deal of work in the matter of making selections for the paper. This is a department of editorial labor which can be made easy or light, just as one chooses. If the aim were simply to fill up so much space, then with such an exchange list as we have the whole work could be done in a very short time. But our sense of responsibility to God and the church will not allow us to do our work after that fashion. We spend many weary hours in rummaging through our exchanges, and in ransacking books as well, in order to find the kind of mental and spiritual pabulum which we judge to be needed by our readers, not forgetting that our subscription list runs through almost the whole scale of taste and mental development. If our readers have been pleased in the past, we are sure they will be still more pleased in the future, as we will hereafter be able to give more time to editorial work than we have hitherto done. Having the publishing and editing both on our hands, we have heretofore been compelled to divide our time between the two departments. We now have the work of the publishing department in such shape that it will require comparatively little of our time. The time thus saved will be given to editorial work. We hope to be able soon to make a paper which will be an invaluable adjunct to every preacher in his ministerial work, and which will be regarded as an indispensable requisite of every Methodist home.

The Appointment of Committees in the Methodist Church.

Some questions have been raised about the appointment of committees—by whom appointed? by the Conference, or by the presiding officer?—in the Methodist Church. It is likely that this matter, in one form or another, will come before the next General Conference.

In the case of a member of the church the committee of investigation and of trial "shall be appointed" by the preacher in charge. There can be no doubt as to the wording and the meaning of the law in this case. In cases of arbitration the arbiters, one or two each, are chosen by the plaintiff and defendant, and the third or fifth arbiter is chosen by the two or by the four, as the case may be.

In the case of a local preacher the committee of investigation "shall be appointed" by the preacher in charge. If the Quarterly Conference differ in judgment from the committee, a new committee "may be appointed." I suppose it is to be appointed by the preacher in charge, as the first committee was. If the case comes to trial in the Quarterly Conference, the secretary is to be appointed, and not elected, as the secretaries of Quarterly Conferences usually are. The same is true of the secretary to keep the record in the trial of a member. The secretary is appointed, and not elected.

In the case of a Bishop the committee of investigation may be self-constituted; but the committee of trial must be summoned or appointed by another Bishop. He has the right to name the men. I suppose it would be legitimate for the Bishop to appoint the secretary in this case.

In the case of a traveling preacher the committee of investigation is appointed or "called together" by the Bishop, or if the Bishop is not present, by the presiding elder. If the accused be a presiding elder, the committee of investigation may be self-constituted; but in case of trial the Bishop "shall appoint the committee" of trial. If the charges are preferred during the session of the Annual Conference, the case is referred to a committee for investigation, and it would seem from analogy that said committee should be appointed by the president of the Conference. If the Conference differ in judgment from this committee, a new committee may be appointed, which implies the idea that the first committee was appointed.

The chairman of the committee of trial "shall be appointed by the Bishop," and it would seem from analogy and from the wording of the law that the committee was appointed by him. This appears still more evident from the right of challenge allowed the accused, for the validity of the cause for challenge is to be judged by the chairman of the committee who was appointed by the Bishop to act for him in the trial.

So it would seem that from first to last in our economy, committees of investigation and of trial are to be appointed by the pastor, the presiding elder and the Bishop. They are in no case elected or chosen by the Conference. This may not be the best way, nor even the better way, but it is our way of doing these things. If it can be improved upon, why, let it be done.

There is a fundamental reason for these regulations that, to our Methodist way of thinking, accounts for these regulations. It is this: "Pastors in any relation, preachers in charge, presiding elders or Bishops, are charged with the responsibility of administering discipline." This inheres in our form of government, and we think it is solemnly enjoined in the Word of God.

If we were Congregational, instead of being Episcopal, then the congregation, or the Conference, would have the right to appoint or to elect all committees. With us the power to appoint committees is lodged with the officer charged with the responsibility of administering discipline.

Any change in this respect must necessarily be radical, and it will effect the very tap-root of Episcopal Methodism. This matter deserves, and, of course, will receive from thinking men, deep and prayerful consideration. This system has worked admirably for many decades, and it should not be changed or tampered with without the most careful consideration.

If the right of selecting committees for the administration of discipline in any case is to be transferred to the Conference or congregation, then pastors must be relieved from all responsibility for discipline in the church.

GILDEROY.

P. and H. M. Society.

Let everybody read the communication of Bishop Wilson concerning the Parsonage and Home Mission Society. Concerning the home mission work of the society, and the need for it, we will write at another time. Here we wish to say a few words concerning parsonage building. In many cases in the far West the problem of ministerial supply is solved when a parsonage has been erected. In any of the new and rapidly growing towns of that section, house rent is so high as to be entirely out of the reach of our preachers with the meagre salaries they receive. This being the case, the Bishop is sometimes compelled to supply a place with a man without a family—perhaps, a young, inexperienced man—when he knows that the charge needs a man of experience. Build a parsonage in such a town, and you enable the Bishop to man the work properly. Work like this our P. and H. M. Society is doing, besides helping to build parsonages in our older Conferences. We are sure that all our people need in order to interest them in this society is information as to its operations. Three of our Bishops have written in behalf of this society within the last few weeks. Let all our people heed the wise words of our chief superintendents on this important subject.

From Our Missionary Secretaries.

Dear Brother: We find collections under the assessments for foreign missions up to Jan. 1, 1894, show a considerable decrease, as compared with the corresponding period of the last fiscal year of the Board. Unless this is overcome before the close of the present fiscal year (March 31, 1894), the results will very seriously cripple our missionary work. This possible shortage renders of special importance the resolutions adopted by the Annual Conferences pledging early collections for foreign missions in every pastoral charge. If this is done promptly and vigorously by each pastor in his congregation and Sunday-school, and the money forwarded without delay through his Conference treasurer to the general treasurer at Nashville, the interests of our mission work will be largely secured.

As the success of this department of our Master's work depends on the co-operation of every pastor in our great connection, you will pardon us for again presenting this urgent call. Our missions are being prospered as never before in their history. We earnestly invoke your aid in early collections at this hour and especially your earnest prayer for the success of our missionaries and their labors.

I. G. JOHN,

The Religious Newspaper.

The salt and sweetness of family life are its relations to the kingdom of God. It keeps these relations through intelligent interest in what Christians are doing in Christian service, in the development of their own lives, in the church, the community, the State. To lose this interest is to die spiritually, to allow the choicest ties of the family to decay and to weaken its beneficent influence in society.

No other instrument works more effectively and constantly to foster this noble interest than the religious newspaper. It talks with the children about the things of the kingdom in which they are already interested. It exalts the office of fatherhood and motherhood, of husband and wife, by treating of household ministries which bless the bodies, minds and hearts of all the family, from the babe in the cradle to the grandsire in his declining years. It suggests the ornaments, the books and the ways which give to the home the culture that makes its attractions outvie the temptations which, more powerfully than ever before, lead the young, and sometimes the elder ones, astray.

The religious newspaper makes the teaching of the Bible practical and present. It applies revealed truth to daily living, makes it a power in the decisions which must be made in those smaller affairs where the purposes of life are shaped and developed for its great crisis. It re-enforces the utterances of the pastor, instructs the church in many ways by the recorded experiences of other churches, and helps to guide and quicken its spiritual life. Most of the new movements by which the churches advance in strength and influence are started by information which is first spread through the religious newspaper. Christians who do not read it know little and feel little their relations to the body to which they belong, and are little moved to join its work to bring the nations to Christ.

The religious newspaper is as necessary to men's intellectual as to their spiritual growth. Men without it may be keen and eager in their business, and women without it may be zealous to maintain their social standing. They may keep informed through the secular press of passing events, but the interest of culture, no less than of religion, require them to study present problems in the light of Christianity. There would not be motive enough to keep the intellectual nature of the ordinary man or woman alive if the questions which engage their attention as related to society and the world at large were divorced from religion. The great questions which society is striving to answer are moral problems, and in their last analyses are questions of personal duty depending on divine sanctions. The integrity of the family, the relations between employers and employed and the education of the people by schools and platforms and pulpits, by literature, the social habits of the people in eating and drinking and amusements, and discoveries, inventions and methods which affect social and business life in the moral relations, the making of nations by law and policy, and the dealings of nations with each other—all these pass under review in the religious newspaper, and each one's duty in relation to them is interpreted by the position he holds, or ought to hold, in the kingdom of God.

For these reasons, and others like these, we counsel every head of a family to take the best religious newspaper he can find; to furnish it to his sons and daughters as they go out from their homes; to see that it is present in the new homes they found for themselves, and to commend it heartily to their neighbors and friends. Pastors, it would seem, should hardly need this counsel. They can have no more effective ally in building up their churches. It speaks when they must be silent, and it carries to their flocks many messages which they would be glad to give concerning themselves and their personal relations to their people, but which in their position they are compelled to withhold. For the sake of the family, the Church, the State and the kingdom of God, extend the circulation and influence of the religious newspaper.—Congregationalist.

Attention! Sunday-School Workers.

A Sunday-school Institute will be held at the Carondelet Street Methodist Church, at 7:30 P. M., Thursday and Friday, Feb. 1 and 2, 1894 (under the auspices of the Executive Committee of the State Sunday-school Association), conducted by Prof. Hamill, of Illinois, Superintendent of Normal Sunday-school Work.

TOPICS.

A Study of the Pentateuch.
The Management of the Sunday-school.
The Importance of Sunday-school Work.
A Study of the Life of Christ.
The Sunday-school Teacher and His Work.

N. B.—This work of the Institute is designed specially to assist practical Sunday-school workers, and to aid in teaching the current International Lessons. All interested in Sunday-school work and young people's societies are specially invited to attend.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

With this issue we begin publishing our advertising rates, to which we invite attention.

After a little while we hope to be able to give more space than we have hitherto done to secular news.

From many sources we have received messages of appreciation of our new department, that of "Hygiene."

Let all our preachers read the communication of Rev. J. W. McLaurin, in this column, and comply with his request.

With this issue our Epworth League Department reappears under the able editorship of Rev. H. H. Ahrens, pastor of Craps Street Church, of this city.

In the absence of the pastor, Dr. R. Q. Mallard, we had the privilege of expounding the gospel last Sabbath at Napoleon Avenue Presbyterian Church.

In this issue we give a small amount of space to matters pertaining to the culinary art. This department will be continued, if we find that its continuance is desired.

Dr. I. W. Cooper, financial agent of Millsaps College, has established his headquarters at Jackson, Miss. Let correspondents take notice and govern themselves accordingly.

The clerical delegates from the Florida Conference to the General Conference are: Josephus Anderson, T. W. Moore, T. J. Nixon, A. E. Householder. Lay—C. T. Carroll, J. C. Cooper, J. F. White, J. H. Dorsey.

We invite special attention to the communication of Rev. J. P. Drake in another column. The special feature of mission work of which he writes is worthy of the attention of all. Money given to this cause will be wisely bestowed.

We worshiped on Sunday night at Felicity Street Church, where we heard a very earnest, practical, spiritual sermon from the pastor, Rev. T. K. Faunt Leroy. Four members were received by certificate, and one person made application for reception on profession of faith.

We are under obligations to Chancellor Kirkland, of Vanderbilt University, for a copy of his very able and scholarly inaugural address, which has been published in pamphlet form. We congratulate the University on the wisdom of the Board of Trust in its choice of a chancellor.

The Union Gospel Mission of this city is, we learn, doing excellent work, and merits the sympathies and help of all good people. Contributions, whether of money, clothing or other valuables, should be sent to E. A. Vail, Bible House, 163 Camp street, New Orleans, La.

We invite special attention to the communication of Rev. H. P. Lewis in this issue anent our church in Summit. A church can never be regarded as permanently established in a community until it owns a house of worship. Other churches and various secular organizations may be very liberal in lending their houses, but lending becomes monotonous after a while. In the course of time a community will lose respect for a church which does not provide itself with a domicile. Bro. Lewis and his flock have, therefore, done a wise thing in resolving to build a house of worship. As our own people in Summit are not able to build such a house as they ought to have, let the lovers of our Zion everywhere come to the rescue according to ability.

President Clay, of the S. P. C. C., preached at Louisiana Avenue Church last Sunday at 11 o'clock, and met with great success in his mission. A very large congregation listened with unwavering attention for over an hour to his strong and fervid presentation of the cause to which he has dedicated his life. Both Dr. Jno. T. Sawyer, the pastor, and Mr. Clay were made life patrons of the society by the payment of $25 for each. In addition a handsome collection was taken and some new members were secured for both the Parent and Juvenile Societies. At night the Rev. Ezekiel Taminosian, of Antioch, Syria, filled the Louisiana Avenue pulpit, discoursing interestingly and eloquently to a splendid audience. He received from the congregation a handsome sum for the maintenance of his Christian school in Antioch, that city on the Orontes where God's people were "first called Christians."

Notice.

Every pastor in Mississippi and Louisiana is hereby most earnestly requested to send me as early as possible the postoffice address of each Epworth League in his charge. For a very important purpose I want the postoffice address of every such organization in the two States named. Brethren, please comply with this request, and very much oblige,

Yours in Christ,

J. W. McLAURIN,
163 Camp street, New Orleans.

Twelve Thousand Catarrh Patients

TREATED ABSOLUTELY FREE OF CHARGE BY DR. HARTMAN.

The announcement made in many of the leading papers of the United States last November that Dr. Hartman, of Columbus, Ohio, would undertake the treatment of 10 000 catarrh patients free was thought by many who would have gladly availed themselves of his offer to be a mistake. Nevertheless, it was a fact; and already the 10,000 have applied and are already taking the first month's treatment. The elaborate preparations which the doctor made, and the great number of assistants required to carry on this undertaking, makes it possible for him to extend the number to 12 000. Therefore, 2,000 more names will be accepted as regular patients. All that is required of the patient is to send name and address to Dr. S. B. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio, and complete directions for the first month's treatment will be sent at once. No charge is made at any time.

FREE MEDICAL BOOKS

on catarrh, la grippe, coughs, colds and consumption will be sent prepaid for a short time to any address by The Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Company of Columbus, Ohio.

BOOKS.

A CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY OF AMERICAN EPISCOPAL METHODISM. By John J. Tigert, D. D. Barbee & Smith. Price, $1.50.

A copy of the above book lies upon our table. We have not yet had time to read it, but hope to have the pleasure of doing so at an early day. A more extended notice may be looked for.

"JACK-KNIFE AMONG BRAMBLES." By A. G. Haygood, Sr. Price, $1. Southern Methodist Publishing House.

This unique title introduces to us a book aimed to counteract, in a measure, the evil influence of the "higher criticism," of which within recent years we have heard so much. In this day, when irreverent scholarship is attempting to divest the Word of God of its miraculousness and of its divine origin, the appearance of a book like this can not help but prove beneficial to the cause of Christianity. When learned scientists with an air of more than Solomonic wisdom assume the prerogative of settling questions of religion, the unscholarly sometimes accept their dicta as the teaching of science, and thus in a measure lose faith in the Bible as a revelation from God. To such persons this book will prove a boon of priceless value.

"Higher criticism" the author characterizes as "scholarship run wild." The best antidote for its poisonous teachings, in his estimate, is the logic of sound common sense. As the author is known to be a man of strong intellect and scholarly attainments, his protest against the fallacies of the higher critics will command the attention of the reading public. Not only is the author a cogent reasoner, but he is also a master of sarcasm; and he makes the speculative theologians wince under his telling strokes.

The whole book is suggestive, stimulating, and helpful. It discusses quite a variety of questions. The chapter on "Meats and Herbs" is especially interesting. In it the author remarks that many well-meaning, but short-sighted people misinterpret Paul's utterance about the eating of meat in this way: "What I don't approve, it is a sin for you to do."

We have heard the criticism passed upon the work that it will be construed by a certain class of persons as antagonistic to the cause of higher education. Such a construction would be a gross perversion of the teachings of the book. It is only the errors of a certain class of scholars that the author combats. No man among us has a clearer record on the education question than Bishop Haygood. The terse, vigorous, unique style of the author is familiar to most of our readers. Its uniqueness is such that some one has invented the term, "Haygoodese," as descriptive of it. If he were to consult us as to style, we would whisper this in his ear, "Don't overwork the parenthesis." The book is timely and merits a wide circulation. Our readers will find an advertisement of it in another column.

Mrs. Mary A. Geddie.

MR. EDITOR: I have just returned from Eureka, Miss., where on to-day we laid to rest the body of Mrs. Mary A. Geddie, wife of Rev. D. M. Geddie, of the North Mississippi Conference. She died in great peace in the humble parsonage, Sunday, Jan. 14, 1894. Another of the faithful women has fallen asleep, having committed her husband, her children, and work to Him who never sleeps.

T. J. NEWELL.

Grenada, Miss., Jan. 18, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: My precious sister, wife of Rev. D. M. Geddie, of the North Mississippi Conference, passed quietly and peacefully to heaven yesterday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. She leaves her devoted and grief-stricken husband, with two sweet little children, to mourn her departure and battle alone for the Master. Let the brethren of the Conference sustain them with prayers in their sorrow.

Woman and Foreign Missions.

There are about 425 millions of heathen women in the world. There are 300 millions of Buddhist women, with no hope of immortality, unless in some future transmigration they may be born again as men. There are 80 millions of women who are confined in Moslem harems. There are, perhaps, 400 millions of women who, if reached at all with the gospel, must be taught by Christian women. The severe restrictions of the seraglio, the harem and the zenana forbid a man to approach eastern wives and mothers even in the capacity of a physician.

"The character of the women of a country," says the Earl of Shaftesbury, "is of greater importance than the character of the men. Direct all the power you have to touch the hearts of the women; and if you can get women to take the lead, you will find conversions in all Oriental countries."

"About 12,000 Chinese women, it is said, pass away every day, having never heard of the gospel. It is affirmed by those who have been long in China that no less than 200 000 infant girls are murdered in that country every year. Thousands of female infants are saved from slaughter annually through the missionary influence. If the sweet prattle of childhood gladdens our hearts here, the screams of the dying babes in that far-away land will touch and tender our hearts, and we will reach out a hand to save."—Christian Standard.

In view of these solemn facts may each Methodist sister's heart be stirred, so that some offering, even if it is only the widow's mite (genuine coin), be forwarded to Miss Mary Andrews, Vicksburg, Miss., in response to the call for one hundred thousand dollars from our brave sisters on the watch-tower of our beloved woman's work for woman! Oh! that each precious lamb of the fold would send a nickle, if not more, to aid in saving those of the heathen land!

Will not every sister, who was president of an auxiliary now lifeless, strive for a fresh anointing of the Holy Spirit, and make persistent efforts for reviving the languishing or dead work?

We trust that the Mississippi Conference will move grandly to the front. It is necessary that auxiliaries send quarterly reports of existence, if nothing more, to their respective district secretaries.

Mrs. Emma Reed, district secretary, Vicksburg district, reported Jan. 5: "By writing to every society on the district, I have learned that some have been disbanded for several years, while others must be either 'dead or dying,' as their corresponding secretaries have failed to reply to my letters of inquiry. "Our society here, Jefferson Street (Natchez) is in a flourishing condition. The attendance at our monthly meetings is comparatively good, and I believe that all can say these comings together are 'times of refreshing from the Lord.' Not only are our spiritual natures revived, but our intellectual natures are strengthened by the study of our mission fields through the columns of the Woman's Missionary Advocate, and from the 'talks' given by the different members from our missionary maps." (China, Mexico, and Brazil. The three will be sent in a hollow pasteboard roll for $1.10, postpaid. All orders must be sent to the office of the Woman's Missionary Advocate, Southern Methodist Publishing House, accompanied by the above amount.)

"We are also growing in numbers, having secured nine new members since the annual meeting in June. Some of our members are untiring in their efforts to increase our membership. One good sister secured two of the nine, and is confident of securing two more. We believe if we can double our membership, we will be doing something toward raising that $100,000. When the treasurer made her report in December, we sent $5 for Miss McNemar. In October we sent a nice box of clothing to 'our little girl' at Laredo Seminary. On Nov. 24, one of our members, Mrs. Susan Reed Guice, was called from labor to reward. She was one of the 'pure ones of earth,' with whom none could come in contact without being spiritually benefited. 'God's children are gathering home.'"

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

BY REV. HENRY H. AHRENS.

Theme for Prayer Meeting.

FOURTH WEEK IN JANUARY.

Filial Devotion.—Ruth i, 1-18.

I. Death of husband and two only sons had rendered the home of Naomi desolate. Death invades every household.

"Friend after friend departs;
Who has not lost a friend?"

II. Naomi was maternally concerned about the welfare of her two widowed daughters-in-law. Advises them to return to their kinsmen. It is wicked to make light of the "mother-in-law." Frequently her position is a trying one. Deserves sympathy.

III. Ruth would not leave Naomi. Desired to go, live and die with her dear relative. Why?

(1) Though of Moab, a heathen, she had learned highly to appreciate the religion of Naomi.

(2) She desired to go and live in Judah, the land of promise; the land occupied by the worshipers of the true God. Naomi's God was to be her God.

(3) Love to her dead husband led her to love his mother. Would not forsake her. Nought but death should separate them.

The Name of Our Church.

The custom of saying Y. M. C. A. for Young Men's Christian Association, or W. C. T. U. for Woman's Christian Temperance Union, or M. E. C., S., for Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is an ugly one. True, "What's in a name? A rose," etc. Nevertheless, good taste requires that names should be written and expressed in extenso. But here I specially inveigh against the habit of leaving off the suffix "South" from the name of our church. In the secular press this omission frequently occurs. Church members fall in the same habit. By leaving off said suffix, we name a church not our own. John is not James, nor vice versa. Whatever may have been the original design of adding the word "South" to the name of our church, it belongs to it. That settles it! It has no other significance to us than that it distinguishes our church from other churches. In speaking of your church, designate it as the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Work.

The sluggard comes to grief. Bankruptcy and want will overtake him. But, alas! drones abound. Producers are few. People who desire to live of their "wits" are usually devoid of that commodity. Only work, honest work, will carry the day. In the church, too, work is the great desideratum. "Work in my vineyard," said the Master. Work to increase our League; work to increase the number of attendants on prayer meeting, etc.

Sociables.

You are going. Have no objection. Of course, you will not associate with wicked people. You know the saying about "birds of a feather," etc. Attending festivals of any kind, remember:

1. You must not soil your soul with sin.

2 You must not become a stumbling-block to others.

Our Union Epworth League.

One of the most enjoyable Union League meetings was held at the Craps Street Methodist Church on Thursday, Jan. 11. President Da Pass and Miss Addie McKnight, secretary, were in their respective places.

The League felt honored in having Dr. La Prade, Bros. Frank N. Parker and Robert H. Wynn with them, and trust that they will continue to visit the League as often as they can.

The reports of the secretaries of the different Leagues showed progress along all lines.

The resignation of Rev. Robert H. Wynn as editor of the League column was reluctantly received, and the writer of this was elected to fill the vacancy.

After the benediction nearly everyone repaired to the parsonage and partook of refreshments provided them by the Craps Street League.

The next Union League meeting will be held at the Carondelet Street Church. All are invited to attend.

Woman's Work.

To the Members of the Woman's Missionary Society, North Mississippi Conference:

Dear Sisters: Before me lie our treasurer's reports for the past three quarters of this financial year. I have just added the sums total, and the amount almost frightens me. It speaks loudly either of carelessness on the part of auxiliary treasurers in forwarding their collections quarterly, or of lack of promptness on the part of members in paying dues, or of delay and postponement in meeting pledges, or it shows a great falling off of interest in this department of our work for the Master. I can not believe this last supposition to be true; the cause is found in the other three. I have already sent out circular letters to both adult and juvenile societies urging strenuous effort during the next six weeks; and I must again sound a bugle note of alarm in the camp, and call each enlisted soldier to the post of duty, and to active, energetic service. Pay up your back dues, sisters, your yearly contingent fund; and assist to the utmost of your ability in the raising of your pledge money. If your society has made no pledge, by all means help your Conference society in its effort to contribute largely toward the $100,000 called for this year by our Woman's Board of Missions.

Have special blessings crowned your life in the past year, my sister? Bring a thank-offering to the Giver of every good gift, and thereby prove the sincerity of your gratitude. I realize that I have said all this to you before, but "agitation prevents stagnation," and line upon line, precept upon precept, is sometimes needed. "A long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether" during the next six weeks will bring us out triumphant and prove conclusively that, in spite of sore bereavement, in spite of changes and loss by removal among our officers, in spite of great stringency in money matters, the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference is steadfast, true to God and to the souls of the benighted and enslaved in heathen lands. Let no Woman's Missionary Society in the North Mississippi Conference rest satisfied to fall behind its last year's record—forward, never backward, in God's work. We must make this quarter's collections the largest in our history, as a Conference society. Strive for it, work to that end, pray God for wisdom and blessing, and may richest success crown your efforts. Yours in his work,

MARY L. HARGROVE,
Conf. Cor. Sec.

"A Little Child Shall Lead Them."

I would like to lay before your readers a unique and very religious way of raising money for missions, which might be practiced by every family desirous of keeping the Sabbath from needless secularity, and at the same time advancing the lines of light and salvation.

Little Zumelia Neal, at three years old, led by the Spirit and aided by her parents, inaugurated a plan which, followed out, will lead to great and growing good. Not having much means at command for aiding God's cause, and desiring to do "what she could," she diligently gathered up all the eggs mama's hens would lay on Sundays, put them aside in her "missionary basket," and got papa to sell them in the town of Edwards during the ensuing week. Thus she has been able in two years to pay for missions more than $4, and also to pay her full share towards subscribing for our ADVOCATE. The dear child has gone with her parents to Cayuga, where we trust her good example will be followed by many others, as our blessings and prayers follow her.

Now, brethren of the ministry, will you not tell or read this to your people, and begin a new era of double faithfulness in little things. Such a plan followed out in each Methodist family (there are few indeed who do not raise chickens) would swell our mission funds fifty or a hundred per cent. Who will go to practice it?

Yours for missionary advancement and Sabbath observance,

J. P. DRAKE.

Parsonage and Home Mission Society, North Mississippi Conference.

Our corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. S. Featherston, is sending, as ordered by general secretary, to every auxiliary and every pastor in our Conference programs, collecting cards, rings, etc., for our special services, Feb. 6-11. Our Conference officers do most earnestly request our preachers and people to co-operate in this good work, and do all in their power to make grandly successful these days set apart by our Central Committee.

I am glad to announce that there are now but two districts in our Conference (Holly Springs and Kosciusko) without secretaries, and we hope very soon to have these vacancies well filled. The list of secretaries now stands as follows: Sardis district—Mrs. W. H. Wall, Sardis; Grenada district—Mrs. G. W. Jones, Grenada; Winona district—Mrs. E. K. Shivers, Black Hawk; Columbus district—Mrs. C. E. Cogdell, Brooksville; Aberdeen district—Miss Mattie Brown, Tupelo; Corinth district—Mrs. H. R. Tucker, Boonville; Greenville district—Mrs. Robert Somerville, Greenville.

A LONG STRING of diseases follows a "run-down" system when the liver is inactive and the blood in disorder. Look out for "breakers ahead" by putting the liver and blood in a healthy condition. You've only to turn to the right remedy to make yourself secure from disease. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery prevents as well as cures. Take it, as you ought, when you feel the first symptoms (languor, loss of appetite, dullness, depression) and you'll save yourself from something serious.

"I DON'T CARE."

BY FLOY SCHOONMAKER ARMSTRONG.

Girls and boys, I wish to tell you
Of a foe you entertain,
I have seen him with you often,
And the fact has caused me pain;
For he only seeks the ruin
Of your lives so young and fair—
He's a foe, cool, sly, and cunning,
And his name is "I don't care."

Have you ever thought, dear children,
That "I don't care" is a thief,
Taking from you time and order,
Candor, friends, and all save grief?
Don't you notice the bold falsehoods
That he daily tells to you,
And that makes you say, "I don't care,"
When at heart you really do?

He at first will only cause you
To forget yourself, and dare
To answer parents, friends, and strangers
With the rude words, "I don't care."
But be warned! He'll plant within you
The true spirit of his name,
Then he'll disappear like magic,
Leaving you to bear the shame.

Break the habit, children, break it;
Do not use the common phrase;
Smaller things than this have started
Many a life in reckless ways.
Guard your words, your thoughts, your actions;
To yourselves be true, and dare
Not let the good of life slip by you
With a reckless, "I don't care."

—The Little Christian.

A Field for Mothers.

It is in America that we find the boys and girls smart beyond their years, and with more nerve tissue than they know what to do with. The little folks remind one of adult age; we may well call them "little men and women." They already know too much; they are active in temperament because they can not be otherwise; and even before they are grown they will be rushed into society. The world around them moves fast, and they are racing along with it. The child eats at his father's table, takes the same food and drink, and it will be well if he does not have a similar smoke after each meal. Before he reaches manhood he will have laid the foundations for dyspepsia; and his little sister will not be a great way behind him.

Now a practical question in this connection is what the mothers have to do with it. We hear a great deal about what women are doing in science, literature, art, invention, and other fields of human industry. This is well; but who is studying the physical well-being of the next generation? Bones and muscles, and the bodily tissues generally, are made from the food we eat; and they are often badly deteriorated and the blood poisoned either by taking food that is not suited to the needs of the system, or that which is spoiled with condiments. Surely here is a field for the mothers. Let them see to it that the young and grown child is not injured for life by any fundamental errors in its dietetic habits. No doubt the taste for strong drinks, tobacco, and many forms of dissipation, is too often acquired in the home and at the family table. Mothers, it is to be feared, do not sufficiently realize the importance of this subject, nor the close connection that exists between the tastes acquired in early life and the habits which persist in later years.—From "Sanitarian," in Demorest's Magazine.

A Word to Fathers.

There was never as now a time when so much was said and written on the duties of mothers in the training and care of their children. One would almost think that the child belongs wholly to her; that the father has no rights in or responsibility for the care and conduct of the children. In these days when mothers are finding out their mistake in confining themselves to cooking the food, making and mending the garments for their families, and are learning that they must keep abreast with their boys and girls by interesting themselves with them in this work-a-day world, its current events, literary pursuits and philanthropic work, it is also time for fathers to take time from business and the world to enter into the home—not taking the mother's place, but their own.

How often we hear it said that the three sweetest words are "mother," "home," and "heaven!" I protest against leaving out the word "father," as if he had no place either in home or heaven. Back of all love and being is God or Father. First in home, as first in heaven, should be the father.

Is there any good reason why the father's and mother's duties in the care and conduct of the children should be so divided than an impassable wall rises between, and, as on a signboard, is written, "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther?"

A child, when he first begins the study of geography, naturally thinks of the countries or of the United States, as divided by a natural or supernatural dividing line. I remember looking for that line, when as a child I journeyed into an adjoining State. Then I learned they were imaginary lines. Is not that as true of the division of the father's and mother's care of their children?

I would like to see the time come when it would neither be unusual nor a subject of a surprised remark, to see a father take the little two or three-year-old child, or even younger, to bed, while perchance the mother takes up the evening paper and reads the news—news indeed to her, although not to the father, who has heard much of the current events talked of or about, in the office, on the street, or in the car.

Mothers know the value of these bed-time hours, and much of the greater confidence usually given them is due to the wise use of these times.

The boy would not love his mother less than now, but his father more than it is possible for him to do when that father is largely known as the provider, a good provider though he may be, of the comforts of the household.

There is another reason for this. Sometimes the mother is called, it may be, to follow other members of the household who have entered into "the many mansions," and the family is known on earth as motherless. Blessed are the children who still have, to some extent, father and mother, in the father who learned to be a mother also to them, in the days when the circle was unbroken!

Fathers, you will lose no real dignity, but gain in nobleness and tenderness of character, if you will cultivate in yourselves the mother qualities.—Alice H. Rich, in the Interior.

Young Man, This Is for You.

Save a part of your weekly earnings, even if it be no more than a quarter of a dollar, and put your savings monthly into a savings bank.

Buy nothing until you can pay for it, and buy nothing you do not need.

A young man who has grit enough to follow these rules will have taken the first step upward to success in business. He may be compelled to wear a coat a year longer, even if it be unfashionable; he may have to live in a smaller house than some of his acquaintances; his wife may not sparkle with diamonds, nor be resplendent in silk or satin just yet; his children may not be dressed as dolls or popinjays; his table may be plain and wholesome, and the wiz of the beer or champagne cork may never be heard in his dwelling; he may have to get along without the earliest fruits and vegetables; he may have to abjure the club-room, the theatre and the gambling-hell, and to reverence the Sabbath day and read and follow the precepts of the Bible instead; but he will be better off in every way for this self-discipline. Yes, he may do all these without detriment to his manhood or health or character. True, empty-headed folk may sneer at him and affect to pity him, but he will find that he has grown stronger-hearted and brave enough to stand the laugh of the foolish. He has become an independent man. He never owes anybody, and so he is no man's slave. He has become master of himself; and a master of himself will become a leader among men, and prosperity will crown his every enterprise.

Young man, life's discipline and life's success comes from hard work and early self-denial; and hard-earned success is all the sweeter at the time when old years climb upon your shoulder and you need propping up.—Mid-Continent.

LITTLE ACTS OF LOVE.

A merry sound to cheer the babe,
And tell a friend is near,
A word of ready sympathy
To dry the childish tear.
A glass of water timely brought,
An offer'd easy chair;
A turning of the window-blind,
That all may feel the air.

An early flower unasked bestowed,
A light and cautious tread;
A voice, to gentlest whisper hushed,
To spare the aching head.
O! deeds like these, though little things,
Yet purest love disclose,
As fragrant atoms in the air—
Reveal the hidden rose.

Doing One Thing at a Time.

I never could have done what I have done without the habits of punctuality, order and diligence—without the determination to concentrate myself on one subject at a time, no matter how quickly its successor should come upon its heels, which I then formed. Heaven knows I write this in no spirit of self-laudation. The man who reviews his own life as I do mine in going on here, from page to page, had need to have been a good man indeed if he would be spared the sharp consciousness of many talents neglected, many opportunities wasted, many erratic and perverted feelings constantly at war within his breast, and defeating him. I do not hold one natural gift, I dare say, that I have not abused.

My meaning simply is that whatever I have tried to do in life I have tried with all my heart to do well; that whatever I have devoted myself to I have devoted myself to completely; that in great aims and in small I have always been thoroughly in earnest. I have never believed it possible that any natural or improved ability can obtain immunity from the companionship of the steady, plain, hard-working qualities and hope to gain its end. There is no such thing as such fulfillment on this earth.

Some happy talent and some fortunate opportunity may form the two sides of the ladder on which some men mount, but the rounds of that ladder must be made of stuff to stand wear and tear; and there is no substitute for thorough-going, ardent talent and sincere earnestness. Never to put one hand to anything on which I could not throw my whole self, and never affect depreciation of my work, whatever it was, I now find to have been my golden rules.—Charles Dickens.

Little Worries.

We have read of a battle against cannibals gained by the use of tacks. They had taken possession of a whaling vessel and bound the man who was left in care of it. The crew, on returning, saw the situation, and scattered upon the deck of the vessel the tacks, which penetrated the bare feet of the savages, and sent them howling into the sea. They were ready to meet lance and sword, but they could not overcome the tacks on the floor. We brace ourselves up against great calamities. The little tacks of life, scattered along our way, piercing our feet and giving us pain, are hard to bear. A pastor was absorbed in studying the question of socialism, when his wife came in with despair on her face, and she wanted advice about the servants. "Oh, my dear," he replied, "I can not give my time to little matters like domestic service. I am trying to solve the social problem of the universe." "Well," replied the wife, "you solve the problem in the kitchen, and I will promise you to solve the problem of the universe in twenty-four hours." Really, it is easier to dispose of those great questions which cover the world than it is to meet and successfully overcome the little worries which present themselves day by day.—Rev. A. C. Dixon, in "Milk and Meat."

What is the secret of success? It is to get in harmony with God. His plans never fail, and those who work according to his plans will succeed. Fortunately, in spiritual things his will is clearly revealed.

Little Alice and the Mirror.

Alice was blest with a remarkably expressive face; but when ill-humored on any occasion, her face became distressingly ugly. Her kind mother had tried to induce her to change into better humor, more patience, and thus avoid the oft-repeated change from beauty to ugliness, but failed. One day, when Alice was in one of her worst moods and looks, she suddenly, but gently lifted her to the large mirror on the dresser and said: "Dear Alice, just look at that ugly face."

Through her tears and scowls the little girl saw a face so repulsive that she could hardly believe it was her own face; but it changed at once, and from expressions of disgust to surprise, and then incidental better appearance to the normal expression of the really lovely face.

"O mama," she said, "do I look that ugly when I am bad?"

"Yes, my dear child," answered the mother, "and what would your dear papa say if he saw his little darling so changed?"

Little Alice hung her shapely head, and thought a moment. "O, darling mama," she replied, "I will never be naughty again."

Then her mama took her to her heart and said: "My sweet little darling, also remember that your heavenly Father sees, not only your face, but your heart, and that is worse yet. O, from now out may he help you to be good, and then will you always be lovely; for lovely is who lovely does."—Western Advocate.

Religious Training.

More and more there is growing a disposition among parents to permit all matters of religious observance to be with their offspring mere matters of choice or preference. Your child must learn French and German and drawing; but he shall learn his catechism and his Bible lesson and a reverent observance of this holy day if he chooses, and not otherwise. A more dismal and irrational folly it is not easy to conceive of! I do not say that there may not have been folly in another and an opposite direction. I am not unmindful that religious teaching has been sometimes made a dreary and intolerable burden. But surely we can correct one excess (not, I apprehend, very frequent or very harmful) without straightway flying to an opposite and worse one. And so I plead with you who are parents to train your children to ways of reverent familiarity with God's Word, God's house, and God's day. Let them understand that something higher than your taste or preference makes these things sacred and binding, and constrains you to imbue them with your spirit. And that they may do this the more effectually, give them, I entreat you, that mightiest teaching, which consists in your own consistent and devout example.—Bishop H. C. Potter.

The Bright Side.

Cheerfulness can become a habit, and habits sometimes help us over hard places. A cheerful heart seeth cheerful things.

A lady and a gentleman were in a timber-yard situated by a dirty, foul-smelling river.

The lady said: "How good the pine boards smell!"

"Pine boards!" exclaimed the gentleman, "just smell this foul river!"

"No, thank you," the lady replied; "I prefer to smell the pine boards."

And she was right. If she, or we, can carry this principle through our entire living, we shall have the cheerful heart, the cheerful voice and cheerful face.

There is in some houses an unconscious atmosphere of domestic and social ozone which brightens everybody. Wealth can not give it, nor can poverty take it away.—Miss Muloch.

There is a great deal of heroism in daily life all around us; often, and, indeed, largely unrecognized—known perhaps, through the revelation of circumstances to some one friend, but invisible and inaudible to the world in general. Yet it is a potent factor in life—it is the salt and the savor and is the living witness of the divine element that is in humanity.—Boston Budget.

I have tried to read history intelligently, and I tell you that the world is better to-day than it ever was.—Bishop Wilson.

WHITE—Mrs. L. E. WHITE (nee Cheatham) was born in Homer, La., Jan. 17, 1856; joined the church under the ministry of Rev. S. H. Whatley about seven or eight years ago; was married to Chas. F. White, Aug. 23, 1887, and died at El Paso, Texas, on Dec. 11, 1893, of pulmonary consumption.

Sister White suffered intensely for many months, but with all her suffering was hopeful, patient and submissive. Her long prostration, no doubt, was sanctified to her soul's good, and gave her time to make ready to depart. During the last few months of her illness she seemed to fully realize that the end was not far distant, and spoke of death as only they can speak who have been delivered from the fear of death by him "who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel;" in fact, near the end she expressed "a desire to depart and to be with Christ." We were not surprised when we received word that "she died a happy death, and asked her sorrowing husband and those around her to meet her in heaven." Her implicit confidence in God, and patient submission to his will, and her even and sweet-spirited fidelity to her husband's interests made for her a character worthy of emulation. Having no children, she bestowed the blessing of a loving heart upon a little orphan girl. She leaves a husband, two sisters and an only brother to mourn her loss. May the Savior, who was so precious to her, guide and lead them to himself, that when the last day shall come they may be united in heaven! T. L. L.

SEYMOUR—Capt. JNO. F. SEYMOUR was born in Fairfield district, S. C., May 29, 1805, and died near Tolahatchie, Miss., Jan. 3, 1894. He lived until grown in South Carolina, and then moved to Green county, Ala., where he married Miss Rachel Abernathy in 1829. He moved to Rankin county, Miss., in 1838, where he lived ever afterward. By this marriage he reared three daughters, each of whom married and raised a family of children. At the time of his death there was a numerous progeny; even four great-great-grandchildren. His wife died in 1858. In 1864 he married Mrs. Margarette Myers, who still lives.

He was of Irish descent. His father heard Wesley preach in Ireland. He became a Methodist, and handed down the same faith to his posterity. He was a great worker in Sunday-schools, in prayer meetings, and as an office bearer in the church. He was gifted in song, and frequently led the congregational singing up to his seventy-fifth year. He had many friends and no foes.

His last lucid moments were exceedingly joyous. It was his request expressed beforehand that this writer (who married one of his granddaughters) should conduct his funeral services, and that he should be buried with masonic honors, which request was complied with. We laid him to rest at Lodabar Church, by the side of his Rachel, the mother of his children. May God bless the bereaved wife and daughters and the entire family circle!

HOLDEN—Mrs. MARY HOLDEN (nee Phipps) was born Aug. 24, 1818, and was converted and received into the church at Buffalo Camp Meeting in October, 1843. She became a member of the Methodist Church in Natchez, Miss., by transfer, in the year 1855, under the ministry of Rev. A. T. M. Fly. She died in the faith, Jan. 4, 1894, after an illness of two months' duration. During our meeting here last Fall she was greatly blessed, and after enjoying the services for two weeks she was stricken with partial paralysis the day before the meeting closed, from which she never recovered. During her illness it was my privilege, as her pastor, to visit her often, and I always found her faith strong and her spirit quiet. She soon realized that her days were numbered, and as the time of her translation drew nigh she became more heavenly-minded.

Mrs. Holden was one of the oldest and best members of this church. She was regular in her attendance upon the means of grace, and always in full sympathy with the interests of the kingdom of God. Her brother, Robert Phipps, preceded her to the other world only a few months, having died March 19, 1893. She leaves behind an only sister to mourn her loss, who is another of the oldest members of this church. W. B. LEWIS.

Natchez, Miss.

SNOW—Mrs. DERENDA WHITAKER SNOW, of Hinds county, Miss., was born in Washington, Adams county, Miss., Feb. 12, 1809, and died near Cayuga, Miss., Jan. 3, 1894. She joined the church at ten years of age. She was related to our first missionary to Mississippi, Tobias Gibson. His memory and that of many others of our fathers she cherished as a precious heritage. Many of these toil-worn itinerants have found hospitable entertainment in her home. The early part of her life was spent in Jefferson county, Miss. Forty years ago, or more, she moved with her husband to the southwestern part of Hinds. Here two daughters and a son were reared. These survive and call her memory blessed. She spent many years of widowhood in comparative seclusion; for an affliction of the eyes made it painfully inexpedient for her to travel in the light, and, being far removed from all centers of Methodist population, she had limited communion with the people of her special love. The ubiquitous itinerant occasionally reached this outside rim of his circuit. A great privilege this was esteemed. She died in hope of a blessed immortality.

WIXON—Died, Aug. 14, 1893, at Cary, Miss., FANNIE G. WIXON, youngest child of Mrs. M. A. Wixon, aged eleven years eight months and twenty-three days.

Little Fannie was a dutiful daughter, loving sister and affectionate friend, truthful, conscientious and devotionally inclined, often expressing a desire to join the church and enter upon a Christian life. Even at her tender age she exhibited in a marked degree a knowledge of good and evil, with a strong inclination to the latter. We believe she has gone to the blessed Savior who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." Even in our affliction we feel constrained to say, "Blessed be the name of the Lord!" R. M. B.

WIXON—Died, Sept. 30, 1893, at Duncan, Miss., JOHN B. WIXON, aged twenty-nine years. John was not a member of the church, but died with a smiling face, expressing trust in Christ. R. M. B.

SMITH—Died, Nov. 9, 1893, Mrs. MINNIE I. SMITH, a sister of the above, at Duncan, Miss., aged twenty-seven years, who for several years had lived the life of the righteous, and whose end was like his. Blessed be the name of God for such sweet consolation to the bereaved and broken-hearted mother and family, who have the sincere sympathy of all who know them.

Let not your hearts be grieved, loving mother, sister and brothers. Your loved ones are gone, but not lost; they only precede you a few days to the home of the blessed, where you, through faith in the atoning blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, may join them to part no more forever. R. M. B.

GEDDIE—At the parsonage, Eureka Springs, on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 14, 1894, at 3:30 o'clock, the wife of Rev. D. M. Geddie passed quietly across the river. Her end was peace. Patiently she endured suffering, and with Christian fortitude she walked to the river's brink, where "angel boatmen waited to hear her to that bright, eternal home."

A noble, sweet woman has left us. Let the brethren remember Bro. Geddie at a throne of grace, that in this great affliction he may have strength to bear the cross.

THOMAS B. CLIFFORD.

HUGHES—INA GENOAH HUGHES was born Jan. 2, 1890, and died Oct. 23, 1893. Little Ida was a sprightly child, beloved by all who knew her, and especially was she the pet of her parents. She came to her death by a very sad accident. She caught fire while her parents were out of the house and was burned, so that she died after twelve hours of suffering. She would keep saying, "Love me, mama," unto the last.

Weep not, fond parents; little Ida has gone to him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." HER AUNT.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

Our churches are full of men and women who have been on a spiritual furlough for a long season. If interrogated as to their religious indifference and inactivity, they commence at once to tell a story of neglect, or slight, or something worse, that they have received at the hands of some members of the church; or possibly the minister has not recognized their peculiar gifts and abilities. Usually such statements have no foundation in fact. At the best they furnish no good and sufficient reason why any person should neglect doing work for the Master in his kingdom. "What is that to thee? Follow thou me," is the word of divine obligation which the Lord Jesus would utter to the many persons who seek to justify themselves with such lame excuses.—Zion's Herald.

Mr. P. D. D. Delacroix, Cypremort P. O., La., Nov. 30, 1888, says: "Three years ago an agent representing Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar came into my store. Being busy, was unable to give him any time. Before leaving he gave me a sample bottle of Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, asking me to give it to anyone suffering with a cough or cold. Several days afterward I caught a heavy cold, Remembering the sample, thought I would try it. Six teaspoonfuls cured me. Ordered a supply at once, and have sold it with satisfaction to all. It acts like magic on all my family, and I would not be without it. I take pleasure in recommending it at all times." One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as 50c. bottles.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The State Agricultural Society will hold its annual meeting in Opelousas on Jan. 24, 25 and 26. Gov. Foster will address the society on the "Relation of Louisiana to Agriculture."

The House is making slow progress with the amendments to the Tariff bill. Only one week more remains, and less than twenty amendments to about 1 000 paragraphs have been disposed of.

It seems likely that the State of Mississippi will soon settle the long-discussed convict question by the purchase of a large tract of land to be used as a penitentiary farm. A wise settlement of the question.

Gen. Bradley T. Johnson, of Baltimore, has secured and recently forwarded to Gen. Lord Wolseley, upon his request, a complete set of the official records of the Federal and Confederate armies during the Civil War.

The International Migration Society has been incorporated in Birmingham under the laws of Alabama, with a capital stock of $100,000, by J. L. Daniel and associates. The company proposes to send negroes from the Southern States to Africa.

The report of the Mississippi Institution for the Education of the Deaf and Dumb shows that that admirable public charity is in a prosperous condition, and is doing a good work under the efficient management of Prof. J. R. Dobyns, the superintendent.

The fourth annual dinner in honor of the birthday of Gen. Robert E. Lee was given by the Confederate Veteran Camp of New York, on Jan. 19, in Scottish Rite Hall. On the stage was a life-sized picture of Gen. Lee, while in the background were muskets belonging to the Old Guard.

Gen. E. C. Walthall, United States Senator from Mississippi, has resigned his place. His resignation affects only the present term ending March 4, 1895. Whether he will resign his other term ending March, 1901, is not yet decided. Ill health is assigned as the cause of this very unexpected step. Mississippi is loath to part with so faithful and efficient a public servant.

The delegation representing the Waterways Convention appeared before the Rivers and Harbors Committee in Washington on Jan. 19, and presented their memorial. An interesting fact developed was the statement that Louisiana has about 4 000 miles of navigable waters, and necessarily called for liberal appropriations to improve and maintain this great system.

The Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, at the close of his sermon at the Tabernacle on Jan. 21, made the announcement that he intended to resign from the pastorate of the church, the resignation to go into effect on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of his taking charge of the Tabernacle. The announcement was a surprise to the congregation. Dr. Talmage has recently shown opposition to the scheme of the Board of Trustees to have the congregation to pay ten cents admission to his church.

The bonds which Secretary Carlisle proposes to issue will, without doubt, be taken up with eagerness. It was given out that only $50 000 000 worth would be put out, but already there are demands for vastly more. It is announced from the Treasury that the total offerings for bonds will aggregate nearly $200 000 000, and that the price will reach 120, making the bonds practically bear but 2½ per cent. interest. An effort will be made by the Democrats in the House to prevent this action of the Secretary, on the plea that he has no authority under the law to issue and sell bonds, except such as is conferred upon him by the act approved Jan. 14, 1875. The Knights of Labor also, through their grand master workman, have resolved to apply to the Supreme Court of the United States for an injunction to restrain the Secretary of the Treasury from borrowing the money.

FOREIGN.

The existing industrial and agricultural depression in Germany has greatly aided the socialist propaganda in that country, and the socialist organs are becoming more agressive.

Herr Maximilian Harden, the Bismarckian editor of the Berlin Zukunft, who was recently arrested on the charge of libeling Chancellor von Caprivi, has been found guilty. The court imposed a fine of 600 marks upon him.

Signor Crispi is quoted as saying that he thought the affairs of Sicily were finally settled by the recent mobilization of troops, and they should alarm nobody. Italy, the premier is quoted as claiming, was absolutely peaceful.

The World's Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association, with headquarters at Geneva, Switzerland, have just issued a call for the thirteenth International Conference of the Young Men's Christian Association of all lands, to meet in London on May 31, next. The Conference will continue until June 6.

After four days of continuous fighting the army of President Vasquez, of Honduras, has been completely routed by the revolutionists and their Nicaraguan allies. The allies captured all of Vasquez's artillery and 500 of his men went over to the Bonilla standard. Amapala is in the possession of Bonilla, who will be recognized by San Salvador. Amapala surrendered as soon as the news of Vasquez's utter defeat reached that city.

A year ago two hundred and thirty ladies in St. Andrew's Church, Kingston, Ont., were given one dollar each to turn to the best account and return the proceeds in January, 1894. On Monday night the cash was summed up and the trustees were amazed to have $2 318 placed in their hands.

You can not deny facts, and it is a fact that Salvation Oil is the greatest pain-cure. 25 cents.

PERIODICALS.

A new farce by Mr. W. D. Howells is promised for the February Harper's Magazine. It is called "A Masterpiece of Diplomacy," and its complications ensue from the anxiety of the ever amusing Mrs. Robert, who summons physicians of both the old and new school to attend her supposedly sick son.

Two articles on the late Prof. Tyndall will be among the contents of the February Popular Science Monthly. Under the title "Tyndall and His American Visit," Miss E. A. Youmans describes his lecturing tour in the United States in 1872-73, giving a number of interesting letters hitherto unpublished. In the Editor's Table an estimate of the man and his work will be found.

The "Keeping Everlastingly At It" Calendar, issued by N. W. Ayer & Son, Newspaper Advertising Agents, Philadelphia, for 1894, is a rare combination of beauty and utility—large enough to be seen, handsome enough to be admired and sensible enough to be respected. This is "a World's Fair edition," because of its numerous references to that wonderful event. The price, delivered postpaid to any address, is 25 cents.

The January number of The Pulpit begins a new volume with a new engraved cover, and by reducing its subscription price to one dollar. This number contains complete sermons on "Broad Men at the Narrow Gate," by Rev. J. W. Johnston, D. D.; "The National Distress," by Prof. Swing; "The Church," by Rev J. E. Lanceley; "The Resources of the Godly," by Rev. B. D. Thomas, D. D.; "Divine Liberty," by Rev. F. W. Gunsaulus, D. D., and others of equal interest. One dollar a year; single copies, ten cents. —Edwin Rose, Publisher, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Preacher's Magazine, for January, is the first number of the fourth volume of this excellent homiletical periodical. The leading sermon is entitled "Christian Brotherhood," by William M. Sinclair, Archdeacon of London. The senior editor, Mark Guy Pearse, contributes another chapter on "Moses: His Life and Its Lessons," taking up "The Story of the Golden Calf." Joseph Parker, D. D., writes on "How to Read the Scriptures," and Dr. C. O. Eldridge, "The Key of Experience," or "Pages for Young Preachers." Outlines and sketches of sermons on various subjects are furnished by many distinguished clergymen. There are also excellent articles, by James Stalker, D. D., on "A Young Man's Religion," and "Money," by the Rev. Andrew Murray. Among the other departments are "Notes and Illustrations," the "International Sunday-school Lessons," "Outline Addresses on the Golden Texts," and "About Books." The magazine is published monthly, at $1.50 per year by Wilbur B. Ketcham, 2 Cooper Union, New York City.

Christmas Revival in Macon, Miss.

We continued the meeting from Dec. 24, 1893, preaching twice a day through Christmas week. The Lord blessed every service. Much good was done. So you see we have a good start for the new year. We found this charge in good condition. No man ever did more years more faithful work than my worthy predecessor, J. W. A. H. Mitchell. All these people love him and his good wife. Last Sunday was a glorious day with us. The pulpit was filled by a man whom all Macon loves to honor. The sermon of Rev. S. D. Long was a message of power. The sacrament was a blessing to the church. Bro. Long's health is much improved. He left with his family this morning for their home, Fountain City, Tenn. We hope they will soon return to our Conference. We have learned to love the good people of Macon. The reception they gave us Dec. 15 was good enough for anyone, but it gets better all the time! In all this we see the goodness of the Lord. While we regretted to leave the good people of Aberdeen, whom we had served for four years, we are glad to be in this delightful place. This is a prosperous prohibition town. They are receiving more cotton this season than any year in the history of Macon. We are praying and looking for a successful year in the church. Come to see us.

Our readers will be glad to learn that the fire at the immense establishment of Henry Mosbane Mfg. Co., proprietors of the Mosbane Bell Foundry in Baltimore, Md., did not do any damage to the sweeps and patterns from which these celebrated bells are made, and that the large number of orders now on hand will be promptly filled, also all future orders.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

For Over Fifty Years

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhœa. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

Many brethren have made inquiry for a book to aid them in the practical work of the League. The book that every pastor or Epworth worker needs is "The Epworth League Workers." It gives you the information you want. It is a small book costing sixty cents. It can be had of Laird & Dominick, Jackson, Miss.

Any newspaper, magazine or book can be had from us. LAIRD & DOMINICK,

Philip Werlein,

New Orleans, wants you to write to him if you want to get a good Piano cheap, or an Organ, Music or Musical Instruments. His is the old reliable music store of New Orleans.

DR. S. B. HARTMAN,

President of the Surgical Hotel of Columbus, Ohio, is about to visit New Orleans, La., on important professional business. He will take advantage of the occasion to make a flying trip through Texas in order to see a few of the patients under his treatment in the State. All of his old patients will, doubtless, be glad to learn that they will have an opportunity to see the doctor again. People wishing to consult him for the first time, as well as those who desire to make any inquiry of him concerning his famous institution, the Surgical Hotel, will have an opportunity to do so at the following named places on the dates specified: At the St. Charles Hotel, New Orleans, La., Monday and Tuesday, Feb. 5th and 6th, 1894—At the Capital Hotel, Houston, Tex., Thursday, Feb. 8th—At the Beach Hotel, Galveston, Tex., Saturday and Sunday, Feb. 10th and 11th—At the Menger Hotel, San Antonio, Tex., Tuesday, Feb. 13th—At the Driscoll Hotel, Austin, Tex., Friday, Feb. 16th—At the Pacific Hotel, Waco, Tex., Sunday and Monday, Feb. 18th and 19th—At the Arlington Inn, Fort Worth, Tex., Tuesday, Feb. 20th—At the Oriental Hotel, Dallas, Tex., Thursday, Feb. 22d; and will immediately return to the Surgical Hotel, Columbus, Ohio, where he will arrive on Saturday, Feb. 25.

The doctor will esteem it a favor if as many as possible of those desiring to consult him would call as early in the day as convenient. He may be consulted from eight A. M. to ten P. M. Consultation free.

On Nov. 10, Mr. John D. Rockefeller made another magnificent gift to the Chicago University, this being his fourth donation. It amounts to $500,000, and makes in all his gifts to the university $3 250 000.

One of the daintiest of the New Year calendars is that issued by the proprietors of Hood's Sarsaparilla. It will fully satisfy every expectation as to beauty and utility. "Sweet Sixteen" is the head of a beautiful girl, the lovely picture being lithographed in many delicate colors. The pad harmonizes with the exquisite array of color above, while the dates are easily read. Hood's Calendar may be obtained of your druggist or by sending six cents in stamps for one or ten cents for two, to C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

WHAT IS BEST.

What is best must come to all,
If they trust their Heavenly Guide;
Nothing fear, whate'er befall;
You who watch and wait beside.
Never feel that all is lost;
God is with us through the night;
Falter not, the way will clear,
And morning brings the light.

Though the days are dark with pain,
He can ease the aching heart;
Trust him always, he is near,
As the clouds roll thick and dark.
Would you strive to reach the goal?
Ever battle for the right;
Brace your soul, tho' drear the way,
Fight for truth with all thy might.

Does it matter what we do?
If our hearts with heavenly fire
Are attuned to higher things;
Angel watchers strike the lyre.
Listen! catch the glorious sound,
Sweeter far than evening bells;
Oo the soul the music steals
As above the anthem swells.

Hearken to the voices sweet,
Whispering in the listening ear,
If you strive to do your best,
Angels will be near.
Think of them when sorrows crowd,
They to you will lighter seem,
For the angels told you so,
Softly in your dream.

Can we not be better here,
Knowing that the heavenly throng
Have among its numbers there
Our beloved dead and gone?
And they come to us at night,
While the stars their vigils keep,
Hovering o'er our pillows here,
And watching while we sleep.

Help Those Women.

FEBRUARY 6-11, 1894.

The motto of the Board of Church Extension is: "A church for every congregation and a parsonage for every pastor." The enterprise is large, but inspiring rather than discouraging. In 1890 (we have no later statistics), the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, had 15,017 congregations and 12,637 church edifices, 2,330 foldless flocks, meeting in private houses, halls, school-houses and court-houses. We are now helping to build them church edifices at the rate of more than one each day. May we not hope some day to catch up? God forbid that the church shall ever cease to grow and demand more room; but it is not vain to hope and confidently expect, under his blessing, that the day will surely come when the church will be thoroughly equipped unto this work of providing a sanctuary in every community where he may dwell among his people.

By a fair division of labor the work of providing homes for the itinerants has fallen to the lot of those without whom there would be no homes. The right arm of the Board of Church Extension is the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society, and the devout women composing it are pledged to see that every houseless itinerant preacher shall have a home for his family while engaged in the pastoral work of the church. This undertaking, like the other, is not a Quixotic one, but on the contrary the results already attained are full of promise for the future. There are in the church 4 600 pastoral charges and 3,-015 parsonages. That is to say, two of every three churches are now provided with parsonages. How many of these are due to the impulse given to parsonage building by the Woman's Society? The figures are interesting—indeed, they are startling. In 1886 the parsonage statistics for the first time appear in our Conference Minutes, and the total number then in existence is there reported at 2,030. These figures represent what had been accomplished in this direction in one hundred years of building. In that same year (1886) the women went to work, the parsonage question began to be discussed and pressed upon the attention of the church as never before, and behold, at the end of six brief years the number of parsonages reported advances from 2 030, valued at $2,247,288, to 3,015, valued at $3,-693,436. That is to say, in the first six years following the organization of the Woman's Parsonage work there were built one-half as many parsonages as the church had to show for all its previous century of building.

About one-half of these new buildings received aid directly from the Woman's General and Conference Boards and their local auxiliaries, while the persistence with which they pressed the matter upon the attention of the church undoubtedly suggested and stimulated the building of many of those not directly contributed to by them. I think it clearly demonstrable that to the efforts of these faithful women is due the great activity of the church in this direction since 1886.

Such results would have been gratifying even had all the women of the church been enlisted. They become marvelous when it is considered that while we have fifteen thousand congregations in our church, in less than six thousand of them have auxiliaries of our Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society been organized. Had our preachers everywhere organized these auxiliaries or encouraged the women to do so, the results attained by the small army who have been at work justify the conclusion that there would not now be a homeless pastor in Southern Methodism. Brethren, to the rescue. Help the women who are trying to help you, your wives and your children.

The limits assigned for this article do not permit me to enlarge upon that other phase of the work of this society. I refer to its home mission work. The need of an organization that would correlate the societies already in existence in our church, systematize their work, stimulate others to join them, and direct others into channels that would upbuild our own institutions, the energies of our women who, for the lack of such an organization of our own, were devoting their time and efforts to the work of worthy outside societies, caused the General Conference of 1890 to enlarge their constitution and authorize them to enter the larger field. The results so far have amply vindicated the wisdom of the act. Instead of the society being weakened by diversifying the object to which it is devoted, new life has been infused into the whole movement, and it has gone forward with a bound. The possibilities for good are incalculable.

Help them, brethren, to come up to the measure of their great and holy ambition. DAVID MORTON.

The National League for the Protection of American Institutions.

A PETITION CONCERNING SECTARIAN APPROPRIATIONS FOR INDIAN EDUCATION.

To the Congress of the United States:

The National League for the Protection of American Institutions petitioned both sessions of the LI. and LII. Congresses concerning sectarian appropriations by the national government for Indian education.

The League now addresses the following petition to the LIII. Congress concerning Indian appropriation bills.

The League petitions against the violation of the American principle of the separation of Church and State, which is involved in making any sectarian appropriations for Indian education.

The highest official bodies of the Congregational, the Methodist Episcopal, the Presbyterian and the Protestant Episcopal Churches have determined to withdraw their applications for funds from the United States treasury, because of the principle which they now see is involved in this dangerous practice, and they propose henceforth to support their own schools without government aid.

Whatever deviations from this rule may appear are disclaimed below by the representatives of the various religious bodies, who deny responsibility for such action on the part of unauthorized individuals. These bodies will co-operate with the National League in discountenancing and discontinuing all individual evasions of the American principle for which they contend.

These denominations represent, including membership and adherents, a population of 14,750,000.

This League petitions that the amount thus relinquished by the withdrawal of the denominations mentioned be added to the fund for the common schools among the Indians.

It is without question that the entire community which is not classified by definite connection with any of the existing Christian denominations, numbering, at least, 30 000 000 of the population of the United States, are opposed to the principle of sectarian appropriations.

From information received, this League is also justified in assuming that a considerable portion of the patriotic members and adherents of the churches which have not yet taken explicit official action on the subject are also in favor of the position taken by the denominations above mentioned, and are in favor of their respective churches winning the confidence of the American people through the inherent excellence of their own work, done at their own expense.

Thus it is clear that a vast and preponderating majority of the citizens of the United States are opposed on principle to the national government making any sectarian appropriations.

The League claims that the time has come when the national government should cease entirely from making appropriations for the support of contract Indian schools under sectarian control.

It has been the commendable policy of the government in late years to take upon itself more and more the education of Indian children by the extension of the American common school system as the means of preparing them for citizenship.

The League petitions that the general government now adopt a definite, permanent and uniform principle, in accord with the spirit of the United States Constitution, for advancing education among the Indians on the basis of the American free common school system, in order that the dangers involved in departure from the American principle of keeping separate and distinct the functions of Church and State be no more fostered by any actions of the general government.

H. H. PARSONS, Pres.
JAMES M. KENNY, Gen'l Sec.
New York, January, 1894.

[We cheerfully give place to the above document and bid the movement God-speed. A great battle is to be fought in this country along the line of legislative appropriations to sectarian institutions. Appropriations by Congress in support of sectarian schools among the Indians is only the beginning of a great scheme which looks to the enrichment of a certain church out of the national treasury. Every movement of this sort is contrary to the genius of our government.—EDITOR.]

What Can the Sunday-School Expect from the Home?

BY THE REV. MAURICE G. HANSEN.

The enquiry contemplates a home in the best sense of that comprehensive term. In a general sense a home, according to the lexicographers, is "the dwelling-house; a place, or house, in which one resides." Many homes are nothing more than dormitories and restaurants, and the attachment that is felt for them does not rise above that which the ox has for its crib, the sheep for its fold, the horse for its stall, and the fowl for its roost. There are many homes, too, so constructed and conducted that they gather around them the most delightful associations, inspire the tenderest sentiments, and evoke the liveliest expressions of esteem and affection. But, beyond these two kinds of homes there are those which minister not only to the body, to the mind and the heart, but also to the soul. Such homes are the antitypes of the many-mansioned abode in glory. Not only can it be said of them that on earth there are no places like them, but, doubtless, the poet had them in view when, his devotion soaring to the contemplation of the rest which remaineth for the Lord's people, and of the pleasures which are for them at God's right hand, he sang, "Jerusalem, my happy home; name ever dear to me."

In homes of that order the fear of God prevails and his worship sanctifies them, and all that enters into their activity and influence is in full consonance with these two moulding and directing principles. Now, given a home of this degree of excellence, what can the Sunday-school expect from it? We answer: Three things—Supply, Support, and Co-operation.

1. Supply. The ideal home should furnish the personnel of the Sunday-school in respect to scholars, teachers, and officers. It should be to the parish in which the school is situated what the recruiting station and the academies at West Point and Annapolis are to the country's army and navy. The children of every family belonging to any particular congregation should be sought for the Sunday-school. They should not be permitted to attach themselves at their own sweet will, here, there, and everywhere (which is nowhere), but, under parental authority, they should be sent to the school which is a part of the church with which their parents are associated, and they should be kept there as long as the bond between that church and these parents exists.

It is not even intimated that only the children of ideal homes should be in the Sunday-school of their church. Far from it; but they certainly can be expected to attend it. From such homes, too, the government of that school should be constituted. It has a right to look, if in any direction, to the genuine Christian homes in the church to which it belongs, for its officers, its superintendent, its vice-superintendent, its librarians, its chorister, its organist, its treasurer, its secretary and, particularly and emphatically, its teachers for Bible class, ordinary class, and infant class. It does not augur largely for the spirituality nor the consecration of professedly Christian homes if the Sunday-school, justified in looking to any one of them to recruit the ranks of its officers, should look in vain.

2. Support. Money is required for the Sunday-school, as for every department of church work. In the churches which have a large revenue from the rental of real estate, and in those in which the income derived from the immediate contributions of the parishioners is not embarrassingly fluctuating, and, perhaps, is more than sufficient to cover the running expenses, the Sunday-school is provided for from the common fund. But, as wealth in a church is exceptional, the Sunday-school, in the overwhelming majority of instances, is left to take care of itself financially. This it does, as far as it can, by means of the personal gifts of its members. But, as the aggregate sum of these comes short of the amount required, resort is had to fairs and entertainments which not seldom are of a questionable character.

Now, has not the Sunday-school every reason to look to the Christian families in the church with which it is connected for its adequate support? Why not adopt a system in vogue for the collection of funds for missionary purposes, and have in every home a box labeled "Sunday-school," into which the adults of the Christian family shall deposit a weekly amount, according to ability, and the children be encouraged to drop their mites from the gifts in money they from time to time receive?

3. Co-operation in three particulars.

First, punctuality. Every officer, every teacher, every scholar in their places every Sunday, if possible, and every Sunday on time. As to the adults in the Sunday-school, this promptness should be practiced under a solemn sense of the responsibility in the case; and as to the scholars, especially the younger ones, it should be insisted on in the way of the exercise of a gentle, but, nevertheless, firm parental authority. From which homes, if not the true Christian homes, shall the Sunday-school expect the exhibition of a punctuality upon the observance of which so much of its efficiency depends?

Second, preparation. By this it is meant that due attention be paid to the lessons which are to be the topics of instruction on each Sunday. In this respect there should be a due degree of conscientiousness. Surely, nothing need be said upon the necessity of a teacher being well prepared, by careful and prayerful study, to give instruction, nor of the impropriety—to use an inadequate term—of appearing before a class without such preparation, except for the best of reasons. The preparation which, as to the children, a Sunday-school can expect from a religious home, requires that these children shall give, under parental supervision, during the week preceding any particular Sunday, the proper attention to the lesson which is to be the subject of study on that day. To a conscientious teacher it is surprising, discouraging and annoying, to be told by a scholar, with a good deal of flippancy and unconcern, "Oh, I haven't even looked at the lesson." And truly to the surprise and annoyance is added a righteous indignation when the delinquent scholar is a child in a family which, in the church to which that school belongs, is recognized as a family laying claim to the profession and the practice of the Christian religion.—Intelligencer.

Good or Bad Reading—Which?

BY RICHARD OGAR HOBBS, PH D.

Two young men were executed at Danville, Ill., recently. One of them attributed his downfall to whisky and cheap novels. Liquor blunted his moral sense, and the trashy novel filled his mind with pictures of bloodshed and robbery. Thousands of young men scattered through the land have been ripened for crime by these same things, and their ruin is near at hand. The daily newspapers will tell us who they are in its records of theft and murder. Shall the crop be kept up?

It is a matter of high importance that a close watch be kept as to what the growing mind feeds upon. The shape of the boy's ambitions and the color of his moral character are in his reading. Have a care as to what kind of literature comes into the family circle. Shut the door against vile books and papers. Hunt them out of the house as you would a nest of rattlesnakes. They will poison the souls of the children. The boy who spends his time over the average detective story of the day, and books of that class, is being educated in crime.

The season of the year is at hand when the periodical literature for the home is being chosen. The list is likely to be cut down in most families. Economy is a popular, or at any rate an oft-heard, word just now. Put plainer food on the table, if necessary, that you may put the best papers and magazines in the family. Think of a man spending anywhere from fifty to a hundred dollars a year for tobacco, and not one-tenth as much for good family reading, yet proposing to cut off the religious paper and the high-grade magazine because he can not afford them. The satisfying of his depraved appetite is of more consequence than the growth of his boy's mind and his girl's character. Pinch at every other point before pinching at this.

Put the church paper at the head of your periodical list. It is surely unwise to cut off that paper and leave the family little chance to get in touch with the great enterprises and movements of the church to which they belong. How can they be intelligent church members under such circumstances?

It is especially important that Methodists be informed about their own work. It marches in the van. It does not belong to the reserve corps. It is on the line of battle where that line has been pushed farthest toward the enemy. Its movements must be prompt and steady. Its companies must move together. If it were a body of skirmishers, there might be room for much independent action on the part of each soldier. But this is the van of the army itself, and its success depends upon its unity of action. Each soldier must know something of what his fellows are doing. You must keep posted if you would be a good Methodist in these days. The Methodist Church is moving swiftly along many lines, is undertaking vast enterprises, is attempting heroic things in many parts of the world. Every member should know about these, for at the last they depend upon the membership for success. The denominational paper is a necessity to Methodism. It should be felt to be a necessity in every Methodist home.—Central Methodist.

Is It Courage?

In this age of anarchy and malevolence in politics, and of insubordination and heresies, small and great, in the church, "courage" has become a relative term. It is a question if it does not take more courage to be loyal than to affect the qualities of an insurrectionist or a "scorehead." Certain it is that the loyal man has more chances to fall into the comprehensive commonality of the unknown and unobserved than has the man who affects a grievance and airs it, or the one who discovers that the times are out of joint, and sets about to articulate them after his own model, making thighless, ribless, headless megatherian vertebræ out of what was a whole herd of well-proportioned and useful mammalia. Since one discovers that backbone is everything, one can not help exclaiming, What pity nature did not run to spinal column!

We are writing soberly, and with a wish to do good, and not evil. Our position is that of a spectator, rather than that of a protagonist of any, or a combatant, in whatever sense. We observe a disposition betrayed of late by several contributors to the public prints of the church to sneer at authority, and agitate a sentiment of discontent which had its origin—at least, in so far as any case is known—in experiences of personal inconvenience and the clash of personal opinions. If we have not misread many of these expressions of private judgment, it is thought to be the very sum and soul of courage to boldly put one's grievances into print, and parade them as bills of charges against the whole church. It is also a sure way to notoriety; and as this fact is well known, we are justified, in our own mind, at least, in largely discounting the "courage" of such parade, and in transferring the difference to the account of the men who keep the even tenor of a loyal walk. "The courage of his convictions" is a trite saying, but it is doing extraordinary service just now. Cæsar will not complain if the public measures his courage by the value and sanity of his convictions.

Let neither our motives nor our position be misunderstood. We are championing nobody's interest; neither do we plead for a solitary usage or custom of the church that has become obsolete. There are changes which we would have made, and which, as we have opportunity, we shall assist in bringing about. But it is not an evidence of a high order of courage, as it certainly is not a token of loyalty, to cry like a beadle into the streets the imperfections of your church, and the time-serving meanness of its officials, especially when a truer sort of courage, turned on yourself, would, no doubt, show you that the imperfections against which you cry are in yourself, and that what you seem to hear is the echo of your own voice. To drag your disparaging opinions through the church press may seem a very brave performance to you, but to hundreds of thousands of your co-religionists it seems quite something else. Should you live long enough, and in your case that may involve an indefinite term of years, you will realize what that something is. There is a place where every error in Methodist polity and every mistake in the administration of its laws may be corrected. That is the hitherto just and impartial tribunal of the General Conference. We will take chances with the courage of the Methodist who refers his case to the adjudication of that tribunal; and though it may take little courage to say so, seeing that those who hold to the contrary are accounted superlatively brave, we suspect the sincerity of the men who find it easier, and apparently more agreeable, to advertise the imperfections of their church and its authorities than to give credit to their integrity or honor to their faithfulness.—Pacific Advocate.

An Appeal to the Young People of Mississippi.

Dear Young Friends: Millsaps College needs a large hall for young men of limited means. We must build it. The hall is a necessity. Would it not be a handsome work for the young Mississippians to furnish the agent with money to build this hall? If we can get at the work right we can do it. I want the young Methodists of Mississippi to send me five thousand dollars. Let us go to work in earnest. Let the young people from five to twenty-one years of age send me from fifty cents to one dollar each. Let every church and community be represented. The name and amount will appear in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. May our Father inspire your hearts, dear young friends, to help us build this hall! Let me hear at once from you. Your friend,

I. W. COOPER.
Jackson, Miss.

P. S.—Remember Major Millsaps duplicates every cent you send.

An Urgent Call.

Dear Readers: On the evening of the twentieth instant a fearful storm passed through our little town and destroyed our church. It was a hard struggle for these good people to build two years ago, and will be impossible for them to rebuild without help. Who will help us? Any amount will be thankfully received. Please send to J. B. Cunningham, Zeiglerville, Miss. W. J. FERGUSON,
For the People.

WAIT.

BY WARD STEELE.

When a thought comes to your brain
That would place on life a stain,
Crush it out from heart and mind:
For a purer thought to find,
Wait!

When your lips in haste would speak
Words that show a judgment weak,
Through a passion that would blind,
Or an impulse yet unkind,
Wait!

When a deed you fain would do,
That you might have cause to rue,
Till the shadows flee your mind,
Hands withhold; to calm your mind,
Wait!

Wait to passion all subdue;
Wait for loving thought and true;
Wait till lips breathe tender word,
For deeds by gentle impulse stirred.
Wait!

"Look and Live."

During the wanderings of the Israelites in the wilderness (which was protracted forty years on account of their foolish defection and repeated disobedience) they so flagrantly offended God on one occasion that he sent "fiery serpents" among them, that whoever was bitten by them should die. And many of them did fall victims to their deadly bites. Then the people repented bitterly of their sins, and pleaded earnestly for mercy and relief. And the Lord, in great pity and pardoning mercy, told Moses to make a serpent of brass, and erect it upon a pole in their midst (typical of Christ on the cross), and whosoever was bitten, and would turn and look upon it, should live. And they did so, and were saved from death; and even the serpents must have been destroyed, or removed away from them. And during the Savior's sojourn on earth he was teaching the plan of salvation on a certain occasion, and said: "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man (Christ) be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him (as their Redeemer and Savior) should not perish, but have eternal life." And what have those, bitten by the deadly serpents of sin, to do now to be saved, but to believe that the Savior has redeemed them, repent bitterly of their sins which caused him to shed his blood to save them, and turn and look with the eye of faith upon the Savior dying on the cross in their stead, and through his merits live everlastingly? But they must honestly confess their sins, and truly repent of them, and gratefully accept the pardon thus purchased for them by the blood of Christ shed for the sins of the whole world. And let all the world thank the Lord for such a great salvation, so full of unbounded love for all mankind, and the terms of which are so easy to be complied with. "It is only that you look and live," as the Israelitee did.

Now, as the Israelites had to confess their sins fully, and repent of them truly, and then pledge themselves solemnly to serve God faithfully forever afterwards, before they were saved and delivered from the deadly serpents, so we have likewise to fully confess our sins to God, and repent of them honestly, and earnestly seek forgiveness for and deliverance from them, pledging ourselves at the same time to serve him acceptably forever hereafter by his help, before we can receive pardon and peace from God. Let these facts be not overlooked, nor neglected; they are indispensable terms and conditions. And as the "fiery serpents" were destroyed, so, "if we walk in the light as he (God) is in the light, we have fellowship one with another (we with the Lord), and the blood of Christ Jesus, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." But, as the Israelitee repeatedly violated their pledges of true loyalty and perpetual obedience to God, and perished in the wilderness, so, if we fail to "walk in the light as he is in the light," we lose "fellowship with him, and the blood of Christ Jesus, his Son, ceases to cleanse us from all sin." But, as the Lord, in his great mercy, and forbearance, and goodness, repeatedly forgave the provoking Israelites (during their long-protracted wanderings in that great and terrible wilderness) whenever they fully and truly repented of their sins, so, "if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." For "if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our sins." The law reads, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." But the Savior has suffered the death penalty on the cross for us. "He has paid all the debt we owed" to the violated law, and we have only to accept the atonement, settlement and reconciliation as made. But we must comply implicitly and fully with the terms and conditions of the settlement, reconciliation and atonement (at-one-ment). And we must be in real earnest about this all-important matter, too. No slip-shod or holy-way manners or measures will be accepted by the Almighty. It would be offensive and fatal presumption in anyone to think so even. We must make it the chief business and concern of our lives to live for God, and be thankful for the opportunity afforded us to do so, and not only so, but we must earnestly and persistently "strive" to please him in all things, or we will as certainly fail to reach heaven as did the Israelites to reach Canaan. As they perished in the wilderness because of their defection and disobedience, so will we perish in our sins if we don't "serve God in spirit and in truth" unto the end of life. For, be it recollected, that only two out of that immense host of Israelites ever reached the promised land! And the Savior, when asked, "Are there few to be saved?" said, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate: for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able." Let it be observed the positive command is to "strive to enter in at the strait gate." And it is as positively declared that those who "seek to enter in" otherwise "shall not be able." There is but one way to get into heaven, and that is the Lord's way as laid down in his Word; and that is necessarily the best way that could possibly be devised, for it was planned by infinite wisdom and unbounded love for all mankind. The Israelites, after having had as many manifest demonstrations of God's special favors, long-forbearing love, and yearning desire to save them, became disloyal and served other gods of wood and stone and vile lusts, and were lost—they died and were buried in the wilderness! What stupendous folly on their part! And what awful consequences they suffered! And with their dreadful history before us, how many millions of people are gathering right along in their footsteps to-day, which lead as certain as fate to the same utter ruin and eternal death!

And what makes the folly all the more observed is, that the saving of the soul on the Lord's plan is the surest and best way of securing everything else needed for well-being and happiness in this life even. For the Savior says, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

And who can look with the eye of faith on the blessed Savior, who willingly submitted to be nailed to the cross, and "lifted up" to die in our stead, and hear him say, "Father, forgive them: they know not what they do?"—who can look upon such an affecting scene and not feel the heart melted to tenderness and sorrow, and overwhelmed with grief and repentance for having sinned and necessitated such an awful tragedy? And who can hear our kind heavenly Father, who "so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him (as their Redeemer and Mediator) should not perish, but have everlasting life," pleadingly say, "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else;" and also hear the blessed Savior saying: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavily laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light;" and also hear St. Paul say, "We know all things work together for good to them that love God"—who can listen to these affectionate appeals and precious promises, and many others, and not be moved to gratefully accept this great salvation, and these vast benefits, purchased for them at such a cost, and not unconditionally, implicitly and gratefully submit to be saved and blessed on such easy terms—"look and live," by genuine repentance and true obedience to God?

Moral Evil.

Moral evil or evil in the moral world grows out of man's free agency. Man could not be a free agent and yet not be at liberty to work evil. Physical evil grows out of man's subjection to physical law and his violation of that law. Yet the glory, power and wisdom of God is manifested in either case.

Man could not have been the wonderful being that he is and yet have been deprived of the power to do evil. He could not have been given dominion over the works of God on this earth, and yet have been restrained from doing evil, because such restraint would have destroyed his free agency; would have taken away his intellectual freedom. In fact, there could have been no virtue had there not been along with it the power to act contrary to virtue. The sublimest and loftiest achievements of man grow out of his ability to do evil and his refraining therefrom. As in the instance put in the Bible of one who controls his own tongue being greater than he that taketh a city.

If you take the power from man to commit evil; or, putting it actively, if you take evil from the world, you at once strike down virtue, godliness and even religion itself; you degrade man from the loftiest of created intelligencies to an intellectual nonentity. Such a doctrine would strike at the very being and exist ence of man. This is true. Because man may commit evil by his thoughts. If you take from him this power, then he is no longer a being created in the image of his Creator. He is no longer a rational being. So also, if you take from man the power to sin, to be a sinner, you at the same time deprive him of the power to do good to be a Christian.

Whilst virtue is not simply the absence of vice, it is something more, yet there can be no virtue without the absence of vice, and there can be no active virtue without temptation. Virtue without temptation is simply negative virtue; there can be little merit in it.

There can be no temptation without the power to sin. Nay, even the Savior's triumph over temptation would be deprived of its merit if he had no power to have sinned. It is the overcoming of evil that crowns man with his highest excellence. Hence the Savior says, "I have overcome the world." This is an admission of the power to have failed in overcoming the world, an admission of the fact of temptation, and from the very fact that he did not fail in overcoming the world, causes him to say, "I have overcome the world." It was the struggle and the victory that caused the statement, "I have overcome the world." For if Christ was not tempted, he could not have said, "I have overcome the world." There could be nothing to overcome if there was no temptation.

All virtue consists in acting virtuously; all honor consists in acting honorably, so where there is a lack of virtue or honor, it is because the temptation to evil has been more powerful than the disposition to do good. It is temptation and the yielding to the same that produces evil. Take from man the power to sin, and you put an end to sin; but at the same time you destroy man's free agency. Man is created a free moral agent. This is contained in the declaration, "Choose you this day whom you will serve." Even the angels were subject to this law of free agency, and some "lost their first estate."

Without free agency man becomes a mere machine; his good actions are not deserving of praise; he was elected to do good, if you please.

Man's greatest honor and his very salvation itself depends on his exercising this free agency for good and not for evil. Man is truly good when, like as the Savior, he can say, "I have overcome the world." Man must exercise his free agency for good, if he would be good. And in exercising this free agency for evil he becomes evil, and gives rise to moral evil. So man's free agency is the source, origin and cause of moral evil.

By a similar course of reasoning it can be made to appear that physical evil grows out of man's subjection to physical law and his violation of that law. In either case, the wisdom, power and goodness of God in and through the plan of redemption is made manifest.

LAYMAN OF SEXTUS.

The Question of the Hour.

The question of the hour is whether or not some of our Bishops have been transcending their prerogatives. On one side the charge of usurpation of power has been made—on the other it is denied and the charge bitterly deprecated. Let us have peace! Let us have it, however, by being perfectly honest on both sides.

1. It is true beyond questioning that some of our Bishops have gone beyond their prerogatives. This has been shown to be so in several instances by some of our best and wisest men—the instances and proofs need not be repeated here; and in one instance it was so decided by the college of Bishops.

2. It must be remembered that the mere transcending of prerogative is in no sense a usurpation, much less an act of tyranny. It may occur by mistake or through ignorance and be done with the very purest of motives. Our Bishops are no more infallible than are our Annual Conferences; mistakes have been made and ignorance of law displayed by both. Let us be honest and confess it.

3. It is a fact to be well pondered that the cases of which complaint has been lately made, are cases where Bishops have been guided by usage rather than law. One insists upon appointing a committee of trial, and is rebuked by his colleagues as well as the Conference. Another insists upon dictating to a Board of Missions the allowances to be made to the missions of the Conference, and finds himself at war with the Board. Now, who is more to blame?—the Bishops who followed usage rather than law, or the Conferences which have established these usages and trained our Bishops to observe them? Both of these Bishops were once members of Annual Conferences. These Conferences had trained them from boyhood. They had never known an Annual Conference to appoint a committee of trial, nor a Conference Board of Missions to designate the amounts to be paid to each mission of the Conference, this matter having been relegated by usage to the Bishop's cabinet.

4. Our Bishops have been in the habit of expressing their opinions on the wisdom or unwisdom of various things done or proposed to be done by the Conferences over which they were presiding. This they have a right to do; indeed, it is their duty to do so. They are among our wisest and best men, and they love the church. They should give us the benefit of their wisdom. But if an Annual Conference, as is often the case, mistakes this expression of opinion as a decision of law, is the Bishop to blame? The Conference should weigh these opinions as the opinions of other good and wise men are weighed, and be guided by them or not as in the case of the opinions of others. Sometimes the dignity of the Bishop's position gives undue weight to these expressions of opinion. Some of them have not been as careful in this matter as they should; but the offense is condoned by the fact that a modest man—and all preachers should be modest men—does not presume that an expression of his opinion carries with it such weight.

The whole truth is that both our Bishops and our Conferences have been violating our law. The agitation has been a good thing. I am heartily glad that it has occurred. It has developed this fact. Now, when we meet in Memphis, next May, let our Bishops come up with a good honest, square confession; then let the Conferences through their delegates meet it with a confession equally as square and honest; then let us have a big love-feast over it; and then let the Annual Conferences in glass houses—and individual members thereof—quit throwing stones at the Bishops. Finally, let us all quit violating the law.

H. WALTER FEATHERSTON.

Christian Education of Girls.

Upon the theory, I suppose, that when one enters upon a work he should know all about it, I received a letter, not long since from a brother, saying, "We have heard a great deal about Millsaps College and education for boys within the past year, now give us something on the other side and East Mississippi." The writer further said, "It seems to me that I have seen every brick laid and every foot of ground connected with Millsaps." In this there was no complaint against Millsaps, only a suggestion that the schools for educating the daughters had not received the proper attention. If Mississippi Methodism ever did or had anything worthy of all this writing and talking, it is Millsaps College; coming into existence at a most needy time and taking rank among the first at its very beginning. The good judgment of its founder is no less to be appreciated than his munificence. While we have blushed at the indifference of our 80 000 members in raising the 50 000 dollars (it ought to have been paid within sixty days), we have rejoiced at every contribution in scholarships or otherwise that has been made.

Mississippi Methodism can now boast that she has a college where she can furnish higher Christian education at the lowest figures to the poor boy and the minister's son. May her rejoicing on this ground increase with the years of her institution! The poor we shall have with us always, and many worthy ambitious boys will take advantage of this opportunity in the long future to prepare themselves for usefulness who could not afford a more expensive school. Many a young man will rise up to bless the name of him who made possible to them such advantages. We say, Long live Millsaps College! May her endowment, her enrollment and her influence increase with the years! While we are in full sympathy with every move that is made to cheapen education for boys, we can not understand why the apparent discrimination against the girls of our land. Why a Vanderbilt or a Millsaps for our sons and nothing done for the daughters of our church?

If the observation of the world is correct, we need higher Christian education for our girls as much or more than for our boys. If the mother is to give training and character to the family, if she is to put her stamp upon the civilization of a land, and these are largely in her hands, why not by education prepare her the more thoroughly for this work?

We are told that it is the heathen mother who leads the little feet to the idol's shrine, and there gives it its first lessons in idol worship. Again, we are told that to the Catholic mother is committed largely the teaching of the children in the doctrines and dogmas of that church. And every observant man knows that in this day of push and "hustle" that few fathers take the time necessary to train the children of the home. I think that I am safe in saying that the social, moral, intellectual and religious training of the family is more the work of the mother than the father. If this be the truth, then why lay so great stress upon cheaper and higher education for boys and say so little for our girls?

Looking at the question from the standpoint both of a father and a philanthropist, if I were compelled to make choice between my boys and girls, I should say give the advantage to the daughters.

The argument has been made that the extras in the female college serve as a kind of endowment, but it is not considered by those who make such argument that these branches require specialists and consequently higher salaries than in the literary departments. Moreover, no account is taken of the expensiveness of instruments, repairs, etc., involved. Again, the number of private teachers in these branches have so multiplied that the former prices can not now be maintained.

Lastly, the argument does not help the poor man in the least. The brother who can barely save out of his meager salary enough to meet the board of his daughter, no matter how desirous he may be to give her some of these extras, whereby she may be the better prepared to enter upon the struggle for life, finds himself confronted with a fact that can not be overcome. Today our music class in East Mississippi Female College would number several more were it possible for this expense to be met, and it should include every minister's daughter, at least, were it possible for the president to do so and meet the demands of the department. O, for some liberal soul, some lover of his race, to help us in this matter. As the Greek and Latin are essential to the finished education of the young men, so are the arts essential to the accomplishing of the young women of our land. Yet for the Greek and Latin there is no extra charge, but for everything except the literary curriculum in the girl's school extra charge must be made. Other reasons might be added to these, but we desist.

As to East Mississippi, we would say in brief that we are still at work with a good, competent, conscientious faculty. Our average attendance exceeds one hundred. Our boarding department, I am told, is larger than for some years; but, like too many of our educational institutions, we suffer the embarrassment of a debt, which, though small, prevents that upward movement which we so long to see the institution take. How much good a few thousand dollars would accomplish, and what a burden it would lift off of a struggling institution and set it free to help many needy, worthy girls. Here is a chance for some one to perpetuate a name and do great good. Who will respond?

T. B. HOLLOMAN.

Meridian, Miss., Jan. 22, 1894.

Rev. Thomas W. Castle.

The Rev. Thomas W. Castle has passed from the walks of men to take his place in that innumerable company which no man can number, in the paradise of God. Seventy-three years eleven months and eighteen days measured his mortal life. He was a native of North Carolina, the son of William and Jane Castle; born Dec. 12, 1819. The first twelve years of his life were spent in his native State. We may easily conceive how the elements of his sturdy character grew during those years into forms of activity, integrity and filial obedience, that gave promise of the strong, useful, influential man. In 1831 he moved with his family to Alabama, and the year following to Mississippi, where he settled with his father in a part of Choctaw county, which is now embraced in Webster county. With that section of country and the interests of the State he was identified the rest of his life. His fortune was cast with the industrious pioneers of that interior region, who cleared away the red man's forest, broke the virgin soil for fruitful agriculture, and brought in the customs and institutions of Christian civilization. He filled his place well. Strong in body and mind, and sound in moral character, he grew to manhood with no indefinite views or unmanly aims of life. The old field school and the Methodist itinerant's "brush college" were the sources of his education, and he honored them.

At the age of twenty-three—in 1842—he was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. Two years after that he was licensed to preach, and in 1846 entered the itinerant ministry in the Mississippi Conference. In due course of time he was ordained deacon at Vicksburg by Bishop Robert Paine, and elder at Yazoo City by Bishop William Capers. In this itinerant field he continued to labor until the disasters of war and the needs of his growing family made it appear to be his duty to locate. His industrious energy and good judgment soon made him a successful farmer, while his excellent qualities as a man and his Christian integrity gave him a strong and extended influence amongst all classes in that section of country. As a local preacher, he continued to render valuable service to the church, to whose doctrines and polity he gave a hearty endorsement and support. His home was a Methodist training-school for his children, where they grew up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. The last year of his life was marked by a deeper tone and presence of spiritual power in himself, and a finer earnestness and pathos in his preaching to the people. The day of the Lord will reveal the blessed fruit of this last year's sowing.

While he was a decided Methodist and thoroughly denominational, he was not sectarian, but was liberal and fraternal with all Christians, as he was also kind and neighborly toward all men. What confidence the people had in his personal integrity and his ability to deal with public affairs was shown "in the dark days of reconstruction," when he was twice chosen to represent his county in the Legislature, his second election in 1870 being to the State Senate.

Bro. Castle was twice married. First, on Oct. 28, 1856, to Miss Josephine Cockren, of St. Helena parish, La., who was the mother of his children and his devoted companion during most of his life. Second, on July 19, 1890, to Mrs. L. A. Carr, of Durant, Miss., who has brightened and beautified these last years, and remains to mourn her great loss, and to cherish the memory of his affection and his virtues.

His end came in the twinkling of an eye, without suspicion or warning. Being on a camp hunt with some dear friends, he was sitting on a fallen tree resting from a threesome round in the hunt. A fellow-huntsman mistook his waving white hair, obscured by bushes and weeds, for a wild beast of the forest, and sent the fatal shaft, not dreaming of the sad result—a result that brings unspeakable grief to the young man's devoted heart.

So Thomas W. Castle fell asleep on Nov. 30, 1893. How blessed for him that behind this sudden call he had more than fifty years of faith and hope and love and labor in Christ Jesus our Lord! His bereaved wife and children and grandchildren sorrow, indeed, but not as those who have no hope. They have laid away the precious dust of the venerable good man, but they shall see him again, for those who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ rest on all these bereaved hearts, and the mantle of our brother's faith and fidelity fall upon his sorrowing children! The Lord reigneth; have faith in him.

Church Catechism for A. D. 1901.

What is the Episcopal Methodist Church?

It is the church organized under Mr. John Wesley's direction in 1784.

How are its laws enacted?

By two General Conferences, meeting alternately, having concurrent jurisdiction, each passing upon all measures originated by the other.

Who compose these General Conferences?

Delegates elected by the Annual Conferences composing the two separate districts.

How are the two general districts separated?

By the fortieth parallel of latitude.

Does one General Conference ever refuse to ratify the action of the other?

It so happens occasionally.

What is the result of such failure to ratify?

The measure fails to become a law.

How are important differences adjusted?

By a Conference committee composed of an equal number from each General Conference, who are elected quadrennially by the respective General Conferences.

What were some of the results of the consolidation of the two great Methodist Churches, North and South?

Harmony was restored, feeble churches were strengthened, men ceased to wrangle over the words "North" and "South," and the criticising world was silenced.

But if that Conference committee disagree, would there not be more wrangling than ever?

The Conference committee simply report to their respective Conferences, eliminating the objectionable features of the proposed measure; and if either Conference amends the report, then it goes to the other Conference for ratification or rejection.

What is the difference, if any, between this method and that of the two Houses of Congress?

For all practical purposes there is no difference. All legislative bodies, which are divided into two houses, harmonize differences through conference committees.

"The fools are not all dead yet." One of them has recently published a book entitled, "The Son of Man, by the Son of God." The Son of Man is Jesus of Nazareth. The Son of God is the author himself. We are under obligations to the author for a copy. The inside furnished us with an admirable supply of kindling wood for two successive mornings. The binding is serviceable in our editorial drawer as a receptacle for unreadable manuscripts.

HYGIENE.

Ventilation of Sleeping-Rooms.

The health of the family, whether in city or country, should be a matter of first consideration. How often have we heard people say, when losses and calamities befall them: "Well, one thing at least we can not be too thankful for, and that is, that we are alive and well." No calamity is altogether unbearable on the farm where the children are rugged, enjoy robust health and give promise of vigor and usefulness in the years to come. Nor is there scarce a grief so pitiable as when parents bury their children after they have reached the years of manhood and womanhood, and are thus left alone in the world with no strong arm to lean upon in their declining years.

There is probably no one thing that contributes to the health of the family more than the proper ventilation of the home. Farmers are especially liable to ignore the important facts connected with ventilation in their homes, because during all hours of the day they and their families exercise freely in the open air, and hence are prone to overlook the first principles of ventilation by neglecting to secure that free access of the air in their sleeping-rooms that health absolutely requires. There is, in the minds of many, a prejudice against night air, an inheritance, no doubt, from fathers or grandfathers, who, in their migration westward, lived in a malarial country. It should be remembered, however, that there is no air at night but night air, and that the purest night air is not inside the house, but outside. The soldiers during the late war enjoyed a degree of rugged health, notwithstanding all their hardships and exposures, which we can scarcely comprehend, the main reason being that there was no problem of ventilation for them. They were either in tents or in the open field, and had as free use of pure air at night as in the day time. Our readers have often noticed how rare consumption is in a new country where the houses are poor and need no ventilation, and how rapidly consumption increases when the permanent houses, especially brick, have been erected and where no provision has been made for ventilation, because the builders have not heretofore felt the need of it.

A recent British medical report gives some very interesting facts in this connection as bearing upon the relation between impure air and consumption. Previous to the year 1858 the mortality from consumption in a certain regiment of picked men of excellent physique was at the rate of fourteen per thousand, or about double the rate of civilians of the same age. At that time the air space allowed to each man at night was 331 cubic feet, but with the increase to 600 cubic feet and improvement in ventilation the mortality fell from fourteen per thousand to three. A good many years ago a London physician published a very instructive estimate of the life prospects of London printers. He arranged them in three classes, according to the amount of cubic space allowed in their composing rooms, including in the first class those that had not more than five hundred cubic feet and in the third class those that had over six hundred. In the first class 12½ per cent. showed dangerous symptoms, and in the third class 4 per cent. Our readers who keep cattle under Western farm conditions, which usually involve any amount of ventilation, have little conception of the mortality of milch cows from consumption in the herds kept near the great cities. A milch cow requires from 1,000 to 1,200 cubic feet of air with proper ventilation, and less than this involves the danger, to a greater or less degree, of consumption.

Applying these figures to the sleeping-rooms on farm-houses it will be seen how necessary is the adequate ventilation if farmers are to be spared the grief of carrying their children to untimely graves. A room twelve feet square and eight feet high contains 1,152 cubic feet of air. This is barely enough sleeping accommodation for two persons when properly ventilated. Many of the sleeping-rooms in farm-homes are not more than 8x10, and half stories, instead of full, and generally occupied by two persons. The fear of draughts frequently compels young people to close the windows so that all change of air occurs is that which comes through the cracks. A parent who will come into this room from a short walk in the morning air will detect at once the impurity of the atmosphere inside such a room, and he need not wonder why his children seem to be puny, with little appetite and liable to take cold on every occasion.

We speak of this because we have had a bitter family experience in this line, and for the purpose of pointing out what we regard as one of the causes of this insidious enemy of the human race, consumption. We realize how bitter a thing it is for parents who, having reared their children to young manhood and womanhood, have to follow them to untimely graves, and desire in this to call their attention to a prevalent evil, that of lack of ventilation of the sleeping apartments in the farm-home.—The Homestead.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. Jno. H. Stafford, P. C., Anacoco and South Vernon circuit: "I have just finished one round of my circuit, and am well pleased with it and the people. At the services, held yesterday, were over a dozen who asked for a closer walk with God. The work is much scattered, but not more than the Lord is able to see. God grant us a spiritual year. Pray for us."

Rev. A. T. Bell, Marion circuit, Miss: "Truly the lines have fallen to us in pleasant places. The people here are just as kind as a preacher need wish to serve, and have made us very happy by the affectionate reception they have accorded us. We found a supply of provisions in the parsonage, corn in the crib, and wood outside; and during the first week of the year not a day passed without gifts of some kind being brought in. Bro. Bancroft, my predecessor, is still here, and has rendered me most valuable assistance in many ways; taking me round the circuit in his own buggy, introducing me to the people, and, to use his own expression, 'scorching for me' generally. I desire the prayers of the brethren, that these people, who have such kind hearts, may be richly blessed of the Lord this year, and be led by the Holy Spirit fully into perfection of love, and that the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, may be their portion in this life, and their preparation for the life to come."

Rev. John H. Rogers, P. C., Poplar Creek charge, Kosciusko district, North Mississippi Conference: "At the recent session of the North Mississippi Conference the Bishop and his cabinet, in their wisdom, sent us back to this charge. So we are here in the midst of another year's work. Our people have remembered us very kindly since Conference, and the Presbyterians and Baptists have joined in with them. They have sent us a lot of nice things to eat—just such things as a preacher needs to live on. Our first Quarterly Conference has come and gone; had a good time. Our beloved presiding elder was on hand and preached an excellent sermon. Bro. Mitchell won the hearts of all who heard him. He is proficient, efficient and sufficient. We are working and praying for a good year. What we need is the consecration of time, talent and means. Seeing so much to be done and realizing our weakness, we most earnestly request the prayers of the brethren, that we may be able to do the whole will of God."

Rev. Geo. W. Huff, Vancleave, Miss.: "On the first day of January, 1894, I moved out of the parsonage on the North Wilkinson circuit, and, with tears stealing down my cheeks, I started with wife and two little girls for the Vancleave circuit, a distance of about 230 miles, by overland route. First night we stayed with Bro. Steve Roberts, a brother-in-law, living six miles east of Mississippi Valley railroad. Second night we stopped in Magnolia with my youngest sister, Mrs. W. C. Anderson. Rev. V. V. Boone is her pastor. I trust Bro. Boone will watch carefully over that precious sister. Her father was a Methodist preacher, and her mother was as pure and good, and sweet and gentle, as any mother ever was. Both father and mother are now in heaven, waiting for their children. I trust we are all on the way. Third night we stopped at Tylertown; put up at Sister Connerly's Hotel. I must say I am struck on Tylertown and the people there. Bro. M. J. Miller, pastor of China Grove circuit, lives in Tylertown, and is in favor with his people. A nice new church decorates the place, and we had the pleasure of preaching for Bro. Miller and his people. Bro. Miller seems to be a loving pastor. May God bless him and his dear good people! Well, after seven days of travel on the road, we found ourselves at the comfortable home of Bro. W. K. Ramsey, one of the stewards on Vancleave. Bro. Ramsey is so kind and good, I felt at home right at once. We arrived at the parsonage on Jan. 9. The people received us kindly, and have given us a great many nice things to eat, too numerous to mention here. May God bless this dear people! Our first Quarterly Conference convened Jan. 13, 14. Our beloved presiding elder, Bro. Partridge, was on hand full of the Holy Ghost. His sermons were just grand. Bro. Partridge runs a Quarterly Conference into a kind of camp meeting by preaching both day and night. God blessed his efforts and carried his messages home to all our hearts. On Sunday and Sunday night the Lord was with us in great power. Men and women shouted, and preachers, too, and presiding elder, all of us, praised the Lord. Glory to God for such a meeting! Bro. N. B. Young goes to North Wilkinson. I hope the people will be as kind to him as they were to me during my three years' stay with them. I have many friends on the North Wilkinson circuit and also a dear old aunt and uncle. May the good Lord bless and save them!"

Letter from Texas.

MR. EDITOR: As I read always with the utmost delight the columns of your paper (and precious indeed to me, it having been in my Father's home many years) I feel inclined to contribute to its pages, and while perusing the news from week to week of Methodism and what she is doing in your three Conferences, I am not satisfied to feel that I am a member of your bodies merely in the sense that Methodism is connectional; but, even more—a real member, because within your pales many of my school-mates now hold honorable places in the ministry, and again more tenderly do I desire to be remembered through your columns since my honored father passed a sojourn of twenty-five years active labor in your midst, and a sainted brother and glorified mother died among you whose precious remains rest in your city. Well, time has come and gone, and with it many changes have taken place. I wish to say that I am now passing my second year on trial in the North Texas Conference; am placed as junior preacher on Emory mission under the leadership of Rev. W. T. Harris. (But, Mr. Editor, I am deacon; he is not; so I will have all the marrying to do.) Having left many hearts that were sad at parting with us, we landed ninety-three on Douglas charge and came here a stranger; but our loneliness has been dispelled by the cordial welcome with which these new people have greeted us. So, forgetting those things which are behind, we press toward those which are before, looking for a bright and prosperous year. In Texas we find much variety in everything. We have Campbellism, Adventism and most every other kind of isms. But, socially and otherwise, I am persuaded we have the finest State in the South.

THE CUISINE.

CONDUCTED BY L. A. B.

TO CUT HOT BREAD.—It is a small, tuck-away suggestion to housekeepers that fresh bread may be presentably cut by first heating the blade of the bread knife.

LETTUCE DRESSING (without oil).—One-half pint of cream or rich milk, one-half pint good vinegar (weak), one small tea cup of sugar, three eggs well beaten, a lump of butter size of an egg, one teaspoonful ground mustard, pepper and salt. Mix all together cold, and cook until thick as custard.

ROLLED JELLY CAKE.—One cup of sugar, one tablespoonful of butter, one and a half cup of flour, two-thirds of a cup of milk, one egg, one teaspoonful baking powder sifted with the flour. Bake in a large sheet; when done lay on a clean towel, spread the jelly on, then lift towel gently, and roll the cake upon itself.

WAFER BISCUITS.—Rub a teaspoonful of butter into a pint of sifted flour; add a little salt, and with the white of an egg and a little warm milk, mix into a stiff smooth paste. Beat with a rolling pin for fifteen or twenty minutes; form into little round balls and roll till the size of a saucer. Sprinkle on the pans a little flour and bake with care.

WHIPPED PRUNES.—Wash and soak two cupfuls of prunes; boil them in plenty of water until very soft; mash them through a colander, return them to saucepan, add one-half cup sugar; cook again until it is melted; pour into a dish to cool; when nearly ready to use beat with a fork the whites of two eggs very stiff; whip lightly, but thoroughly into the prunes and serve.—Exchange.

CHICKEN CROQUETTES.—Cut up as much cold chicken as you will need, which, of course, must depend upon the size of the company to be provided for. The white and dark meat can both be used. Chop it up finely, and season with salt, pepper, and celery-seed. Moisten the meat with a little of its own gravy, and form it into oval balls with the fingers; dip them into a well-beaten raw egg, and then roll in bread or cracker-crumbs, and fry in boiling hot lard. Serve on a flat dish, garnishing with lettuce leaves and radishes, or parsley and strips of red beet.—Harper's Bazar.

Thousands of Dollars

Mr. S. G. Derry.

I spent trying to find cure for Salt Rheum which I had 13 years. Physicians said they never saw so severe a case. My legs, back and arms were covered by the humor. I was unable to lie down, could not walk without crutches, and had to have my arms, back and legs bandaged twice a day. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla and soon could see a change. The flesh became healthy, the sores soon healed, the scales fell off, I was able to give up bandages and crutches, and a happy man I was. I took Christian Philanthropy.

Philanthropy is one of the distinguishing characteristics of the Christian religion. Paganism at its best estate is almost wholly destitute of the spirit of benevolence. Paganism reached its high water mark in Greece and Rome during what is usually denominated the "classic period." In vain do we search the annals of these nations for even the semblance of true philanthropy. Public eleemosynary institutions did not then exist. Hospitals, alms-houses, orphan asylums, institutes for the blind and the deaf, homes for the aged poor, all these were things unheard of in all the broad domain of classic paganism. Was a child born blind, or maimed, or helpless in any way? Paganism said, "Throw it into the nearest river, or pond, and thus get rid of it." Did a servant, no matter how faithful, survive the age at which he could be useful to his master? "Expose him," said Paganism, and by this euphemism she meant, "Leave him in the wilderness to perish of hunger or cold, or to be devoured by wild beasts." Did a mother live until the infirmities of age made her a care upon her offspring? "Give her the fate of a superannuated slave," said Pagan civilization. The world-renowned gladiatorial combats furnish another striking illustration of the inhumanity, the utter heartlessness, of Pagan antiquity. Think of thousands of human beings of all ages and ranks being compelled to go into the arena and perish in bloody combat with each other, or with ferocious wild beasts maddened by hunger simply to afford pastime for the populace. These are only a few out of many of the features of ancient Paganism which might be cited to show its utter lack of the spirit of benevolence.

A very different spectacle greets our eyes as we look abroad over the civilized world today. Eleemosynary institutions abound. Hospitals, almshouses, orphans' homes, institutes for the deaf and the blind, asylums for the insane, homes for the aged poor, institutions for the care of all classes of unfortunates, usually well equipped and well sustained, are found everywhere. What has produced this change? Has it been brought about by the march of science? He is blind who thinks so. The steam engine, the telegraph, the telephone, the electric light: what power has any one or all these to regenerate the human heart, to make a cruel nature kind and gentle and loving and self-sacrificing?

Have these things any more power in this direction than had the fine arts in which the ancients equalled, if they did not excel, us moderns—their painting, their sculpture, their architecture, their rhetoric, their poetry, their oratory? Certainly not. With all our boasted progress in the arts and sciences, we would be to-day just as heartless as were the ancients, had not a heart-transforming power come in upon us from without. What is that transforming power? To this question only one answer can be given. To the Christian religion alone the world is indebted for that spirit of philanthropy which forms one of the chief characteristics of our present civilization.

And yet, marvelous as are the results which Christianity has achieved, its transforming work is yet in its incipiency. The church itself has barely begun to realize the extent of its obligations in the way of practical philanthropy. In the religion of Christ philanthropy heads the list of Heaven-approved virtues. Jesus Christ was the very embodiment of benevolence. His mission to earth was a mission of philanthropy. In all he said and in all he did during the whole of his public ministry, he sought not his own happiness, but that of others. "He came, not to be ministered unto, but to minister." "He went about doing good." This is a summation of his entire career. Now, according to the teaching of the Scriptures, this philanthropic spirit of Jesus of Nazareth should be the chief characteristic of his disciples through all ages. "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus, who, being in the form of God," etc., "yet made himself of no reputation," etc. Could language be plainer? The mind of Jesus is to be the mind of his disciples. The same philanthropic spirit that prompted the incarnation of the Son of God is to dwell in the hearts of all his followers. And this is only one passage out of a great multitude in which this truth is taught with equal clearness and force. What means the parable of the Good Samaritan with its closing injunction, "Go thou and do likewise"? It means, if it means anything at all, that active philanthropy—disinterested benevolence—is the cardinal virtue of the Christian religion, the supreme test of loyalty to God. And what mean those supernal scenes that are thrown upon immortal canvass in the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, in which the awards of the Last Day are made to hinge upon the performance or non-performance of deeds of benevolence?

The teachings of the Scriptures on this point are being studied at the present day as never before since the apostolic age. Hence the steady increase in missionary operations and resources. Hence, also, the multiplication of eleemosynary institutions, such as hospitals, alms-houses, orphans' homes, etc. Hence, too, the constant stream of benefactions that is flowing into the coffers of the church for the cause of Christian education. Men are beginning to realize as they have not been wont to do that God has claims upon them in behalf of humanity—that the best way to serve God is by serving man.

The extent of this increase in practical philanthropy can be realized only by those who have special facilities for observation, but that there is such an increase will be universally admitted. Nor this alone. Private keeps pace with public benevolence. In the private walks of life all over Christendom men and women, unknown to fortune and to fame, are day by day attesting their love to God by ministering to the wants of their fellowmen.

But while all this is true, very much remains to be done before the church measures up to the standard prescribed by her divine Lord. Multiplied thousands occupy a place in the church of God who have never imbibed the spirit of the Master. These have money in abundance to spend in needless self-indulgence, but none, or next to none, to put into the Lord's treasury for the cause of Christian education, or for the relief of the poor, or for the evangelization of the world. May God hasten the day when the spirit of the Master shall dwell in all his disciples!

The Criticism of Ministers.

BY BISHOP CHAS. B. GALLOWAY, D. D.

What is the proper function and sphere of legitimate criticism, as applied to ministers of the gospel, is a question of vital concern to the church of Christ. Within certain limits it is wholesome and necessary, but outside of those boundaries it is grievous and vicious. Ministers are called of God, but their immediate authority is from his church. They are, therefore, amenable to the law of the church, and over them a jealous watch care and authority must be exercised. To discount such amenability, and deny such authority, would produce ecclesiastical anarchy, and seriously interrupt the administration of the Holy Spirit. They can not and should not escape condemnation for immorality, or censure for infidelity. The trust committed is too sacred, and the interests involved too momentous, for them not to be held to rigid accountability. A good man desires it, and the unworthy should not be exempt from it. A true minister of Christ, "bent on the glorious toils" to which he has been divinely called, welcomes the closest scrutiny of his life, and the helpful counsels and criticisms of his brethren.

But the opposite must be studiously avoided. Fault-finding is easy. Criticism, though sometimes a duty, may become a habit. When a habit, it is vicious; when a duty, it should be discharged with courage, but in a gentle, Christly spirit. And there may be mistakes as to the duty. It is not always easy to discriminate between one's preferences and obligations—between desire and duty. The operations of mind are subtle and often illusive. Readiness for the fray is not always God's call to battle. One whose hands are fond of war, and whose fingers are accustomed to fight, has little difficulty in finding a providence in his every conflict. Selfish ambitions are not infrequently credited to the promptings of conscience, and mere pride of opinion is supposed to be fidelity to conviction. Eagerness for notoriety can easily recognize a divine appointment to be a defender of the faith. A man's ways must be clean in his own eyes.

I refer not, in this paper, to that prohibition in our General Rules against "speaking evil of magistrates and ministers." That is gross and grievous sin. Nor is reference made to criticism from those outside our own church. Doctrinal differences and variant polities occasion theological and ecclesiastical controversy which can not be avoided. This discussion has to do only with the question as to what extent, in what spirit, and in what way we should animadvert upon the life and official administration of ministers in our own church.

First of all, in pronouncing judgment on a minister, we should be careful as to the spirit which prompts it. The motive must be pure. The purpose of all criticism, whether of pastoral administration or other official act, should be to correct error and never to inflict personal or ecclesiastical injury. Nor, on the other hand, should there be the slightest intimation of a desire to become a champion. To make ecclesiastical merchandise out of a parade of spiritual fidelity is the very exhanstion of iniquity. The spirit of a true, brave defender of the faith is modest. It feels pain when a word of rebuke has to be spoken, when a wound has to be inflicted. It is a reluctant, and not an aggressive spirit; gentle, and not harsh or rash; humble, and never boastful.

The presumption of innocence and purity should be in favor of the minister. A record of fidelity to duty, of long service, and large usefulness, should argue something in his behalf. Positive and convincing evidence should be demanded before anything prejudicial to that life and ministry is accepted and repeated. Few, happily and thankfully, have been the desertions from our ranks, or the traitors to our colors, or the apostasies from our faith. A very small percentage of the multiplied thousands in our ministry for a hundred years and more have proved faithless to sacred trust, while no connectional officer has suffered personal reproach, and no Bishop has ever had a shadow on his good name. The presumption, therefore, is that the man called of God to this function and ministry and approved by the church, is "blameless" until guilt is proven.

Hasty condemnation is only less vicious than malign and persistent assailment. What cruel injustice has been done a good man by ready arraignment on inadequate testimony or idle rumor. So delicate is a minister's reputation, and so eager the gainsaying world to believe evil of the Lord's anointed, that we should be exceedingly cautious lest a hasty criticism, however well meant, should become a slander. Many a pastor has been crippled in efficiency and injured in his appointment by the busy tongue of some Rasey Sniffle, who, all the while, was posing for piety, and only desired "the good of the church." The report is insidiously circulated that a certain brother is not sound on some doctrine, or rides a hobby, or fails to administer discipline, or is too rash in administration, or is too harsh in his preaching, or one of many things, and at once the way is hedged up for him to render the church the best service.

Most criticism should be private. The danger must be great to demand public protest or exposure. We should be quite sure that the matter is of sufficient gravity to occasion open rebuke, else a brother will be injured, his availability seriously affected, and the church sadly grieved. Not every indiscreet utterance or unwise occurrence or injudicious act should be given currency and community comment. He is not the steward of "solid piety," and the officer of Christly spirit, who withholds private, brotherly counsel from a pastor, and rushes into the local papers to criticise his preaching or condemn his pastoral administration. He is not the courageous and true pastor who neglects private labor with an offender, and contents himself with public declamation or newspaper exposure. Pulpit denunciation of sin can not be neglected. The whole counsel of God must be declared. The law must thunder its eternal protest against wickedness in high places and low. But pulpit personalities are to be ever avoided, and public rebuke is no apology for pastoral neglect. Most errors can be corrected by private counsel; few, if any, are arrested by public controversy. Almost any minister, whatever his work in the church, craves the counsels of his brethren, and would gladly amend his methods or administration if shown to be hurtful or unwise. Every preacher, unless lacking in spirituality and divine authority for his work, desires to be most useful—a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. The kindly advice or criticism of a brother is, therefore, respectfully and prayerfully considered. But hasty public arraignment is hurtful—hurtful to the brother criticised, the critic, and the church. It begets often a necessity to make public defense. And this unfortunately encourages a vitiated taste, which disconnts the ministry, and lowers the spiritual tone of the church. The fact that such reading commands eager readers is nothing in its favor. Just now Corbett and Mitchell command more attention, and, if allowed to fight, will have more spectators in Florida than the President and Congress in Washington engaged in tariff discussion, or Hawaiian diplomacy. But they are not, in consequence, rendering the country more patriotic and greatly needed service. In the church of our Lord we should be brethren and not bruisers.—Nashville Advocate.

Millsaps College.

The financial agent for Millsaps College has moved to 452 North Jefferson St., Jackson, Miss. His mission this year is to collect the unpaid endowment notes, secure new notes, and especially to raise money to build a large hall on the campus for the accommodation of boys of limited means. There are about $12,000 of endowment notes unpaid. These notes represent a sacred obligation on the part of signers. Let these obligations be met at once. The agent has met with much success in enlisting the Sunday-schools in behalf of the college. Hazlehurst Sunday-school promised $30; Magnolia Sunday-school, $50; Topisaw Sunday-school, $25, and the First Church, Jackson, Miss., Sunday-school, $100. May this be a glad year in the history of Millsaps College!

The finaucial agent has been cordially received, and the pastors so far have given him a hearty co-operation. The success of Millsaps College is in the hands of the Methodist ministers of the State of Mississippi. If every pastor will enter into the plans as fully as Rev. M. L. Burton, of McComb; Rev. V. V. Boone, of Magnolia; Rev. H. P. Lewis, of Summit, and Rev. A. F. Watkins, Jackson, Miss., there will be a forward movement.

Let every Methodist in Mississippi send the college a contribution during the year 1894. Millsaps College has a glorious future!

In the bonds of Christian education, I. W. COOPER.

Jackson, Miss.

Our College Notes.

It is to be hoped that every friend of Millsaps College who gave a note to the endowment fund will make special effort to pay it. Under the new proposition of Maj. Millsaps, every one is worth twice its face value if paid. If you can not pay in full, though past due, forward as much as possible and ask for time on the balance. About $11,000 of these notes are in the hands of the agent. If met, according to promise, they would be worth to the college $22,000. Surely this is encouragement to all friends of Christian education to make special effort to meet their obligations.

A few days ago a good brother in a distant State, who subscribed $25 four years ago, sent me a postoffice order for the full amount. On yesterday, a brother living in a distant county, being in Jackson, called and paid his second note due more than a year ago. And so there are hundreds, who because of stress of circumstances have been unable heretofore to pay up, I am sure will be glad to do so when they know that every one counts two.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

Jackson, Miss., Jan. 27, 1894.

Rev. Sam Small has bought out the McMasters' printing plant at Oklahoma City, and will run a Democratic paper in that town, in which he proposes to make his future home.—Texas Advocate.

DR. S. B. HARTMAN,

President of the Surgical Hotel of Columbus, Ohio, is about to visit New Orleans, La., on important professional business. He will take advantage of the occasion to make a flying trip through Texas in order to see a few of the patients under his treatment in the State. All of his old patients will, doubtless, be glad to learn that they will have an opportunity to see the doctor again. People wishing to consult him for the first time, as well as those who desire to make any inquiry of him concerning his famous institution, the Surgical Hotel, will have an opportunity to do so at the following named places on the dates specified: At the St. Charles Hotel, New Orleans, La., Monday and Tuesday, Feb. 5th and 6th, 1894—At the Capital Hotel, Houston, Tex., Thursday, Feb. 8th—At the Beach Hotel, Galveston, Tex., Saturday and Sunday, Feb. 10th and 11th—At the Menger Hotel, San Antonio, Tex., Tuesday, Feb. 13th—At the Driscoll Hotel, Austin, Tex., Friday, Feb. 16th—At the Paolfic Hotel, Waco, Tex., Sunday and Monday, Feb. 18th and 19th—At the Arlington Inn, Fort Worth, Tex., Tuesday, Feb. 20th—At the Oriental Hotel, Dallas, Tex., Thursday, Feb. 22d: and will immediately return to the Surgical Hotel, Columbus, Ohio, where he will arrive on Saturday, Feb. 25.

The doctor will esteem it a favor if as many as possible of those desiring to consult him would call as early in the day as convenient. He may be consulted from eight A. M. to ten P. M. Consultation free.

NOTES

The commencement sermon at Millsaps College will be preached, June 10, by Rev. H. C. Morrison, D. D., our Missionary Secretary.

***

The congregation at Louisiana Avenue, on last Sabbath, had the privilege of hearing one of Bishop Keener's very best. Subject, "The healing of the Paralytic."

***

We invite attention to the communication of Rev. J. W. Ferguson in another column. The cause he represents is worthy of the attention of all good people.

***

Let all the Methodists of Mississippi read what is said in this issue by Rev. I. W. Cooper, agent of Millsaps College. No one should refuse to give because he can not give largely. Small contributions from a great number of people will accomplish the desired end.

***

Dr. H. C. Morrison, our Missionary Secretary, occupied the pulpit of Carondelet Street Church, last Sabbath, preaching from the text, "For we are laborers together with God." (I. Cor. iii, 9.) It was an admirable discourse—strong, clear, well arranged and well delivered.

***

The Postoffice Department of the United States Government has served notice on the periodical press of the country that the address of Paul Conrad, formerly of New Orleans, now of Honduras, is not to be advertised. Good for the Postmaster General! That address which has been given so prominently of late in several papers is to all intents and purposes an advertisement of the Louisiana Lottery.

***

Prof. Hamill, of Illinois, will conduct a Sunday-school Institute at Carondelet Street Church on Thursday and Friday of this week. The topics for discussion are: A Study of the Pentateuch, The Management of the Sunday-school, The Importance of Sunday-school Work, A Study of the Life of Christ and the Sunday-school Teacher. All Sunday-schools workers are invited to attend; also all workers in young people's societies.

***

The Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society of the Louisiana Conference will hold a daily meeting next week at Rayne Memorial Church, the services to commence at 1:30 o'clock. Mrs. E. E. Wiley, of Emory, Va., will be present during the entire week. Mrs. Wiley is a woman of marked ability. Those who attend will be pleased and edified. It is desired that delegates shall attend from auxiliaries in all parts of the Conference.

***

The preachers' meeting, last Monday, was remarkably well attended. All ten of the pastors of the city and the presiding elder were present; also Dr. J. B. A. Ahrens, Rev. J. W. McLaurin, Dr. H. C. Morrison, Rev. Mr. Taminosian, the Syrian missionary, and the editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Dr. Morrison favored the brethren with a very interesting talk with regard to the missionary operations of the church. He is, as usual, full of zeal in the great cause. The pastors of the city unanimously resolved to raise their foreign missionary money during the first quarter. We hope their example will be followed by the brethren generally.

Church News.

Our church has 6,000 members in the city of Atlanta, Ga.

Mr. Moody begins evangelistic work in Washington City, Feb. 1.

In the great State of Texas there are about 180,000 members of the M. E. Church, South. In 1882 there were 86,547.

Rev. Dr. I. G. John and Dr. Walter Lambuth, secretaries of our Board of Missions, are in New York City attending a convention of the secretaries of Missionary Boards of the various churches.

It is stated that the largest contribution per member for the work of foreign missions made during the past year by the churches of San Francisco was that by the Chinese Presbyterian Church, which averaged $3.20 per member.—Texas Advocate.

The Rev. Samuel D. Ferguson, missionary Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church at Cape Palmas, Africa, is in Baltimore. He is a native of Charleston, S. C., fifty-one years of age, the only colored member of the Episcopal and House of Bishops in the United States.—Texas Advocate.

Raleigh Advocate: Twenty-three years ago the Methodist Church in Concord, N. C., had a membership of sixty, and was connected with a circuit of seven appointments. Now there are three charges, two of which pay their pastors respectively $1,000, with a combined membership of one thousand or more.

Pacific Methodist Advocate: On Sunday last Bishop Fitzgerald formally dedicated to the service of Almighty God our new Centenary Church in this city. The last dollar of indebtedness has been paid, and the pretty new church stands a monument to the zeal and generosity of our people, who have, indeed, passed through fiery trials in their history.

Since Conference—during the last three months—Dr. John Matthews has, with the assistance of an efficient corps of helpers, gathered together a Sunday-school of over 1,200. It is said that Centenary had a regular old-fashioned "camp meetin'" last Sunday. The old year went out amid the shouts of new-born souls. At the morning service there were 23 conversions; at the regular evening service, 11, and at the watch-meeting, 17—51 in all.—Rev. F. R. Hill's St. Louis Letter in Episcopal Methodist.

North Mississippi Conference Notes.

The Conference Minutes will have been forwarded to the preachers ere this is read by them. Bro. Malone and the secretaries may prepare for dodging, as the usual missiles of criticism will, doubtless, fly thick and swift. But, upon the whole, this is a creditable edition of our "journal"—probably the best one that we have had, and should be read by all our people. It has cost too much money and labor to be carelessly thrown aside in the preacher's study for waste paper or to lie dormant. Let a copy be given to each Sunday-school superintendent, directing his attention specially to those portions relating to his line of work; then to the stewards and others so far as the supply goes. Additional copies can be had of Rev. T. B. Malone or myself, post-paid, for fifteen cents each. The steel portraits of Bishop Hargrove and of "Uncle Joe" Brooks and his wife alone are more than worth the cost of the journal.

Already the revival fire is burning in our bounds. Evangelist McIntosh has held a meeting at Starkville with wonderful results. He is now at Greenwood, whence he will go to Greenville. The Lord speed the good work!

The parsonage at Kosciusko has been sold and a lot purchased on which we hope a new one will be erected ere long.

This writer has been on a round of field work in which he hopes some good has been done. He is now at home by the bedside of a sick wife who has been in bed two weeks. We hope the worst is past, and that she will soon be well again.

Bro. Geddie has the sympathy and prayers of all the brethren in his great bereavement. May he realize the tender care of our heavenly Father for himself and the motherless children!

Publisher's Notes.

We hereby tender our heartiest thanks to the brethren who have been proving their love for the ADVOCATE in a substantial way. One good brother has sent us forty new subscribers. Others have sent in smaller lists, while still others have secured many renewals.

A number of subscribers are still in arrears. We hope all such will remember the golden rule. It takes money to run a paper. Printers can not live on air, and paper and ink are not distributed free just now. Two dollars is a very small sum; but two dollars multiplied by several thousand makes a considerable sum.

Work for All.

There has fallen into our hands a card published by the East End Methodist Church, in Meridian, Miss. At the top the card contains the location of the church and the parsonage. Next the hours of service are given for every church service—prayer meeting, Sunday-school, etc., as well as preaching. Then follows a list of the Board of Stewards. The remainder of the card is occupied with the names and places of residence of the chairmen or superintendents of the eight different departments of work into which the whole church is divided, which are as follows: Strangers, Sick, Poor, Tracts, Literature, Missionary, Sabbath-school and General Visiting. This plan of dividing the whole church into sections, and thus giving every member something to do, strikes us as being worthy of attention on the part of pastors. The great bane of church life at the present day is that there are too many church members who do nothing. To find something for all to do is the great problem of the pastorate. We learn that this plan is working well. We congratulate Bro. Lewis upon his success.

One word more we wish to say. The Committee on Literature, we understand, is charged with the duty of seeing that every family in the church is supplied with a church paper. Other churches we know of might profit by that example. The pastor is often too much occupied with other matters to spend much time in looking after this matter. In such cases a judiciously appointed committee might do work that will be of incalculable value to the church. Let the committee induce all to subscribe for a church paper who are able, and raise a fund to supply those who are not able.

Florence Crittenden Homes.

Reading in the ADVOCATE the article on the "International Christian Workers," which body convened in Atlanta, in November, it was strongly impressed upon my mind that the church, especially in the large cities, is not, as a general thing, coming up to the full measure of its ability.

"How to reach the masses" is a standing topic of conversation and a common theme of the preachers. Building fine churches and going to them in silks and broadcloth, bespangled with jewelry, will not reach them. Passing the masses in the streets with a look of the pharisaical stamp and a secret thanksgiving that we "are not as these" will not reach them. The masses are at our doors, and they are to be saved. They will not come in uninvited, or, even if they would, how would they feel in rags before so much splendor? If we want to reach them, we must go to them. Go to them and tell them the "old, old story," and have places for them to go in where they can see a ray of light shining for them. Make them feel that you care for their bodies as well as their souls. Many such places are already established, but there ought to be more. And rich men will help when they see the work is worthy. There ought to be a "Crittenden Home" in every charge in large cities, and all the members ought to be at work seeking and trying to save the thousands of girls and women that are being lost, eternally lost, at their very doors. Is not this a grand work if we want a field of labor?

Let every church in New Orleans rise and second the motion of Bro. B. H. Catching, of Atlanta, who wrote the article referred to, and "send a pressing invitation to the International Christian Workers" to come in 1895 and begin the glorious work. Or, if it is already begun, this would give it an impetus that would set the State on fire and give the churches a long stride towards the time when "every knee shall bow and every tongue confess" the Lord of lords. Some may think and say they are doing all they can now. What did Jesus do? He "went about doing good," and when a fallen woman was brought to him for judgment, and a whole synagogue full of men with stones in their pockets stood there ready to hurl them at the poor woman, what did he say? "Let him that is without sin throw the first stone." And away the accusers went, stones and all. Did ever sweeter words fall on woman's ear than those from her blessed Savior's lips when he said, "Daughter, go and sin no more"?

Indian Mission.

I have received since last report for the Indian Mission the following amounts: Bro. R. Babington, Franklinton, La., $5; Dr. E. B. Partin, Hickory, Miss., $5; Rev. I. L. Peebles, Enterprise, Miss., $5. Many thanks to the brethren. May God graciously bless them all!

Now, let others do likewise. Let it come, brethren, at a lively rate. Then you can pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth," etc. You do not know, Mr. Editor, how it rejoices me to receive money for this work that lies so near my heart. Thank you for your exhortation. Send on the money, brethren and sisters, until I cry out, "Enough." You need have no fears of sending too much. I will let you know when to stop.

Will not some man or woman of means send me a large contribution? And let everybody send me something. Let us all have an interest in the Indian Mission. Let us wash the blood off our hands and hearts and pocket-book this year by doing our whole duty toward these destitute people.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

BY REV. HENRY H. AHRENS.

Love to God.

LEAGUE PRAYER MEETING TOPIC.

Supreme love to God is the basis of all the commandments and the source of all true and comprehensive obedience. It implies a sovereign preference given to one above all others present or absent: a concentration of all the thoughts and desires in a single object, which a man prefers to all others. The true Christian loves God with all his heart, his life, his strength, his mind. "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him." "Nature says love thyself alone; domestic education says love your family; the nation, love your country; but religion says love God and we will love all things else."

For the benefit of those desiring to organize Epworth Leagues, we publish the names of the presidents and secretaries of the different Leagues in this city, who will be glad to give information as to the plan and working of their respective Leagues:

Felicity Street Epworth League—President, Geo. S. Brown; secretary, Jno. M. Ehlert.

Louisiana Avenue Epworth League—President, Lena Hoover (Miss); secretary, John T. Crehhin.

Parker Chapel Epworth League—President, W. J. Arner (Mrs.); secretary, Addie S. McKnight (Miss).

Moreau Street Epworth League—President, Morris B. DePass; secretary, Louise W. Webster (Miss).

Carondelet Street Epworth League—President, Hy. Carre; secretary, Harry W. Spear.

Craps Street Epworth League—President, Fred Kallenberg; secretary, Elise Ahrens (Miss).

Rayne Memorial—President, Rev. F. N. Parker; secretary, Harry Russ.

The Society of Christian Endeavor of Rayne Memorial Church has been superceded by the Epworth League. Rev. F. N. Parker was unanimously elected president and Bro. Harry Russ, secretary.

Things That "Draw."

Welcoming smiles.

Outstretched hands.

Prayers that are prayers, and not speeches.

Songs that are praises, and not "performances."

Preaching that deals with the love of Christ, rather than with the teachings of modern theology.

A church building where the most comfortable pews are given to the infirm because they need them, rather than to the rich because they can pay well for them.

A church membership made up of persons who are more interested in the souls of men than in their bank accounts, and more devoted to their prayer meeting than to the card-table.

"And I," said Jesus, "if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." The church that will "draw" is not the church that decks and covers Christianity with a variety of tawdry "attractions," but the church that lifts up Christ himself as the greatest of all attractions.—Young People's Standard.

Never give way to sadness. Put on your hat, and go and visit the poor and sick in your neighborhood. Seek out the desolate and distressed; inquire into their wants, and sympathize with, and minister to them. I have often tried it, and have always found it the best medicine for a heavy heart.—John Howard.

La Grippe Book Free.

SENT POST-PAID DURING FEBRUARY—BE QUICK AND GET ONE.

Nearly everybody is having la grippe nowadays, but, what is still more unfortunate, a large per cent. of those who are afflicted with this epidemic instead of getting well, as they ought to, will have chronic catarrh as the result. This is almost invariably the case unless Pe-ru-na is taken as soon as possible after la grippe begins. Everyone who has observed the effect of Pe-ru-na during the last three epidemics of la grippe positively knows that this remedy will cure it permanently. The fact is, however, that a great multitude of people will not take Pe-ru-na, and the foundation for chronic catarrh will be laid. Here, again, Pe-ru-na is the only reliable remedy. Even in cases that the chronic catarrh has affected the lungs and the early stages of catarrhal consumption have been developed Pe-ru-na can be relied upon as a prompt and lasting cure. La grippe and catarrh are at present the two greatest enemies of life in the land. Pe-ru-na is a cure for either.

PARLIAMENTARY TACTICS FOR THE USE OF THE PRESIDING OFFICER AND PUBLIC SPEAKERS. By Harry W. Hoot. The Scientific Publishing Co., New York.

This work is a compilation from the standard authors, such as Jefferson, Roberts, Cushing, etc. It is quite small, consisting of only about fifty pages; and yet small as it is, it is very valuable. It presents in the briefest possible form that which is necessary for the parliamentarian to know. Moreover, it has a marginal index by means of which any item desired may be found instantly. This feature of the work adds greatly to its value. At the very moment when one needs light, the larger manuals often prove of no service because it takes too long to find what is wanted. Here one can find what he needs without turning a page. The work is of a very convenient size for carrying in the pocket. It ought to have and, doubtless, will have a large sale.

Own Your Own Home—Only $60 Per Lot.

$2 Down and $1 Per Week buys a beautiful lot 25x125, east of CHICAGO HEIGHTS, the great manufacturing suburb of Chicago. Sixteen factories, streets paved, stone sidewalks, beautiful shade trees, schools, churches, etc.; no such bargain was ever offered in CHICAGO REALTY. No doubt but these lots will treble in one year. These lots are on the Belt Line, where there are factories now in operation employing 50,000 people; adjoins what is destined to be one of the largest MANUFACTURING CITIES in the WORLD. No filling or grading, all lots are ready for building at once. No expense for sidewalks, street paving, or any special assessments of any kind to purchaser.

After pavements have been completed on lot, will build house thereon, which can be paid for in monthly payments. If the PAST is a guide to the FUTURE, as business men believe, then a few of these lots purchased now, would give you an independent fortune for your old age. Cotton At 16 cts. Per Lb.

SEED FOR TRIAL PURPOSES ONLY.

WE HAVE EVERY SEED IN EXISTENCE.

There is no Money in Cotton at 8c.

There is an active, strong demand for long staples at 16c. Then why not plant it? Your answer is: Because none of the long staples will make enough to the acre to justify planting them even at 16 cts per lb; it is difficult to gin it properly; it is hard to pick out, and lands will not produce staples, and so on.

Inland Sea Island is a long staple cotton in which all objections are removed. It ENORMOUSLY PRODUCTIVE, easily ginned and no trouble to pick out. You can make it with no extra expense or trouble. See what Mr. Jeff Welborn has to say.

NEW BOSTON, TEX., Dec. 5, 1893.
RICHMOND SEED CO.,
Richmond, Va.:

This is to certify that I had "Inland Sea Island" cotton planted in alternate plots with Sea Island, Allison's Silk, Allen's latest improved long staple, Ozier Silk, Southern Hope, and some other varieties of long lint. The Inland Sea Island was a great deal earlier than any of them, and made one-third more lint per plot (of same size) than any, and double as much as any save one variety (Ozier Silk). While the lint was no longer than the Allen, it was much finer, softer and richer-colored than it or any except Sea Island and Allison's Silk, but it made four times as much per plot as either of these two. * * * I think your Inland Sea Island a big jump forward in the long lint business, because of its Earliness and Prolificness * * *

Very truly, JEFF WELBORN.

No Seed for Sale until next season save a limited number of packets, which we send out for trial purposes. Will positively refuse to sell seed any other way this season. Space forbids our saying more here, but write us for full information.

Packets 25 cts. by mail, 3 for 60 cts., 6 for $1.

Seeds! World's Fair Medal & Diploma.

My exhibit of Seeds and Garden Vegetables was awarded several Premiums and a Special Diploma by Piedmont Exposition Judges in 1891. Encouraged by this success, I sent a collection of seeds to the World's Fair, and was awarded Medal and Diploma for best collection there. This is high endorsement, for the seed met in competition those great seed houses of this country, but mine got there beautifully. I have had experience with the various seeds offered the farmers, and my judgment says the collection below is the best. The collection is a choice selection of Garden Vegetable Seeds, and is gotten up with the idea of establishing a seed business: 28 papers (extra large) of choice Vegetable Seed; 1 package containing 200 Annuals (Flower); 1 package of my Cotton, "King's Improved," 1 package of my Corn, "King's Improved"—all postpaid for $1. THE PRICE OF A DRINK.

Five cents a glass! Does anyone think
That is really the price of drink?
Five cents a glass, I hear you say,
That isn't very much to pay.
Ah, no indeed, it's a very small sum,
That is passing one 'twixt finger and thumb,
And if that was all that was given away
It wouldn't be very much to pay.

The price of a drink? Let that one tell
Who sits to-night in a murderer's cell,
And feels within him the fires of hell;
Honor and virtue, love and truth,
All the glory and pride of youth,
Hopes of manhood, the wreath of fame,
High endeavor and noble aim,
These are the treasures thrown away
As the price of drink from day to day.

Five cents a glass! How Satan laughed
As over the bar the young man quaffed
The headed liquor, for well he knew
The terrible work that drink would do;
And before morning the victim lay
With his life blood ebbing quickly away—
That was the price he paid, alas!
For the pleasure of drinking a social glass.

The price of a drink would you like to know
What some are willing to pay for it? Go
To that wretched tenement over there
With its dingy windows and broken hair,
Where foul disease like a vampire crawls
With outstretched wings o'er its mouldy walls.

There poverty sits with her hungry brood,
Wild-eyed and haggard for want of food;
There shame in a corner crouches low;
There violence deals the cruel blow;
The innocent ones are thus acursed
To pay the price of another's thirst.

Five cents a glass! If that were all
The sacrifice would indeed be small;
But the money's worth is the least amount
That's paid, and whoever shall keep account
Will find the terrible waste and blight,
That follows this ruinous appetite.

—Messenger.

Reading in the Home.

BY A. J BILL.

The children have their school books, and should have plenty of them. To carefully master these may occupy part of their evenings and mornings at home during the school months. These studies are entitled to first place, but they are only texts, outlines, principles. Their limits are too narrow for even the little folks.

The literature of the day contains many bright things and bits of life that require no study, and that are a delight to read. Our land is strewn with papers, magazines and books suited to all ages and tastes. The smallest fellow can find his words and pictures in richly colored leaflets, and is doubly interested in them there. The youngest reader is provided with matter and type to suit his comprehension. Presses are running night and day to furnish tons of literature for youth and adult. We may gratify every curiosity or ambition to know, may cultivate the acquaintance of the men and women who are molding the world, may visit every land and clime through the products of the press. There are special lines of publication corresponding to every grade and supplementing every study in school; entertaining and instructive books and papers. They cost but little. These rare bits of history, heroism, sunshine and fun are relished as well as similar selections in school, and are none the less valuable because gleaned voluntarily for the good things in them.

It is wrong to make work of all the child's reading. There should be some reading for pleasure without any duty in it. School reading is not a success until there is a thirst for something beyond, and the ability to gather pleasurable thought from other pages. Where there is no desire for fireside stories and glimpses of the real world, the old and beautiful in nature, and the struggle of boys and girls in other lands and other days, it must be because the reading ability is very deficient or because this literature is not found on the center table or in the family bookcase. Or it may be because no interested or appreciative parent or friend helps unravel these precious mysteries of thought and enjoys their beauty and delights with the young people.

It seems a sorry economy to deprive the children of the literature they can read, and yet it is done in many well-to-do homes, without a thought of its effect in after years. No one who has acquired a taste for healthy reading would forfeit his access to the best and highest thoughts and doings on the stage of life for any consideration. But how doe the youth to have this new world opened to them except by early placing its tempting pages within reach and letting their love of good reading grow? This taste is rarely acquired after the habits of life are fixed. The bookless home will send out the narrow, opinionated, bookless man, ill equipped to win his way in an age of culture and progress. There need be no great outlay of money if money is not plentiful. The proper selection and the fullest use of what is bought, will give double the benefit of indiscriminate buying. Besides there are now many libraries and reading circles where one can secure ten times the worth of his money; while some societies and interested individuals are glad to feed an appetite for good literature without any return. Self-denial in other lines to cultivate the thirst for knowledge will be richly rewarded. Its importance prompts the earnest attention of every parent or guardian of youth. Our strong and talented friends may remove beyond our reach, but in the realms of literature we may always consult the greatest and best, at any time, upon any theme. How essential as well as how easy to gain a taste for their society!

To be sure home reading can be abused. It can be allowed to interfere with home work and school duties, it can embrace a worthless and worse than worthless literature, but not necessarily so, else we would better not learn to read at all. Its possible abuses are no more an excuse for its neglect than are the abuses of which any talent or acquirement are susceptible a reason for not cultivating such talent or acquirement. Indiscriminate reading should be avoided. The matter should be pure and healthful in sentiment, true to life and illustrative of the best in man and nature. That which suggests impropriety or pays tribute to vice, which is merely sensational or gives false views of life, is positively injurious.

When is a better time to guide the literary taste than when older people can select the material and control the reader? But this control must not be made to serve a narrow end or the project will be a failure. The individual mind with its peculiar taste and curiosity must find something it likes or come to like something it finds, or it will never read with pleasure or approval. The field is broad enough to give liberty here and yet keep within the bounds of pure, healthy literature. It would be an odd boy or girl for whom no acceptable reading could be found if the older members of the family were really interested about it and in frank sympathy with the boy or girl. To thrust grown up reading or distasteful matter upon the budding mind is to destroy the charm of reading and close the way to a strong and healthy appetite for it. The literature must increase as the call for it increases and may follow the direction of the call within the bounds of ability and normal desire. The reading should be food, both wholesome and delicious, and not medicine.

Good reading gives employment and promotes quiet in the home, and is a great safe-guard against the follies and improprieties of life; it gives broader knowledge, higher inspiration, and refinements of thought, speech and conduct. It goes far towards solving the difficult problem of how to make home so attractive that the boys will seek their entertainment there in preference to spending their evenings abroad and in questionable company.

The older people may find it as interesting and helpful as the young. The weary cares of home and children, the irritations of the day, the smothered fires that burn at the hearts of men and women, and even the wolf of want may be soothed and subdued. Our narrow and monotonous, if not morbid, round of thought is broken, rested, extended, and we find ourselves not suffering alone, but amid a throng who have traversed harder roads than ours, and whose victories cheer our complaints and lend new strength for the conflict.

By all means let there be books and papers at home, and a hearty participation by all in the good things they contain. It is an education in itself, one of the easiest and greatest.—Central Advocate.

DAY-DREAMS.

BY ANNIE M. LIBBY.

While the slighted grammar unopened lay,
The little maid dreamed of a fairy clue,
A magic thread that led far and away
The deep, tangled maze of the forest through:

"Oh! I wish they were things to do to-day,
Queer riddles to solve, great prizes to gain,
Enchantments to break, magicians to slay,
And that I, a queen, on a throne might reign!

"But the puzzles are lost, the queens are dead,
And there's nothing to do," she sighed and said.

A little lad leaned on his hoe that morn,
And longed for a horse and a furnished shield,
To ride away from the pumpkins and corn,
To the tourney's lists on the tented field:

"O! I wish there were things to do to-day,
Great dragons to kill and battles to fight;
I would break a lance in the fiercest fray,
I would fling a glove at the proudest knight.

"But honor is lost and glory has fled,
And there's nothing to do," he sighed and said.

And the poor little maiden never knew
That knowledge was ready to crown her queen,
And the clue that led his babyhood through
Lay hidden the leaves of her book between.

And the little lad never even guessed
That the dragon Sloth conquered him that day,
While he lightly dreamed of some idle quest,
And his unused hoe in the young corn lay.

But honor and fame passed the dreamers by,
And crowned brave Toil, who found no time to sigh.

Happy Homes.

Why are there so few homes where there is complete harmony and constant sunshine? Why is it so rare a thing to find families where hearts are at rest, brows unclouded, and tongues oiled with gentleness and joy as the merry months glide by? Why has the lamp of love gone out on so many family altars? Why has the reality of wedded life fallen so far below what was expected and pictured?—How has it come about that so many married people are in what is not too harshly designated as a chronic state of dissatisfaction with each other?

We speak not now of those sad, sad places where the drink-fiend has stolen in to ravage or destroy, or where some other form of open sin readily accounts for the lack of peace. In very many Christian homes where the heads of the household maintain a fairly consistent outward walk there is not the settled habitual happiness that might be expected, and is certainly to be desired. Why is it?

Selfishness and thoughtlessness are the two words that destroy the beauty and vitality of the housetree. Perhaps more than anything else it is just lack of thought and consideration, lack of little courtesies and manifestations of affection. Happiness is a mosaic made up of little stones. Trifles constitute it, and trifles can destroy it. The delicate plant of household harmony and love can be broken by much smaller matters than blows and oaths. It is not enough that the husband is a good provider, and furnishes the family enough of the necessities of physical life. It is not enough that the wife is reasonably economical and indefatigable in toil. Much more than this on both sides is needed. Love seeks ever to express itself, and longs for a similar return of expression. This is perfectly understood and acted upon in the days of courtship. Why should it not be in the days that follow? Is it not of quite as much importance to retain as to obtain? Should there not be an increase rather than a diminution of attention and care after those solemn vows are said which never can be unsaid, but are too often forgotten?

It is undoubtedly true that in a multitude of cases home happiness is wrecked by mere heedlessness. How richly it pays to take pains in these small matters that make up the sum of daily intercourse and common life! We make no question but that most people are much too sparing of commendation and encouragement. All of us need such pleasant words of cheer. It will not spoil the wife if she be praised occasionally, and told what a prize she has proved to be; it will fill her soul with song and sunshine and lighten all her labors. Nor will it hurt the husband at all if he is made to understand that he is the very best husband in all the wide world. It will make him ashamed not to live up to so inspiring an ideal. What a mistake it is to wait until our dear ones are dead before we seem to find out what they are worth to us, and to tell everybody else their good qualities sooner than we tell them! It is a mistake, also, to presume too much upon affection, as if it were an exhaustless reservoir. It requires perpetual renewal, and by the same means as those which were used to fill it in the beginning. It is of primary importance for the constituting or the continuing of a happy home that there be a multiplicity of those little delicate attentions which spring so naturally from a "thoughtful love by constant watching wise."

Have we uttered truisms? Perhaps so. Yet who of us does not need some gentle reminder along these lines? And young couples, especially, just setting out together on the journey of life, might save themselves much misery and a thousand unavailing regrets would they but lay to heart these hints. They can thus keep the cold chill of indifference from creeping over their hearth-stone. Even they who have already made the mistake here mentioned may surely turn over a new leaf, have an earnest season of prayer together, and resolve that a different order of things shall henceforth rule in their home.—Rev. James Mudge, D. D., in Zion's Herald.

Girls in Business.

Here is a bit of advice given by Miss Phelps, in the St. Nicholas, to girls who expect to do something towards self support:

But, girls, if you don't mean to make a thorough business of the occupation you have chosen, never, never, never begin to be occupied at all.

Half-finished work will do for amateurs. It will never answer for professionals. The bracket you are sawing for a New Year's present can hang a little crooked on its screws, and you will be forgiven for the love's sake found therein by the dear hearts to which you offer it; but the trinket carved for sale in the Sorrento rooms must be cut as true as a rose leaf. You can be a little shaky as to your German declensions in the Schiller club, which you join, so enthusiastically after leaving school, and no great harm ever come of it; but teach Schiller for a living, and for each dative case forgotten you are so much money out of pocket.

People who pay for a thing demand thorough workmanship or none. To offer incomplete work for complete market price is to be either a cheat or a beggar. The terrible grinding laws of supply and demand, pay and receive, give and get, give no quarter to shilly-shally labor. The excellence of your intentions is nothing to the point. The stress of your poverty has not the slightest connection with the case. An editor will never pay you for your poem because you wish to help your mother. No customer will buy her best bonnet or her wheat flour of you because you are unable to pay your rent. When you have entered the world of trade you have entered a world where tenderness and charity and personal interest are foreign relations. Not "for friendship's sake," nor "for pity's sake," nor "for chivalry's sake," runs the great rallying cry of this great world—but only "for value received."

It is with sorrow and shame, but yet with hope and courage, that I write it: there is reason for the extensive complaint made by men that women do not work thoroughly. I am afraid that, till time and trouble shall have taught them better, they will not. Is it because they have never been trained? Is it because they expect to be married? That it is not in the least because they can not, we know; for we know that some of the most magnificently accurate work in the world has been done by women.

Instead of patiently mastering all the details of some regular business from the ground floor up, the boy hastens into an agency or a clerkship where his first year's labor is as valuable as any succeeding year is likely to be, and where there is no prospect of growth and promotion. The first results are more brilliant than the apprentice can boast, but in the long run the business is almost sure to prove unreliable. It wastes the best years of a man's life, and then leaves him without an occupation and lacking the skill which alone can give his work permanent value.—Springfield Union.

You would like the lamp-chimneys that do not amuse themselves by popping at inconvenient times, wouldn't you?

A chimney ought not to break any more than a tumbler. A tumbler breaks when it tumbles.

Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass"—they don't break from heat, not one in a hundred; a chimney lasts for years sometimes.

OBITUARIES.

We publish obituaries of 300 words free of charge; for all over this, one cent per word must be sent. If you want the notice to appear in its order, comply with this rule. Count the words and send one cent for each word over 300. Poetry excluded from this column.

MORELAND—WILLIAM FLETCHER MORELAND, the subject of this obituary sketch, was born in Putnam county, Ga., Sept. 26 1816, and died of la g ippe at his residence, Claiborne parish, La., Jan. 17. 1894. He was the seventh and latest survivor of eleven children born to Isaac and Nancy Turner Moreland. Isaac was born and reared in Dinwiddie county, Va. The grandfather of Wm. F., Thomas Moreland, lived near and owned a portion of the land where Petersburg now stands.

Mr. Moreland was of gentle blood and sprang from strong English stock. His opportunities in early life were quite limited, but, gifted with a strong mind, he read much and analyzed his readings until his mind was the storehouse of much knowledge. To his store of information was added the happy faculty of splendid conversational powers, and he was always sure to have attentive listeners. He was self-made, in that when a lad of fourteen he began life for himself. He at once displayed a diligence and method in business affairs which soon won for him places of honor and trust in the business world, and gave an earnest of a bright future for the young man. From his early boyhood to the last days of his life his known reputation was such that he was a trusted leader in all the affairs of life in which he moved, as husband, father, neighbor and friend. In Church and State his exalted love and dignified honor gave him a place in the hearts of the people. To those from whom he differed he was tolerant and courteous, and won and held their admiration and respect.

He was twice married—his first wife being Miss Susan Ferrell, daughter of Bennett Ferrell, of Jackson county, Fla., who died in Macon county, Ala., in 1819. In January, 1832, he was again married to Miss Elisabeth White, daughter of James White, of Sumpter county, Ga. From this union came six children—Sydney T., now professor of physics in Washington and Lee University; Isaac N., William W., F. Kate, Ida S., and Lela M., now Mrs. J. G. Meadows of Columbia, Tenn.

Mr Moreland came to Louisiana in 1853, and located, where he died. During the forty-one years of his residence here he was usefully and honorably identified with all that pertained to the interests and development of his parish and State, having served several terms in the State Legislature—the last of which was in 1879, when he was elected as a member to the Constitutional Convention. He did not aspire to politics; he was no trickster, no truckler, and utterly abhorred both. But his true place—the place he loved above every other on the earth—was the church of God. Mr. Moreland had been an earnest, helpful official in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for more than fifty years. He was always on hand, always to be depended on in his church, and where his child-like faith and perfect trust that "the blood of Jesus cleanseth from all sin" won for him the warmest place in the hearts of his brethren and colaborers in the vineyard of the Lord.

"Blessings brighten as they take their flight," and the writer of this—his family physician for more than thirty years, his warmest neighbor for more than twenty-five years, his brother in the church for many years, a friend and helper in all emergencies—ah! how keenly shall we miss his genial presence in the places where we have known him best, and the perplexing question will not "down"—Where, when and who can take his place? Then we say, God is able to raise up one upon whom the spotless mantle of our dear friend and brother shall fall.

He died as he had lived. From his sick-bed, not three hours before his death, his heart was fixed on his Redeemer, pleading for the redemption of the sons of man, and I thought of the parallel of himself and the great preacher, Paul (he surely was thinking as Paul): "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

JOHN E. MEADOWS.

WEST—WILLIAM A. WEST was born in Lexington, Miss., 1841, and died at his residence in Oxford, Dec. 28, 1893. He filled ably and honorably a number of important positions in life, viz: Sheriff of Lafayette county, cashier of the Bank of Oxford, merchant in St. Louis, Mo.; chief inspector of postoffices during Cleveland's first administration, and cashier of the Merchants and Farmers' Bank of Oxford, which position he occupied at the time of his death. As a man, as a citizen as a banker, as a public officer, he commanded unqualified respect and esteem for his frankness, honesty, fairness and ability. It is not too much to say that he was one of the most useful citizens who ever lived in Oxford. He was twice married: First to Miss Emily Beall, who was a devoted wife. She died in 1873. In 1876 he was happily married to Miss Linda, the accomplished daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Henry Branham, and the granddaughter of Judge Longstreet. Their home was a lovely one—the abode of confidence and conjugal and filial love. The devotion between him and his wife and children was beautiful. Mrs. West and their two lovely daughters survive him.

As a Christian he was devoted to duty. He was for years one of our most useful stewards and the treasurer of the church. He died calmly and courageously, meeting death without trepidation. He said: "I am ready. I have done my duty." R. W. JONES.

SISLOFF—Died at her home, near Greenwood, on Dec. 23 1893, Mrs. JANE SISLOFF, aged seventy-three years. Her husband had died only two months before. She often said, "Why was he taken, and I left?" But not long, old friend, were you left sorrowing.

She was a member of the Methodist Church. In the old days, when Greenwood was less prosperous and the preacher had only a rented house, when the salary was smaller, then Aunt Jane was a friend to the preacher and his family, and many a bucket and basket went to help their store. For half a century she was a friend, a helper to many of the people of Greenwood, and, although the greater number of those who were the recipients of her kindness have passed on before, there are those left who, having often partaken of the hospitality of the kind old couple and felt the kindness and disinterested friendship of Aunt Jane to them and theirs, will feel deeply her loss. In all her dealings she "aimed to be just, and, if in any case she failed, it was an error not of intention, but of temperament."

On that Sabbath day, when we laid her to rest among her loved ones, we left a friend with "the dear God who made and loveth all."

M.

MULLEN—The dark-winged angel of death visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. N. R. Mullen, of Carroll county, Miss., on Dec 21, 1893, and took from their fond embrace their daughter NELLIE, who had been an idol of the household from infancy. She was born on Oct. 13, 1870, and had been a member of the Methodist Church for a number of years.

With her life's battle is over. Our Father arranged her life and her death. Weep not, dear parents; the Good Shepherd has only removed our loved one from the blighting climes of earth to dwell forever in the paradise above, where you can some day meet her. May the God of infinite love and wisdom comfort the sorrow-stricken husband and enable him to meet his precious wife in the glory-land! May her two little ones, who are left in this cold world without a mother, be reared to lives of usefulness, and at last be gathered into our Father's house of many mansions, to dwell with their sainted mother forever!

LATTIE HOWARD.

BWAYZE—Died at his home, Dec. 26, 1893, Mr RICHARD BWAYZE, one of the oldest residents of Swayze Neighborhood, being in his eighty-fourth year. Though feeble in health, he died suddenly, only confined in bed about two days. He made no public demonstrations of religion, but a great change was perceptible in the latter years of his life. He was particularly honest and upright in his dealings with his fellowmen, a kind husband and father.

The writer of this article knew him long and loved him well. He read only his Bible and newspapers the last year or two of his life. Farewell, dear uncle; and when the last trumpet shall sound may your anthems of praise be numbered with the blest, for God alone can judge the deepest recesses of the heart. The purest and greatest sympathy of my heart goes out for his aged companion, who was, as it were, my mother, having watched over me when left motherless at a tender age.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

Men give me some credit for genius. All the genius I have lies in this: When I have a subject in hand, I study it profoundly. Day and night it is before me. I explore it in all its bearings. My mind becomes pervaded with it. Then the effort which I make the people are pleased to call the fruit of genius. It is the fruit of labor and thought.—Alexander Hamilton.

For over fifty years Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has cured coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, throat and lung affections. It is the regular prescription of a physician of extensive practice, who, after prescribing it for twenty years, was induced by the gratifying results to make it a proprietary medicine. Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar soon became known as the best remedy for all throat and lung troubles. Why? Because it has merit and will cure. A. C. Haffelfinger, Philadelphia, says: "I know a man suffering with his lungs who was in the hospital a year without benefit. I induced him to take Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and to-day he is well. I know it saved his life." Try it.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Bishop Foster, of the Methodist Church, has just returned from a trip among the Conferences of Japan and China. Bishop Foster started on the trip last May, and since that time has traveled 23 000 miles without the slightest mishap.

The Wilson tariff bill has been fully discussed by the House of Representatives in Committee of the Whole, and, after having been subjected to every influence that could be brought to bear to amend it, now stands in a form vastly more objectionable than when it was first proposed.

Pressure is being brought to bear on the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage to withdraw his resignation as pastor of the Brooklyn Tabernacle. Dr. Talmage says that he will persevere in his intention, but will not sever his connection with Brooklyn, and that he has no intention of accepting the call to Chicago.

While it is plain that the outlook for favorable sugar legislation is gloomy, there is no reason to suppose that the case is hopeless. In fact, there are good and solid grounds for the belief that sugar will eventually be provided for in the tariff bill or else no tariff legislation at all in this Congress will go on the statute books.

The California Midwinter International Exposition was formally opened on Jan. 27. Great preparations had been made for the event, and the fact that Gov. Markham issued a proclamation declaring a holiday caused a general suspension of business in San Francisco and in the most important places throughout the State, and added to the importance of the celebration.

On St. Charles avenue, opposite the Exposition Grounds, there is a vast tract of land which was acquired by purchase, not long since, by the Board of Directors of Tulane University. That institution of learning will be transferred from its old location on University Place (formerly Dryades street), to this place. The first stone of the circle of new buildings was put in place on Jan. 27.

The appropriation bills for pensions and for the District of Columbia were reported to the House on Jan. 27 by the Committee on Appropriations. There were no surprises in the recommendations, although material reductions from the expenditures of last year were made in both bills. The total amount recommended for pension expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30 1895, is $151 581,570; the total is $14,914,780 less than the appropriation for the fiscal year of 1894, which was $166,531,350.

A wave of anarchy, in whose train followed bloodshed, arson and the destruction of property, passed over the Mansfield coal region (Pennsylvania) on Jan. 27. It began at dawn, and at dusk it was estimated that $100 000 worth of property had been destroyed. Made wild by fancied grievances and liquor, a mob of several hundred foreigners, Hungarians, Slavonians and French, swept over the country surrounding Mansfield and through the valleys of Toms and Painter's run. They attacked mine-owners, miners and the few scattered deputy sheriffs, burned tipples, wrecked cars and destroyed railroad property.

FOREIGN.

Although no definite confirmation has been received of the reported efforts to mediate between the contending factions in Brazil, reports have been frequent during the past few days of new movements indicating that something is in progress in the shape of a conference between the leaders of the insurgents and President Peixoto.

As grave as the recent Egyptian crisis promised to prove, it has come to a sudden and ridiculous end by the complete surrender of the young Khedive to all demands made upon him by the British government. The Egyptian government has caused to be published a general order eulogizing the Egyptian troops and their British officers, and regretting that injurious reports have been spread to the effect that the Khedive had criticised them.

The thirty-fifth birthday of Emperor William was celebrated on Jan. 27 throughout Germany in a most enthusiastic and elaborate manner. The people of Germany, in addition to celebrating the Emperor's birthday, on that day also celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his entering into the Prussian army, and, above all, they have been celebrating the reconciliation which has taken place between the Emperor and Prince Bismarck.

There was a violent scene in the French Chamber of Deputies on Jan. 27, and the sitting was finally suspended temporarily by the president. One of the deputies from the Seine interpellated the government on the recent arrests of anarchists. During the course of his interpellation he caused considerable interruption on the part of the supporters of the government by reproaching the latter with persecuting the socialists as a pretext for suppressing the anarchists.

The earlier symptoms of dyspepsia, such as distress after eating, heartburn, and occasional headaches, should not be neglected. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla and be cured.

The Best Men Wanted.

"Yes, sir; we want some good men, men of first-class character and ability to represent us. Among our representatives are many of the noblest and best men in America, and parties of that stamp can always find a splendid business opportunity at our establishment." That is the way Mr. B. F. Johnson, of the firm B. F. Johnson & Co., Richmond, Va., stated the case in reference to their advertisement in this paper.

Waifs and Strays.

Rev. A. E. Clay has recently made a tour through Southwest Louisiana in the interest of the Louisiana Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. On this trip thirty-six adults joined the society, and thirty-two juveniles.

The work in the city has been very great during the last two weeks. Nearly a hundred children have had to be attended to who were sick or destitute.

The Waifs' Home received some very sacred gifts this week. A dear little boy, having made joy and sunlight in an earthly home, had gone to the Savior, and the grief-stricken mother sent to us all his personal belongings: crib and bedding, and diminutive clothes and chair. Thus being dead, this child will live.

A young girl sixteen years old, well-bred and educated, persecuted and beaten by her parents, who had attempted to place her in the House of Good Shepherd to get rid of her, is one of the cases we have had to deal with during the week. The girl in question is a brilliant conversationalist, has a knowledge beyond her years, and is an accomplished pianist. The girl was given a home as companion to a lady who is well known in charitable circles.

A thirteen-year-old girl of comely appearance was brought from Gretna to the Waifs' Home on Saturday last by Secretary Court. H. Young. She has led a very unhappy life. Her father died while she was quite young, and her mother remarried. The step-father was a drunkard and was often very brutal. Several years ago an elder sister entered upon a life of shame, and is now in a den in Jeanerette, La. Only a few days before this girl was rescued she had received a letter from this sister imploring her to come to Jeanerette and lead the life she was leading. Were it not that this girl had been under vigilant watch, it is very probable she would have been decoyed away within the last few days. She will be placed in a private home.

The second annual meeting of the Louisiana Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children will be held in the Assembly Hall, on Clio street, near St. Charles avenue, on Thursday, Feb. 8, at eight P. M. Eminent speakers will address the members. A large attendance is requested.

When tempted to think lightly of your pastor, think of how much you are indebted to him for starting good thoughts, for inciting you to noble resolutions, for directing you into right channels, for helping you in every good work. He moves and sways you in ways you little imagine. No one rightly disposed can sit under the preaching of a minister Sabbath after Sabbath, and come under his influence week after week, without being more or less affected by what he says and does. His counsels, his warnings, his instructions, his prayers and his example are more or less helpful and inspiring; and one must, in his thoughtful moods, trace to him much of the good that he does, of the resistance of the evil that he makes, of the stimulation which he enjoys, of the spiritual quickening which he receives, and of the better living he manifests from time to time. His faithful ministry is indispensable to individual and church life and development. It is foolish to talk against it, as it is possessed by you Sabbath after Sabbath. It may not be all that it ought to be and might be, but it is the best you have, and would be better if everyone encouraged and sustained it as he might and should do. Talk it up, not down, and note the increased benefit which you derive from it.—Presbyterian.

Nearly all women have good hair, though many are gray, and few are bald. Hall's Hair Renewer restores the natural color, and thickens the growth of the hair.

January 26 was a great day for Emperor William, Prince Bismarck and the fatherland. The German empire, through its length and breadth, has been filled with an enthusiasm almost indescribable over the apparent reconciliation between the Emperor and Bismarck after four years of enmity. The capital abandoned itself to a delirium of joy at the affecting sight of the high-spirited young Emperor and the grizzled patriotic statesman clasping hands with the utmost cordiality of manner and embracing each other with a heartiness and warmth, whose sincerity it seemed impossible to doubt.

THERE IS NO DEATH.

BY J. L. M'CREARY.

There is no death! The stars go down
To rise upon some future shore.
And bright in heaven's jeweled crown
They shine forever more.

There is no death! The dust we tread
Shall change beneath the summer showers
To golden grain or mellow fruit,
Or rainbow-tinted flowers.

There is no death! The leaves may fall,
The flowers may fade and pass away;
They only wait through wintry hours
The coming of the May.

There is no death! An angel form
Walks o'er the earth with silent tread;
He bears our best-loved things away,
And then we call them "dead."

He leaves our hearts all desolate;
He plucks the sweetest, fairest flowers;
Transplanted into bliss, they now
Adorn immortal bowers.

The bird-like voice, whose joyous tones
Made glad this scene of sin and strife,
Sings now in everlasting song
Amid the tree of life.

And when he sees a smile too bright,
Or heart too pure for taint of vice,
He bears it in that world of light
To dwell in paradise.

And ever near us, though unseen,
The dear immortal spirits tread,
For all the boundless universe
Is life; there are no dead!

My Conversion.

I was born in the city of Warsaw, Poland, in 1865, in one of the most orthodox rabbinical Jewish families. My father, a wealthy merchant, is the son of the Lipnoer rabbi, and my mother is of the well-known rabbinical family of Gurah, which is now the head of the Jews in all Europe. My early life was spent, as is the case with the most orthodox Jewish boys in Poland, mostly in the study of the Talmud and other Hebrew literature; but being of priestly descent, my father was especially anxious to make me acquainted with the book of Leviticus, where the priests are instructed about their duties.

There it was where my first difficulties as to the Jewish religion arose, for I remember that when we went on reading about the sacrifices that the children of Israel had to bring for their sins, I asked my father, "Why do we not offer sacrifices to-day?" He answered, "Because we have no temple." "How, then, will our sins be forgiven?" I then asked him, to which he replied, "Because we pray for forgiveness." This did not satisfy me as a true answer, because I knew that our ancestors were told to bring sacrifices for sins besides earnest prayer—in fact, the Scripture itself spoke mightily to me when it says, "If anyone commits a sin, let him bring a sin sacrifice—a young bullock without a blemish—and his sin shall be forgiven;" but it never says, if anyone commits a sin, he shall pray, and his sins will be forgiven. Thus I was almost convinced that a sacrifice is needed for the atonement of our sins. This question about sacrifice for sin I went on asking my teacher and other learned Jews among my acquaintances; but, strange as it seemed to me, the most answers I received were to the effect that I must not ask such questions.

Of course, this just made me more and more anxious to know the true way of forgiveness for sin and access to God.

In a couple of years later I was sent to my uncle at Gurah, the chief rabbi of the Chassidim (Saints in Israel), for higher studies, and the first he received me with was the solemn words of the prophet Amos, "Prepare to meet thy God." He said, "I hope you have come here with the object of preparing yourself to meet God."

These words became the heaviest in my heart, and I began in very earnest to keep the commandments and Jewish laws in addition to praying and fasting as much as ever I could. But the more I tried to observe the commandments, the more I became convinced that sin lay upon me. Indeed, I felt the need of atonement and sin sacrifices more and more, but there was none.

Space does not permit me to give here more details of my experience. Suffice it to say that when not fully eighteen years of age I was married to a rich lady in Lodz, Poland. My father-in-law had a beautiful synagogue in his own house, and I was preaching there quite often, while for myself I began very earnestly to study and examine fully the law of Moses and the prophets, and there I got glimpses of salvation for my burdened conscience, for I saw that my own hope, as well as the only hope of the whole house of Israel, is in the Messiah of whom the prophet speaks, that he will be wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities; yea, his soul will be made a guilt-offering, that through him many may become righteous. I saw that the prophet foretells that a blessed new covenant will be made through him, when not only will our sins be forgiven, but "remembered no more." These and the many like passages began to be my favorite and chief studies. I also commenced speaking to my friends, as well as in the synagogue, about them, and, to my surprise, instead of their liking this precious truth of God's Word, as I expected, they rather began speaking against me, thinking that I favored the Christian teaching. This reached the ear of a Christian minister, who, by special effort, made me receive a copy of the New Testament in Hebrew, as well as other Christian books and literature, which I, in search of the truth, carefully read and examined. My friends in town began more and more to dislike my way of speaking in regard to religion, and the name "apostate" and the like were given to me, and I had to stand a good deal of persecution, with the result that I had finally to leave my dear wife and beloved children in my father-in-law's house, and go back to my own father at Warsaw. Shortly afterwards I was compelled to enter the Russian military service, and as I was found serviceable, and thousands of roubles had been spent without success to get me free, my father and mother would by no means allow me to enter into the army of the Czar, and thus decided that I should flee to a foreign country for a while, till all matters would be straightened out.

After visiting many cities, and coming by the way in contact with some Christian missionaries, I once stopped in the city of Breslau, where the venerable Scotch missionary to the Jews, the Rev. Daniel Edward, is laboring, and to make it short, I was, by the grace of God Almighty, through the instrumentality of this most faithful and powerful laborer for Christ, led to fully accept the Lord Jesus as the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world and my own personal Redeemer.

On the sixth of October, 1889, being the very day of the great Jewish day of Atonement, I was baptized at the Free Church in Breslau in the presence of the congregation and quite a number of the Jewish people of the city, by Dr. Edward. I was asked to give my reasons for becoming a follower of Christ, and just before the sacrament of the baptism I gave quite an address, which was immediately printed, and has been widely circulated among the Jews in many parts of the country. My father was immediately telegraphed of what had taken place, and, of course, a hot and bitter persecution was the result. My dear spiritual father, Dr. Edward, wisely decided to hurry me off to his friends in Scotland, commending me to the kindness of the Jewish committee of the Free Church in Edinburgh, where I was sent to study for the Jewish mission work, at the "New College." For the glory of the dear Lord I would like to confess right here that though my heart was naturally bleeding because of the loss of all things that I ever counted sweet and dear, yet in my spirit I was rejoicing—yes, cast down, but not destroyed; persecuted, but not forsaken; poor, yet having all in the precious pearl I had found in Jesus, the Messiah of Israel and the Savior of my soul. When in Edinburgh, New College, only for a little over half a year, and having made some warm and life-long friends, the anger of my parents had grown meantime very bitter against the step I had taken, and news reached me suddenly that they traced me to Edinburgh, and the committee decided to send me off without delay to this free country of America. So on April, 1890, I landed in New York with Jesus as my only friend. On the same evening, finding out this Hebrew-Christian Mission, I was invited by Bro. Freshman to speak at the prayer meeting, and then to preach next day, which was the Jewish Sabbath, at his Jewish meeting. At that time I certainly never dreamed that the leadership of that work would fall upon me; but the ways of God are not as ours, and are certainly wonderful.

Rev. Dr. John Hall, to whom my friends on the other side had written about me, received me as a member of his Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, and introduced me to Rev. Dr. A. F. Schauffler, superintendent of the New York City Mission Society. That society decided to take me up as a worker among the Jews of this city, and gave me the use of their DeWitt Memorial Church, 280 Rivington street, which is quite in the Jewish district, and I immediately commenced working for the Master in that neighborhood.

Of course, the first meetings were attended by only a few; but those who came became so deeply impressed and interested that they went on bringing others and others, and the attendance so increased until it soon amounted to hundreds of listeners. During the past two years the Saturday afternoon meeting (of which in future numbers of this paper full accounts will be given regularly) has been attended regularly by hundreds of Jews, of which scores gave their hearts to Christ, and accepted him as their personal Savior, and the work in general is really blessed of God beyond all our expectations, for which my heart is overflowing with praise and thanksgiving to him who was and is and ever shall be, Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews.

Now, before closing this narrative, let me say, "Shalam Alacham." Peace be with you, dear friends. Hoping now, as you realize the great work it has pleased him to put into my hands, the new and old friends will aid me in this with their constant prayers, sympathy and practical help, as the Lord may permit you, I am, dear friends,

Yours in the love and service of Christ Jesus,

HERMANN WARSZAWIAK.

Religion in the Home.

BY PHILLIPS BROOKS.

It is a very wide law and a very beautiful one, that the best way to make a thing fit for the use for which it was first made, is to put it to that use. The best way to make the dusty trumpet clear is to blow music through it. The best way to make the sluggish mind capable of thinking is to think with it. And so the best way to make the natural relationships capable of carrying religious influence is to give them religious influences to carry, so strong and ardent that they shall force and burn their own way through whatever artificial obstructions may have stopped up the channel through which they were meant to go. I hear a Christian parent complaining that his religion has not told upon his children to make them Christians; but, when I ask, I find that there never has been one direct effort to make it tell; never in all the years while they have lived together, one word or act, which definitely and specially, tried to send the father's religion through the open channel that was between them, from the father's life into the child's. Everything, also every other truth and interest and treasure, has been offered and urged over and over again, but not one word or act has ever urged or even offered religion.

I know what will be said at once, and I think I understand it. I know how often it is hardest to speak about the most sacred things to those who are the nearest and dearest to us. I understand that shrinking which keeps the brother's lips closed from urging on his own brother the truth and the persuasion which he will urge freely enough on any other man. The glib and ready Sunday-school teacher goes from his class to his home, and in the presence of his own children he is silent as a stone. In that phenomenon, which is so familiar and often so perplexing, I think we can see the mixture of two feelings, one which is bad, the other good. The bad feeling is the sense of shame which comes when we think of pressing the love of God and the service of Christ upon the minds and consciences of those who are always living with us, and who know what poor, weak, wicked and unfaithful things our own lives are. The good reason for our silence is more subtle. It is, I think, the feeling which comes to us almost everywhere, but comes to us most strongly in the presence of those whose hearts lie nearest to our own, that for the conveyance of the most sacred influence words are the most clumsy and unsatisfactory of means; that life is the only testimony by which the power of Christ in one man's heart can thoroughly bear its witness to the heart of any other man. It is natural enough that this consciousness should be most clear and strong just where the possibility of heart hearing direct testimony to heart becomes most evident, in the home where hearts ought to lie nearest and openest to one another. I know how these two reasons, and perhaps some others, make it very hard sometimes for the father to talk to his child, or for the brother to talk to his brother, about the most sacred things. And yet I know how often just one word is needed to break through the obstruction and reserve, and let all the wealth of God's grace which has been gathering in one humbly consecrated heart, pour forth into another which is waiting, empty and hungry, all the time. At least we are bound to be sure that it is something nobler than mere pride or shame that is keeping us from saying to our brother what may be his word of life.

But, after all, the word is only one method; the simplest, the most immediate, the most natural, but not the only nor the richest method by which men send influence forth to their brethren. If, honestly, the urgent word does not seem to be the true way to reach the lives which God has set the closest to our own, the truth remains that he who really seeks to send abroad the gospel, and who lives that gospel in the center of some one of the networks of brotherhood with which God has covered the earth, and who cares for other souls beside his own, and is on the watch for every feather with which the arrow of his influence can possibly be winged, will surely find the ways he seeks, however impossible it is to tell before what they will be, and can not fail to discover at last that God has blessed through him the lives which are no less dear to him than his own.

With that assurance, full of responsibility and full also of encouraging hope, I leave the truth which I have tried to preach to you. Go to your homes and question them! O Zebedee! O mother of Zebedee's children! ask yourselves whether your household is kept open by pure, refined, unselfish, elevated living, by a continual sense of God, by ever present prayer, so that the best of light and strength which God has given to anyone tends freely to become the strength and light of all. Why are John and James so often not together in the company of Christ? What does it mean that so often Simon Peter lingers in darkness, while Andrew is in full sunshine of the Master's service? Go home and question your household life about these things, and claim for your home that blessing for which God made our homes; the blessing of persuasive grace, the blessing of a brotherhood and sisterhood in the divine life, ever echoing and fulfilling the brotherhoods and sisterhoods which make the richness and beauty of our human living, and ever picturing and anticipating the perfect brotherhoods and sisterhoods in the great world-family of God.—Exchange.

Our Brethren Are in Need.

There have a number of cases come to our knowledge of the families of our brethren living in the Indian and Oklahoma Territories and the Northwest, who are suffering for the want of warm, comfortable houses to live in. These brethren have not money and can not rent such houses as they need. Their circuits or stations have no parsonage. They and theirs are suffering—suffering that they may preach Christ and the riches of his grace to those who would otherwise not hear the gospel.

One night, a few weeks ago, the parsonage built at W. by the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society burnt down. The pastor rescued from the flames his wife with her helpless babe and four young children. Everything was burned. He wants to build immediately a $500 house. $300 have been raised by the citizens of W., $100 more by friends in Arkansas, and the balance must be raised at once. Will anyone help?

Another brother in the same Territory preaches in school-houses, and there is not a parsonage within a radius of 40 miles from his station. His family in East Tennessee can not be with him, though this is his third year on his work. Oh, the peace and joy and good that, like a constant stream, would flow out from that household sheltered in a comfortable parsonage!

In the Northwest another place asks for help only to buy the nails and glass for windows for a needed parsonage, saying they themselves will do the rest. These brethren do not ask for fine houses, but are content with the plainest ones—even too cheap, without conveniences and comforts.

Do not the words of James come like a warning cry, "If a brother or sister be naked and in lack of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Go in peace, be ye warmed and filled, and yet ye give not the things needful to the body, what doth it profit?" The applications for aid in parsonages come daily. Our brethren are in need; the cry seems to fill the very air—it is a pitiful cry of anguish, it comes and comes again. The Parsonage and Home Mission Society have promised all the help they dare, money this quarter (usually the best of the year) is coming in slowly and in small sums.

Does the church send men out into this wild country to preach Christ and ask them to do without suitable clothing, shelter and nourishing food for themselves and their families? Does the church care not what becomes of these servants of God? Yes; but the great tender heart and brain of the church know not the need of the brethren. The Territories and the West are so near, the cry is so plain—a cry of patient endurance. Will not some one send help for these brethren? All money will be forwarded to them at once. Send it to Mrs. Geo. P. Kendrick, Louisville, Ky.

Brethren of the ministry, you give liberally—more than you ought. You can do better than give of your means. You can direct a tide of the church's life-blood toward our home mission fields; you can organize and inspire the women of your church, who look implicitly to you for guidance, into a Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society. You can multiply our organizations, and thus do some of the highest service in your power.

MRS. NATHAN SCARRITT,
Gen. Sec. W. P. and H. M. S.

The Control of Ministerial Transfers.

At the late sessions of the Baltimore and Maine Conferences the members voted against the transfer of preachers from other Conferences into their own. The action was neither very loyal to the economy of Methodism nor fraught with practical wisdom. Probably neither of these bodies would have voted to interfere with the appointments within Conference lines. To have done so would have been regarded as an interference with the duties of the Bishops. But, in reality, the Conferences have no more right to interfere with transfers than with the appointments within Conference boundaries. They have no rights in either case. By the fundamental law of the church the exercise of the appointing power is with the Bishops. They have the same right to transfer from one Conference to another that they have to move a preacher from one charge to another within the lines of a Conference. As general superintendents, their power extends through the church. The same law which confers on them the power to appoint, confers the power to transfer. The two are parts of a whole; the power to transfer inheres in the power to appoint.

With the founders of our church the itinerancy was a unit. The traveling preachers were one body, and at first belonged to one Conference, in which the Bishops exercised the right of appointment. When, at a later day, the territory was divided into Annual Conferences, these subordinate bodies carried with them no control over the arrangement of the itinerant work. The appointing power, as before, was with the Bishops, and, on the division into Annual Conferences, it became their duty to transfer men over Conference lines as well as inside them. The power given in the law was adequate to both actions. To reverse our statement, the power to appoint includes, as an incident, the power to transfer.

The law which regulates this matter is not doubtful. The duty of the Bishop is "to fix the appointments of the preachers." The law is general. The few limitations recognized are not limitations by Conference rights or boundaries. The Bishop may not continue a preacher for more than five consecutive years in the same charge, but he may send him into any charge or Conference he pleases. The Bishop has the right to say no. The votes of these Conferences were merely advisory, and the advice could be accepted by the Bishop or not, as he judged best for the interest of the cause. In a word, the matter of transfers is committed to the Bishops and not to the Conferences. To undertake to fix the control somewhere else is an attempt to work a revolution in our ecclesiastical economy; and revolution is disloyalty.

But, even if these votes were free from the taint of disloyalty, they are certainly characterized by a want of practical wisdom. There have been similar flurries in the Annual Conferences from time to time. In the General Conference in Baltimore, in 1840, there was a strenuous endeavor to give the Annual Conferences control over transfers, but the measure was defeated by a large majority. At a later date, perhaps at Cincinnati, the matter came up again. A large number of the Conferences had voted against the frequent transfers which had been effected. The General Conference considered the matter, and ordered the Bishops to arrange transfers as they should judge the work demanded, without regard to the votes of these Annual Conferences. Accordingly, with these instructions from headquarters, the Bishops continued to transfer more frequently than before, and, we can not doubt, to the advantage of the whole work.

As a matter of course, transfers begin at the top. Small men are not seen afar off. Men ascending toward the summit do not enjoy seeing the places almost within reach taken by strangers. Hence the temptation of Conferences to repel these new men. They may be very sincere in supposing the new men no better than themselves, and possibly that they understand the situation less perfectly; and it is natural to think that men who have created strong churches should be allowed to stop and enjoy them. But, in spite of all these considerations, the need of Methodism to-day is a wider interchange of ministerial talent. Men from the West always do well in the East, and our Eastern men grow in the larger West. Instead of voting against transfers, the Conferences should ask the Bishops to increase their number. Many a man shut up in a small Conference, where everybody has come to know him, would have a fresh lease in another field. The young preacher would be wiser to extend his circuit. Let him try several Conferences instead of shutting himself up in one; for preachers, as well as trees transplanting, is helpful, placing one in new conditions and a fresh soil. To be let out and made free of the continent is what some men need. As the matter now stands, we fear our own are the worst shut-in and pent-up preachers in America. We have an itineracy, but it is hard to transcend district and Conference lines. What was intended to be a mere imaginary trace on the sand is built into a hirsute iron fence, on which the man who attempts to go over is liable to be impaled. Let us make transfers easier rather than harder. The need is the circulation of our men. The facilities of travel are so great that distance is annihilated. A preacher can move a hundred, or even a thousand, miles almost as easily as five. The demands, as well as the facilities of the time, invite and urge a wider interchange of clerical talent.—Zion's Herald.

A Letter from Dr. Hunnicutt.

We have been highly favored at Centenary in the way of health, the grip having scarcely touched us this Winter. We have moved on with great regularity in all college work. We have a larger number of students in the college classes than usual. A dozen new students have come in since the holidays, among them several young preachers. We think we are doing good work for the heads and the hearts of the young men who seek education here.

Many are paying the interest on their endowment notes. If all would do so, we should be much gratified. Let our friends strain a point, if need be, and send in their interest. Altogether we have many and great causes for gratitude. We take a growing pleasure in the weekly visits of the ADVOCATE, and hope to welcome its editor at our annual public debate in March.

WHAT HOUSE TO LIKE.

Some love the glow of outward show,
Some love mere wealth, and try to win it;
The house to me may lowly be,
If I but like the people in it.
What's all the gold that glitters cold,
When linked to hard or haughty feeling?
Whate'er we're told, the noble gold
Is truth of heart and manly dealing.
Then let them seek, whose minds are weak,
Mere fashion's smile, and try to win it;
The house to me may lowly be,
If I but like the people in it.

A lowly root may give us proof
That lowly flowers are often fairest;
And trees whose bark is hard and dark
May yield us fruit and bloom the rarest.
There's worth as sure 'neath garments poor
As e'er adorned a loftier station;
And minds as just as those, we trust,
Whose claim is but of wealth's creation.
Then let them seek, whose minds are weak,
Mere fashion's smile, and try to win it;
The house to me may lowly be,
If I but like the people in it.

Shall Principle or Convenience Control?

MR. EDITOR: Echoes reach us from several quarters of a growing custom which has already wrought evil and threatens to open the flood-gates. I allude to what has been recently practiced in some of our Annual Conferences—adjourning on Saturday night or Sunday. It were hard to discern which time is most conducive to the breaking of the Sabbath, for preachers are but men. When the way is so fully opened, the Bishop consenting or encouraging, very many will be led by their anxiety "to see the home folks," to strain their own consciences, and cause many of the laity to stumble into this open pit.

Our recent session of the Mississippi Conference had no temptation in this direction. Having been appointed (at our request) by Bishop Key to open on Thursday instead of Wednesday, as heretofore, all committees and undergraduates reached Hazlehurst in ample time, without any Sabbath desecration. Under our good Bishop's admirably brief plan of examining into each one's work, we got through the minute business in due time to be all ready to enjoy the "Conference Sunday." And what a season of refreshing it was! No fever of haste to get the appointments and be off for home. Monday morning found us fresh and ready for the dispassionate discussion of the great interests represented by the Boards and committees. A full day's session brought us satisfactorily to adjournment by Monday night in good time for the trains. No inducement to impinge on the Sabbath at either end of the line. What Conference which opened on Wednesday can say as much? Beside this special advantage in the way of helping to keep the Sabbath, there is another incidental to the plan, and of considerable moment. It enables our Bishops to get through each Conference in time to be at the site of the next one day prior to the regular opening—same time as the Committees of Examination are doing their work. This enabled Bishop Key to have most of his cabinet work complete before the regular opening, and expedited business afterward. Of course, the presiding elders came together with him. The plan worked admirably with us. I wish all Conferences and Bishops would adopt it. To work smoothly, it must be universal.

Our Heritage.

So far as astronomy has gone, it has discovered no other planet so well adapted to the wants of man as the one on which we live. Hence we believe God has given us the best—the best for us.

But the zones girdling the earth are not all equally suited to human habitation. The Southern hemisphere, for reasons known to astronomers, has greater heat in its Summer and greater cold in its Winter than has the northern half of our globe. And it is to be acknowledged with thankfulness that much more than half of the land surface of the earth lies north of the equator. Our heritage belongs to the middle zone of this favored half of the globe. We are equally removed from the dwarfing cold of the Arctic Winter and the enervating heat of the torrid Summer. Ours is the zone in which the nations have lived, who have made much the greater part of human history.

Now run your finger along this favored belt upon your maps, from Japan westward to California, and you will find the best section, all things considered, lies in America, and is marked "United States"—our native land. Truly "our lines have fallen to us in pleasant places—ours is a goodly heritage."

Again, while our environment is the best in the world—a matter of immense moment—there is another consideration of still greater importance to us. I mean our heredity. Our colonial ancestry combined the best elements of our race. As a people we have no equal on the globe: we are a peculiar people, outstripping the rest of the nations in enterprise and invention. The world has never had our equal. To what grand results these two potent factors, our environment and our heredity, may lead, must be left to conjecture, for history has no record of such a conjunction heretofore. Prophetic are the mottoes, "E Pluribus Unum: Novus Ordo Seclorum."

Once more: Our heritage embraces another element that demands our gratitude: ours is the most favored age in the annals of time. Never before were so many seas visited by vessels of trade; never before were the ships so large, so safe, so swift. Never before were there so many mines opened; never before were they worked with such appliances and powers. Never before were there so many factories; never before so many and varied products. Never before such facilities of illumination and travel. Never before so many schools or so many lines of education. Never before so many churches, Sunday-schools, and other organizations for the uplifting of humanity; never before so many ministers, or ministers so well qualified. Never before so many nor so large gifts and benefactions for schools, churches, hospitals, "homes" for the afflicted and distressed. Never before so many Bibles, good books and periodicals; so many good men and women and young people to help in every good word and work. Never before so many missionary agencies employed. Are we not at the top of the list of favored nations, kindreds, tongues and peoples?

Shall such considerations make us feel proud? Rather let them humble us down into the dust. Our accountability keeps pace with our exaltation. "To whom much is given, of them much will be required." Not as Eskimo or Hottentot shall we be judged; not as Antediluvians or Bushmen, but as they "upon whom the ends of the world are come"—the most favored race in the best land, in the best age known to history.

We rejoice in our unparalleled privileges; but let it be with fear and trembling. Better citizens and better Christians elsewhere are not found. But it is not enough that we be as they; we should excel them in good works, since we have a more excellent heritage.

Hiwassee College, Tenn.

David McRee.

The subject of this notice was born in North Carolina, March 18, 1814. He came with his parents to Mississippi in early life. On the thirty-first day of January, 1839, he was married to Miss Epsey M. Leach, with whom he lived happily nearly fifty-five years. They were blessed with seven children, five of whom are still living. He enjoyed good success in his business affairs; the reward of honesty, industry, and economy. In the month of February, 1839, soon after his marriage, he joined the Methodist Church, and remained a useful member of our communion as long as he lived. He was converted under the ministry of the Rev. James Watson, who has long since gone to his reward.

For many years Bro. McRee lived on his farm in Copiah county, near Pleasant Valley Church; but in December, 1865, he removed to Caseyville, now in Lincoln county, Miss., where he spent the remainder of his life. It would be impossible, in a short paper like this, to give anything like a full portrait of the character of David McRee. He was a patriotic citizen, an affectionate husband, an indulgent father, a good neighbor, and a consecrated Christian. His home was a house of prayer, well supplied with the literature of his church, and much given to hospitality. It would be interesting to know how many ministers of the gospel have enjoyed the sweet hospitality of that Christian home. Living near Bethel Church, on the Scotland (now Caseyville) circuit—a church which he was the main instrument of building—it was understood on quarterly and protracted meeting occasions that his house was open, and it was generally filled; and there was always plenty and to spare. He was also the principal agent in building the beautiful parsonage for the circuit, situated near his own home, and which is one of the best country parsonages in all this land. He loved the church of God, and gave liberally of his means to build up and sustain her institutions and interests. He was a good steward, and that is saying a great deal. He was never absent from church service or quarterly meeting when he was able to be there; and often in his declining years he would go to quarterly meeting in adjoining neighborhoods when he ought, perhaps, to have been in bed. He was not a crank. He was a man of convictions and of positive character; a man of firmness in what he believed to be right; but he was a Christian gentleman. One thing I think can be said of Uncle David McRee. He was always faithful to his God, to his church and to his pastor. As he grew older he grew better. In age and feebleness extreme Uncle David was strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. He was called to pass through fiery trials in his old age, but he leaned more completely upon his God, and faltered not in his faith and faithfulness. He knew how to suffer as a Christian as well as how to live as a Christian. It is all over with him now. He fell asleep in Jesus on the fifth day of January, 1894. That was a sad day to that home, to that church, to that circuit; but it was a bright day to David McRee and to heaven. Doubtless, the ministers he loved so well, who were often entertained in his home, and who had gone on before with many other loved ones, have joyously greeted him in his heavenly home.

I do not think I ever had a better friend among the thousands of people I have served within the last thirty-six years than I had in the person of Bro. McRee. I loved him as I loved my own son.

Among the many who will greatly miss Uncle Dave are three little boys, viz.: Dave, Lamar, and John Magee, grandsons of his, whose father, Dr. Magee, died in the faith over two years ago, since which time, together with their mother, they have lived in the house with their grandparents. May our Father in heaven, who has promised to be a father to the fatherless, and judge of the widow, bless and keep them all unto eternal life!

H. P. LEWIS.

From the Board of Missions, North Mississippi Conference.

The following resolution was adopted by the Board of Missions at the last session of the North Mississippi Conference:

Resolved, That this Board appoint a district secretary for each district in the Conference, who shall have charge of the missionary interests in his district, and report once a quarter to the secretary of this Board, who shall report quarterly to the Conference through the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

This resolution contemplates that the pastors shall report to the district secretary, and the district secretary to the Conference secretary, what has been done for the cause of missions; how much has been paid for foreign and how much for domestic missions. Send money to the treasurer and a report to the district secretary.

In accordance with the foregoing resolution the following brethren have been appointed, and we are sure they will serve:

For Winona district, Rev. Geo. H. Lipscomb; for Grenada district, Rev. John E. Thomas; for Greenville district, Rev. J. J. Brooks; for Sardis district, Rev. Thos. B. Clifford; for Holly Springs district, Rev. J. S. Oakley; for Corinth district, Rev. H. R. Tucker; for Columbus district, Rev. J. W. Dorman; for Aberdeen district, Rev. M. E. Tumlin; for Kosciusko district, Rev. W. D. McCullough.

We trust that these brethren will take hold of this work at once, and do all in their power to secure a report from all the pastors on the first of March, June, and September. We would be glad to report through the ADVOCATE the second week in March something collected from every charge in the North Mississippi Conference. We will report through the ADVOCATE quarterly what we have done; and let us do something to report. How many charges will report all paid by March 1? Let us have one from each district. We have ordered missionary literature sent from Nashville to each of the district secretaries, which he will please distribute through his district. We must earnestly request the presiding elders to lend their influence and help to this matter. And to the laymen we would say: We can not succeed without you. You can block up the way and make it impossible for your pastor and the church to make a large success. Help us, and help now! Cash payments, no interest, and assessments in full, are our hopes and aims for '94.

Your brethren,

J. W. PRICE, Pres.,
THOS. J. NEWELL, Sec.,

Rev. E. H. Moon.

"Rev. E. H. Moon is dead." These words were telegraphed to me to-day by my special friend, S. T. Harkey, from Tupelo. Words can not express the surprise and sorrow which this message brought to my heart. It was my privilege to assist Bro. Moon in a two-weeks' meeting at Tupelo last October, and I had an excellent opportunity to find out his worth. As gentle in his disposition as a woman, as refined and polished in his manner as a Chesterfield, as studious and cultured as his compeers, he was capable of filling any place with great satisfaction to the people and marked credit to himself. In the first place:

1. Bro. Moon's Christian life was a positive fact. He was consciously converted when a boy, and all along through life he referred to that sweet hour with peculiar delight. He had religion, and he knew it, and he was not afraid for other people to know it. His religious experience gave a peculiar flavor and interest to his preaching, and those who sat under his ministry felt that he lived close to the blessed Master. Religion with Bro. Moon was not a mere theory—a dry, lifeless creed—but a living power in his life.

2. He was an industrious student. He read to good purpose, selecting his books carefully, and he made good use of his knowledge thus gleaned. A glance at his library showed the fine taste of its owner. A few choice poems—such as Campbell and Milton—a few books of fiction of the highest kind, the best histories, the best theological works, and a few other choice books, constituted a library which twenty-three years of toil and self-denial had collected. Bro. Moon did not read for recreation, but as a man of God who desires to study, that he might become a workman that needeth not to be ashamed.

3. As a preacher of the Word, I desire to speak of Bro. Moon. The people who sat under his ministry were always fed on well-beaten oil when he preached. He did not appeal to low and vulgar tastes, nor adopt sensational methods to succeed; but the people were nourished. He joined the North Mississippi Conference at its organization in 1870, and, with the exception of three years spent in the North Alabama Conference, he has spent the entire time within the bounds of his mother Conference. At an early period in his ministerial life he was stationed at West Point; then Starkville, Macon, Holly Springs and Tupelo enjoyed his ministry. He was always acceptable to his people—in fact, the rule was for him to serve out the entire pastoral term. His preaching was of a high order. A few lines of poetry were sometimes used which would throw a flood of light in his theme, and awaken a new interest among the members of his congregation.

4. His home life was remarkably fine and Christ-like. The companion and friend of his two children as well as of his wife, they looked up to him and confided in him fully. It was an ideal home. His wife was his chief counselor and surest adviser, and his children were free and happy. To go into that home was a great pleasure. Our brother's work is done. He has passed over the river, but we shall meet him again.

T. W. LEWIS.

A Clear Statement.

The following article by Dr. Hearn is so full of vital facts and truths that we give it a place in our own space, praying that it may accomplish that good for which alone it was written. May the spirit that moved the writer pervade the mind and heart of every one whose eye may fall upon it. If we could only put ourselves in the shoes of our Bishops, and think and act from their standpoint, we would complain less, pray more and be wiser. Here is the article:

OUR POOR BISHOPS.

Except our editors, perhaps we have no class of men more thoroughly "represented" than our good Bishops. As I am not seeking an appointment, no one will misunderstand me in saying some things, gathered from general reading, and also hearing.

One brother thinks the General Conference has been in error in electing Bishops that are too old; another is of opinion that the mistake has been in electing those that were too young. In neither case, however, was the age of the objector furnished to the press.

Should it be deemed necessary for the good of the church to elect one, or two, at Memphis, I beg to emphasize a suggestion made by our chief editor, viz.: that no man of "cold heart" be chosen. A man who is cold-hearted, dictatorial, unforgiving, surely will not be selected. Of course, no brother who allows the use of the secular press in his interest the day before election, is worthy to hold so sacred and high an office, or who in any way whatever is guilty of electioneering. I dare say good men can and will be found, as in the past. God reigns.

One editor, in the discharge of his duties in conducting a church paper, defends our Bishops from false charges, as he deems them. Then another editor takes him to task for so doing, and seems to impugn his motives. It is the opinion of some that they should be elected for four years—subject to re-election—instead of for life, or good behavior. One Bishop opens Conference promptly at nine A. M., gives a good, earnest exhortation, proceeds deliberately to his business, gives ample time for free discussion of all subjects, and gives appointments Tuesday night. Then the cry: "Too slow; too much tax on the people; takes too much time," etc. Again, one drives rapidly through and winds up Sunday night. Listen: "An outrage;" "our Conference is too important a body for such haste—shame to close Sunday night," etc. One "shakes up" a Conference, and makes many changes; another makes few changes. But both are censured—one for shaking up, and the other for not shaking up. One Bishop keeps his own counsel, consults his presiding elders, and hears the laymen—but makes the appointments according to his own judgment. Then comes the charge: "Harsh autocrat," etc. On the other hand, one announces that he has gone according to the suggestions of the presiding elders, and they are responsible for the work done; when lo! a disgruntled cries out, "Too timid—unmanly;" "the beloveds are pleased." I ask, in all candor, what these good men are to do? One has done wrong, in my opinion, by making reply to pop-gun batteries firing at his action.

But, again: One writer goes away out West to "sass" Bishop Haygood for locating Sam Jones. How can a Bishop locate a preacher? Sam asked a location, and the Conference granted his request. Jones says he feels good, now that he is amenable to no man higher than himself. Bishops have been missing a very good opportunity to make a man enormely happy, by not advising Sam to locate years ago. There is still room outside.

One young brother, just in his spring-time, says a Bishop has never done anything for him, and he is under no obligations to them. Is it possible that the appointments given him are nothing? But he is following his elders in expressions of complaint.

Some would-be-giraffes complain of the Bishops' dealings with these high men. Of the kindness of our Bishops to them there can be no doubt, for as they can stay only four years in any one Conference, he provides for them elsewhere, and they go. They are to be pitied, as they form no Conference alliances, or friendships, above ordinary associations, and no Conference feels especially concerned for their families.

None of these complainers entered our church ignorant of the authority of the Bishops, and surely are not compelled to remain in a church not suited to their tastes.—W. C. Hearn, in Alabama Advocate.

Herb Molly.

In a corner of one of the great markets of Philadelphia a little stall was for many years occupied by an old Scotch woman. She sold only heads of lettuce and herbs, but few as crisp and fresh were to be found in the city. Sometimes the other hucksters urged her to "spread out" into the larger vegetables.

"Na, na!" she would say. "I ken my salats an' my herbs. I dinna ken th' ithers. I suld cheat or be cheated wi' them."

"Herb Molly" never wronged anyone of a penny. Her sense of justice was so fine and so long proved that disputes in the market were brought to her to decide. Customers who once stopped to buy the fresh, crisp leaves from the tidy old body always came again. Something in the withered face which looked out from under the white cap went with them, and drew them to her again. More than one busy housekeeper would go a mile out of her way to buy from Old Molly.

"It is not only that her herbs are so fresh and delicious," one said, "but it rests me to speak to her. She is only an ignorant woman, but so true, so friendly. It is the kindest soul in the world that looks out of her eyes."

In the twenty years during which she sat in the same quiet corner she gradually became a power in the market. Noisy people lowered their voices in their bargaining when they spoke to her. Even Big Pete, the butcher and "rough," made her his confidante.

It was to Molly that the women carried their troubles about sick babies and drunken husbands. It was Molly who coaxed Big Pete's boy to give up liquor, and who saved more than one girl in the market who was going astray. She lived alone. These rough folk were the only children she had. She had love enough in her own heart to mother them all.

But the thing that gave her such extraordinary power over them was that God was so real to her.

"She don't preach," one woman said; "but Jesus is with her all the time. She talks to him. She knows him."

"I don't know nothin' of priests or preachers," Big Pete used to say, "but I believe in Molly's God."

Mollie died the other day. There was no notice in any paper to show that a power for good has gone silently out of the world. But her empty corner was swept and closed that day, and over every stall in the market hung a scrap of black. One man whom she had brought back to decency and happiness said:

"A woman may sit as a huckster in this market, and yet be one of the angels of God."

That was her only funeral sermon—Youth's Companion.

Total Abstinence.

The importance of total abstinence from the standpoint of Christian expediency is strongly and admirably stated in the following paragraph, which we find in the columns of the Commercial Advertiser. It is a very rare thing to find such sound temperance doctrine in the columns of the daily press. Would we might have more of it: "No headway will be made in drowning intemperance until church members become total abstainers, not necessarily because it is a sin to drink a glass of wine, but for Christian expediency's sake. All the temperance societies, with one exception, have got on to the total abstinence platform, though moderation was the corner-stone of everyone of them that started sixty years ago or before. To train the young to drink absolutely nothing of an alcoholic nature is the only 'way out.' All earnest temperance workers have come to this. It is well-fed, selfish, comfortable men and women who are holding the church back from its duty. The only way to guard against drunkenness is not to drink. A certain per cent. of young people, brought up on any other plan, will inevitably be ruined, for the reason that the drink habit is a physiological fact and reality. A certain proportion of those who drink will come under the law of habit, which ends in drunkenness. The streets of New York are lined with sons and daughters of all kinds of homes, where they had only wine and where you could get what you wanted, where moderation was practiced, where the line was drawn at all sorts of places and after so many glasses, where liquor was bad and where it was good. From all such homes disasters are reported. The only homes that enjoy immunity are those where no one of the members drink, and the only class of persons who never, under any conditions, become drunkards, are those who never, under any conditions, give alcohol a shot at their weakest. When the church sets to work to make the contingent of total abstainers not a pitiful, ridiculous corporal's guard, but a strong, growing, enthusiastic army, General Rum will begin to take his stand for a final battle, and he will be driven from the field vanquished."—Exchange.

Your Pastor.

You love your pastor? Good. Have you paid him up to date? If not, why not? Has he made full proof of his ministry? He came to you last March. He has preached in your pulpit, conducted the service of prayer, labored faithfully in your Sabbath-school, visited your class meetings, and thrown life into your Epworth League. He has comforted you at the Lord's table, broken bread with you in the love-feast, baptized your children, knelt at the bedside of your sick, and wept with you at the grave. He has, through Summer's sun and Winter's snow, found entrance to your home, prayed and sung around the family altar, shouted with you when your boy was brought to Christ, taken care of him in probationary development. The official Board has felt the force of his counsel. The leaders and stewards have rarely met without him. The trustees have piled labors almost pyramidal upon him, while the Quarterly Conference has held a jubilee over the accomplishments of the year. But his suit is shabby, and he can not replace it without a "Please trust me." He has needed books, but his library shelves beseech in vain. His pantry is empty, and he dislikes to ask for credit. He would educate his children, but—and he gives a sigh. His Discipline pleads with him to keep out of debt. He must have coal for his stove and bread for his children and clothes for his wardrobe. A pledged salary of $650, and for ten months he has received but $230. Is the picture overdrawn? Brethren, you embarrass your pastor. He makes promises, relying upon your fidelity, and, mortified, he asks an extension of time. It hurts awfully to be compelled to read the letters writ large, "DON'T ASK FOR CREDIT." It has been done over and over. We know whereof we speak. We plead for a radical correction of this embarrassment. Save your preacher from the hurtful comments spoken carelessly in public places. Save him from the deluge of doctors' bills and shoemakers' bills and coal-dealers' bills. It hurts you. It recoils upon your ministry. It trammels your local church. It brings the shameful stigma upon your glorious Methodism. Erase that word "deficit" from your Webster before another week passes by.—Baltimore Methodist.

The world is not dying because there is not more preaching, but because there is so little practice. . . . The man who is doing nothing to help support missions is hindering God's work in his own heart. . . . There is a power in the religion that can praise God when there is nothing but the devil's face in sight. . . . At least one woman in five believes that if she had been in Eve's place Adam would be in the garden yet. . . . There is a great deal of preaching being done in these times that the devil is not finding any fault with. . . . The devil would never get a follower if he couldn't make a foundation of sand look as safe as solid rock. . . . Better find out what kind of a foundation you have under you before you spend your whole life in trying to build a house on it. . . . The devil is not taking any special pains to offset the testimony of the man who always tells what he knows about God with a long face.—Ram's Horn.

HYGIENE.

Alcoholic Dangers.

The following statements are taken from the evidence given by Sir William Gull, before the Select Committee of the House of Lords on Intemperance, in England.

1. Instead of flying to alcoholic liquors, as many people do when they are exhausted, they might very well drink water; or they might very well take food, and would be very much better without the alcohol.

2. Of all the dilnents or solvents for the nutritions parts of food, there is nothing like water.

3. If I am fatigued with overwork personally, my food is very simple: I eat the raisins instead of taking the wine. I have had very large experience in that practice for thirty years, and have recommended it to my personal friends.

4. Drinking leads to the degeneration of tissues; it spoils the health and the intellect.

5. All alcohol, and all things of an alcoholic nature, injure the nervous tissue, pro tempore, if not altogether. You may quicken the operations, but you do not improve them.

6. A very large number of people in society are dying day by day, poisoned by alcohol, but not supposed to be poisoned by it.

7. People are injured by drink without being drunkards. There is a point short of drunkenness in which a man may injure his constitution considerably by means of alcohol.

8. A man may drink day by day, and almost kill himself with drink, and even his near friends not know it.

9. I hardly know any more potent cause of disease than alcohol. There is disease of the liver, which is of very common occurrence, and then from disease of the liver we get disordered conditions of the blood, and consequent upon that we get diseased kidneys, we get a diseased nervous system, we get gout, and get a diseased heart.

10. The error prevalent is that alcohol cures the disease, whereas the disease runs its physiological course irrespective of alcohol.

11. There is a great feeling in society that strong wine and strong stimulants make strength. A large number of people have fallen into that error, and fall into the error every day.—Guardian.

Sick Headache.

Attacks of sick headache could often be avoided if the cause of them were known. In many instances the cause is a disordered condition of the stomach. In such cases there is often a regular recurrence of the attacks, the person in the meantime feeling perfectly free from the complaint.

Here it will often be found that by some error of diet the patient is gradually accumulating in his system some noxious substances, which it takes a special effort of nature to throw off. Then the whole internal machinery refuses to do its ordinary work. The stomach, the intestines, the liver and other organs which produce the digestive juices almost entirely cease their regular task of rendering the food taken into the mouth fit for absorption into the system at large.

Sometimes habitual overeating will produce this result. Or a person who has been constantly active may continue to eat his usual amount of food after exchanging his occupation for some more sedentary one. In either case the result is the same; the overburdened organs become partially paralyzed, the undigested food acts as an irritant, and headache and general disorder in the digestive tract prevail.

A person who has no symptoms of stomach disorder, or who has been taught by his physician to avoid indiscretions which formerly resulted in trouble, and who still has regularly recurrent attacks of sick headache, must look to some other than these, the most common causes of such attacks.

One not uncommon cause of sick headache is irregularity of the cornea, or some other eye derangement. The skilful oculist will be able to detect any such irregularity, and to judge whether or not it is sufficient to cause the trouble.

A curious case of sick headache was lately reported, in which the cause was found to be the absorption of a certain proportion of lead which was contained in a kind of "composition" hat-band. A change to a leather band was followed by an entire cessation of the symptoms.

Sick headache is very apt to occur in school children from leaning forward over books, from imperfect digestion, or from too little exercise in the open air, and not unfrequently from a combination of these unhygienic conditions. A child who suffers from sick headaches should be promptly relieved from such unwholesome influences.—Youth's Companion.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. R. M. Blocker, Lisbon, La., Jan. 30: "The new Conference year has opened up favorably with us on the Lisbon circuit. We believe a good time is in sight. The pastor has been well received for another year, and kindly cared for. We have every department of church work well organized, and the saints of God are praying for a baptism of the Holy Ghost. At one church I am teaching a class in vocal music that we may have better singing in Sunday-school and church hymns. Our presiding elder has been around with good cheer, good sermons and honest work. We all like the ADVOCATE very much."

Rev. Jno. B. Kent, Bayou Chicot, La.: "Bayon Chicot charge, Louisiana Conference (Stump Creek circuit, for so it means in English), was reached by myself and wife on the first Monday in January, after having encountered heavy rains, swollen creeks, a two days' lay-over—water bound—and such other events and inconveniences as are necessarily incumbent upon a move across the country in a wagon. But we are here amid a kind and generous people who have warmly received us, and are comfortably housed in the parsonage. This country is open to the gospel, and I hope, by divine help, to push into the 'regions beyond,' and do a good year's work for the Master."

Rev. C. H. Pittman, P. C., Corinth circuit: "We reached Corinth for our second year's work on Corinth circuit, Dec. 15, 1893. We began agitating the parsonage subject immediately, and on Jan. 11 moved into a nice six-room house, very well furnished, and situated in one of the best communities in Corinth. The day we moved in our people expressed their appreciation for us in a most telling way. They brought us meat, molasses, flour, meal, potatoes, sugar, chickens, wood, coal, corn, and so many other things that were necessary. We made many vows to the Lord that day, and we are trying to pay them. God give us a prosperous year!"

Rev. E. Wilson, P. C., Lake Arthur, La.: "Our work is moving forward. I began a protracted meeting as soon as my health would permit after an attack of la grippe. Our meeting continued fourteen days, during which time I did all the preaching and was wonderfully blest. The church was aroused, many reconsecrating themselves to God. The visible results were five accessions and one bright conversion. The church was drawn into closer sympathy with their youthful pastor. They have joined hands in rescuing the perishing. We have a Society of Endeavor, which wields a mighty influence for good. We expect to have an additional church-building on the work at no distant day. The future is bright and hopeful, and the promise is to those who work, trusting in God."

Rev. J. W. Dorman, Starkville station, North Mississippi Conference: "On Jan. 14 we began a meeting, which resulted in one of the greatest revivals ever known in this community. From the first service unto the last the Spirit was with us in great power. A few sermons to the Christians did good work. Early in the meeting some began to be born unto God, and increased with each service until as high as twenty would be converted at a single service. Probably two hundred and fifty were converted and reclaimed during the meeting. At home, in prison, at school and at business men were converted. Card playing and dancing received especial attention, and I think a complete reformation was inaugurated. Not less than one hundred family altars were erected during the meeting. Eighty-odd joined the different churches last Sunday, more than fifty of them going into ours. Bro. McIntosh led the work, and, under God, he did a great work. May the Lord ever bless him in his work!"

W. A. Bruner, Salem, Miss.: "Will you admit a few lines from the pine hills of North Mississippi? We live in the bounds of what was last year the Banner circuit, now the Paris circuit. We have ten churches on the work. It had been hoped that the work would be divided. As our presiding elder favored the change all last year, we felt it would be done. Instead of this, however, he preserved the circuit in its old shape and has arranged for five of the churches to be served by local preachers. I write to tell you something of the Lord's wonderful power at one special point. Bro. Grisham was returned to this work. His protracted meeting, the last Conference year, embraced the first Sunday in September and was continued seven days. The results in accessions were thirty-three. Since that there have been nine accessions, with more to follow. This is beyond anything that we could have imagined. In fact, the seven days' meeting was only the beginning of a revival. There have been three prayer meetings a week all the while. Christmas week we had prayer meeting every night. Some, whose custom had been in celebrating Christmas and other holidays in worldly revelry, such as drinking egg-nog, changed their ways. They spent Christmas in attending our meeting. These prayer meetings rotate from house to house. Many say they never saw the like in the Winter time. At this point there are one hundred members. While a large per cent. of them are young, there is not a single one that we have any knowledge of that has violated the rules of the church. The devil tried to wedge in a dance various times on the borders, but failed. Success to the ADVOCATE."

THE CUISINE.

CONDUCTED BY L. A. B.

CRANBERRY JELLY.—Allow a cupful of water to a quart of berries. Cook until soft. Turn into a cheese cloth bag to drain. Allow sugar in equal measure to the juice. Boil fifteen minutes, removing the scum. When it thickens on the spoon turn (hot) into the glasses.

LEMON CREAM.—To one pint of cream add the grated rind of one lemon, one cupful of sugar, and the well-beaten yolks of four eggs, put in a double boiler and stir until it thickens. When nearly cool, put the juice of one lemon in a glass dish and pour the cream slowly over it, stir, and set on ice till ready to serve.—Rose Seelye Miller.

SALT RISING YEAST.—One cup fresh milk and one-half cup hot water. Let these come to a boil, add one-third teaspoon salt, and corn meal to make a stiff batter. Set in a vessel of warm water, and in a warm place over night. In the morning allow the batter to become thoroughly warmed, and add one-half cup warm water, with sifted flour to make a moderately stiff batter; beat well, and keep in a warm place to rise.

CELERY SOUP.—Boil a head of celery (some of the stalks not suitable for the table may be used) in a pint, or more, of water for forty-five minutes. Boil a few slices of onion in a pint and a half of milk; mix one tablespoonful of flour with a little cold milk and add to the boiling milk. Cook ten minutes. Mash celery in the water in which it was boiled and stir into the milk. Add butter, salt, and pepper to taste. Strain and serve at once.

FRUIT CAKE.—Two cupfuls of butter, four cupfuls of sugar, mix well; add two cups of milk, mix thoroughly; add beaten yolks of eight eggs, mix well; add eight cupfuls of flour; beat to a stiff froth the whites of the eggs, and add to batter with another cup of flour, in which two good teaspoonfuls baking powder is mixed. Prepare a small cup of currants, one cupful raisins, one-half cup of citron, mix a little flour with them, add to cake; bake slowly for an hour.

CABBAGE SALAD.—Have the cabbage chopped fine and in a deep dish. Put in a stewpan, over a rather hot fire, one cupful of thick sour cream. Stir in while heating the yolks of three well-beaten eggs. Add half a teaspoonful each of mustard, and sugar, and butter the size of an egg, with a dash of white pepper and salt. While cooking, stir in half a cupful of strong vinegar. This makes a smooth, thick dressing with a delicate creamy taste, superior to the old method. Pour over the cabbage while hot and mix thoroughly.—M. H. B.

CREAM-OF-CELERY SOUP.—One entire bunch of celery, or the outside stalks and leaves of two bunches, cut into small pieces and cooked soft in one quart of water, also one very small onion and two good-sized potatoes peeled and sliced, press all through a colander. Put a heaping tablespoonful of butter and the same quantity of flour into a sauce-pan, set on the stove and stir together, allowing the flour to cook, but do not brown it, to this add a pint of hot sweet cream, stir this into the strained celery, etc., season with salt and a little pepper, stir well and serve hot. Add a little water to the celery if it cooked away much.

Learn These Things.

Learn to laugh. A good laugh is better than medicine. Learn how to tell a story. A well-told story is as welcome as a sunbeam in a sick-room. Learn to keep your own troubles to yourself. The world is too busy to care for your ills and sorrows. Learn to stop croaking. If you can not see any good in the word, keep the bad to yourself. Learn to hide your pains and aches under a pleasant smile. No one cares to hear whether you have the earache, headache or rheumatism. Learn to meet your friends with a smile. The good-humored man or woman is always welcome, but the dyspeptic or hypochondriac is not wanted anywhere and is a nuisance as well.—Selected.

Blood Poisoning

Mrs. Mary E. O'Fallon, a very intelligent nurse of Piqua, Ohio, was poisoned while assisting physicians at an autopsy 5 years ago, and soon terrible ulcers broke out on her head, arms, tongue and throat. Her hair all came out. She weighed but 78 lbs., and saw no prospect of help. At last she began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla and at once improved; could soon get out of bed and walk. She says, "I was cured by Mrs. M. E. O'Fallon.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

and am now a well woman. I weigh 128 lbs., eat well and do the work for a large family. My case seems a wonderful recovery and physicians look at me in astonishment, as almost like one raised from the dead."

Heavenly Recognition

The question of "heavenly recognition" is one which greatly disturbs many pious souls. A few years since, one of our parishioners, a woman of much more than ordinary piety and intelligence, said to us, "I would be perfectly happy all the time, were it not for one thing. I have doubts as to whether I shall know my loved ones in heaven. I have no doubt that my precious little ones are 'safe in the arms of Jesus,' for he said, 'of such is the kingdom of Heaven.' I know also that my dear mother is there, for she died shouting the praises of God and talking of things unseen. But will I know them there? If not, then heaven will be robbed of half its enjoyment for me."

This good woman is a type of a large class. Experience, as a pastor, has taught us that there are many who have implicit faith in the certainty of a future state of rewards and punishments, who are nevertheless perplexed by the question, "Shall we recognize our friends in heaven?"

It seems to us that a careful study of the Scriptures ought to remove all doubt at this point. A flood of light is thrown upon this subject by the evangelistic narrative concerning the Transfiguration.

As the God-man stands in transfigured glory in the presence of the awe struck trio, Peter, James and John, two celestial ones appear upon the scene. These are not, as might have been supposed, a part of that heavenly host that "sang together and shouted for joy when the foundations of the earth were laid." No, they are of the posterity of Adam. The Holy Spirit is careful that their individuality shall be established. "There appeared unto them Moses and Elias." Let it be remembered that Moses had been dead more than fourteen hundred years, and that about eight hundred years had elapsed since Elijah's earthly career came to an end. Yet both are alive—an ocular demonstration of human immortality. And, not only this, but much more gleams upon us from this page in the sacred narrative. Moses and Elijah are not only alive, but they are in possession of all their mental powers. The whole narrative implies this. Why did they visit that particular spot at that particular time? Out of all the millions of worlds that lie within the range of celestial vision why did they choose this particular one as that to which they would make a pilgrimage? Does not this imply that they remembered this mundane sphere as their former place of abode? And was there not an intelligent choice of the particular spot of earth's soil which their feet should tread? There are five continents; why visit Asia alone? And why visit Palestine rather than any other part of Asia? Does not this imply a remembrance of the fact that this was the particular spot of earth chosen by God as the heritage of his people? And why visit Hermon rather than anyone of a thousand other peaks? And why visit it at that particular time? Why not a week sooner or later? To such questions only one answer can be given. They came at that time to that spot because they knew that Jesus was there in transfiguration glory. Though in heaven they were cognizant of mundane affairs. Moses and Elijah knew each other. They entered heaven six hundred years apart, and, therefore, had never seen each other in the flesh. Yet they gravitated together. They became acquainted with each other. They talked together of earth and its affairs; and after eight hundred years of blissful companionship they plan a joint visit to the world of their captivity. They execute the plan. Together they are seen by mortal eyes on Hermon's rugged heights. Together they engage in holy converse with the Son of God on the loftiest of all themes—the redemption of the world.

Now, how are we to regard the facts here brought to light? Are we to look upon them simply as isolated events in the world's history? Are we to learn from this page in the sacred Book the bare fact that two earth-born individuals, Moses and Elijah, know each in heaven and enjoy each other's society, talking together of their earthly experiences, and of God's dealings with a fallen race? Not so should we interpret the Book of God. These are not isolated events; they are typical facts. Moses and Elijah in this respect are not privileged above others of the blood-washed throng. Other spirits robed in light no less than they are to greet each other in the skies, and to enjoy a blissful communion of heart with heart as they talk together of their earthly experiences. Memory is not to perish in the grave. Interest in the human race and in all that pertains to its moral welfare will not cease when we cross the flood. Love will survive the "wreck of matter and the crush of worlds." These are a few of the inspiring truths that gleam upon us from this glorious page in the Book divine. The bereaved believer should not fail to appreciate the precious truths that are here revealed for his benefit. He should solace himself with a hope of a reunion with the sainted dead in realms of endless bliss.

Some Lessons of the Hard Times.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D. D.

The year 1893 will long be remembered—like the years 1837 and 1857—for its financial disasters. Very few people have escaped entirely from the widespread financial gale. How far it was produced by past legislation in regard to "silver," or apprehended legislation in regard to tariffs, this is not the place to discuss. A vast amount of disaster and bankruptcy has been produced by causes entirely disconnected with legislation by either political party. Suffering commonly means sin—not everybody's sin, although about everybody has suffered to a greater or less degree. In hard times the innocent suffer from the wrong-doings of the guilty. If every man built fireproof there would be no conflagrations; but because some built of wood or other combustible materials, and because there are careless or wicked hands to kindle flames, a whole street is endangered. The drunkard's bloated face and empty purse are not the result of ill-luck—they are the legitimate consequences of the bottle, but his poor wife and children have to bear their share of those consequences. Financial suffering is the result of financial sinning—not everybody's sin, but of somebody's sin; and during these late years there have been a great many somebodies.

In a certain good old Book—which is as wise in the things of this world as in those of the world to come—occurs the following sentence: "He that getteth riches, and not by right, shall lose them in the midst of his days, and at his end shall be a fool." Probably but few people know that there is such a passage in the Bible; and it would be a good thing to have it written up large in the counting-rooms and stock-boards and produce exchanges and every place in which business is transacted. The gist of this pithy text is that the loss of riches is very apt to come from the wrong-getting of riches. This plain truth has a great many applications. It applies to all that large class who seek a livelihood without any kind of productive labor, or any that adds to the resources of the community. Mere "speculation" (as it is called) is generally a game of hazard. It invents nothing useful, manufactures nothing valuable, and contributes nothing to the wealth of society. Its vital idea is the same as that which inspires the gambling table; its atmosphere is intensely intoxicating and demoralizing. Every financial gale sweeps down a large number of those who are attempting to get rich by their wits, and not by any honest work. Over such losses no Christian conscience will shed any tears. Would that every young man who wishes never to "end as a fool," would keep out of that witch's cave of speculative gambling!

Another very large class of self-made sufferers are those who have been recklessly living beyond their means. Their whole style of living is fictitious. The "fortunes" which they claimed to possess have proved to be fictions. Thousands of people who have taken on the airs of wealth and have grasped at the luxuries of wealth, have found out, when the time of "settlement" came, that they were really poor. And their present poverty is tenfold more respectable than their former pretension to what they never possessed. Their "losses" are the loss of what was never theirs—the mere loss of gas from an inflated balloon; and now that they are landed on terra firma they may well learn some wisdom from their tumble.

When we recall the wild furore of extravagance and self-indulgence, the mad ambitions to live on fictitious incomes a life of vain show, we discover some compensations in the sobering and salutary effects of "hard times." They are a big dose of calomel to those whose systems were terribly out of order. Hard times often harden good men's virtues, and give new fiber to their courage and self-denials. Hard times smash some of the idols that Christians are too often tempted to worship. Hard times are really the hardest on whatever is worm-eaten and worthless. Unfortunate it is that the crashing down of decayed trees often carries away some limbs from the surrounding trees which are healthy and vigorous. The mischief thus done is partial, and generally temporary; the benefits to the whole community are widespread and wholesome. My observation has been that, in the long run, very few wise, honest and industrious persons are permamanently injured by financial storms. The ships that weather out the stiff gales are the ships that bring in the best cargoes at last. Storm does not always mean shipwreck.

There is really, in God's sight, only one kind of wreck that is utterly ruinous, and that is the wreck of character. The saddest sort of reading that we encounter is the obituary column of dead reputations. Some financial bubbles have exploded; some "securities" have depreciated; but the most heart-rending losses have been the losses of conscience, of principle and of good name! These are the bankruptcies that knock the bottom out of "the market." "We have plenty of money in the street," said a banker to me; "what we want is confidence." The question asked in such times is, In whom can we confide? On every side the question is, Whom can we trust? To such questions my answer would be, You can trust God and all men who fear God and keep his commandments. Never did strict uncorruptible integrity command a higher premium. If these times of fiery trial throw out a great deal of "slag," they are also testing the pure gold gloriously. While one man after another who ventured into slippery places is catching a bad fall, "he that walketh uprightly walketh surely."

Let us hope and pray that the losses in 1893 may bring some gains in 1894. Nearly all of us may be poorer for the financial calamities of the past twelvemonth. We had better mark ourselves down lower as to the value of our assets; for there has been a shrinkage of pretty much all marketable "securities." Nearly everything has depreciated except faith and good works; they still pay grand dividends. There are many wholesome lessons to be learned in these hard times. The first one is to learn the wisdom of doing business by God's plumb-line. After Chicago was burned out, she built more fireproof dwellings and warehouses. We ought also to have a more righteous dread of debt. All debt means danger. Reckless running into it has ruined more Christians and broken more hearts than many a flagrant vice. To incur any pecuniary obligation, large or small, without a well-founded assurance of ability to repay it, is as bad as highway robbery.

Another hint for the hard times is that, in our schemes for retrenchment, let us be careful not to begin by cheating God. Some people commence their curtailment of expenditures by cutting down their gifts to wise charities; these ought to be the last to come down. The benevolent Henry Thornton, of London, subscribed ten pounds to a religious object; but soon afterward, having met with a great loss, he sent fifty pounds to the treasurer, with the remark: "I don't want to lose this, also." The safest loans are loans to the Lord; he repays with compound interest. Would you be rich toward God? Then give freely. He that saves for self loses; he that gives for Christ's sake is sure to save. Have you a clean conscience, a chance to work and a clear hope of heaven? Then you may march through this year with a light heart against any head-winds, and may sing the one hundred and third Psalm at every step.—Exchange.

Who Is the Best?

Perhaps nine out of ten, if questioned as to what kind of men are the best, or most excellent in point of character, would, without much thought, reply, They who do the most good; they who, like Wilberforce, Wesley, Whitefield, are conspicuous for remarkable benefits conferred upon men or for the trains of extended usefulness which they have set in motion.

But this would not be the right answer. The popular verdict on this, as on so many other topics, is clearly wrong. For the doing large amounts of good depends on a hundred things which have no necessary connection with high moral or religious attainments. It depends on the gifts, intellectual, social and physical, with which one is endowed. It depends on the opportunities providentially placed in one's way. It depends on the special appointment and call of God, extended to some, withheld from others. And these things, since they are not under the control of the individual, since they are independent of his will, irrespective of his choice, do not properly enter into the estimate of his character.

Who, then, is the best man? He who uniformly acts on the highest and purest principles; he who has most thoroughly got rid of self, and put in its place the divine principle of love; he who has brought his whole being most perfectly into harmony with the will of God.

Motives are the real criterion of goodness, not actions or results. He who is the idol of the churches, eloquent, magnetic, wonderfully successful in revivals, may not have a soul half so free from pride, ambition, covetousness, and other foul spirits, as many who are wholly without fame, and may have in his secret heart all the while, half unknown to himself and wholly unknown to others, things which God abhors. Those that are esteemed heroes of piety from their conspicuous self-denials frequently lose their huge proportions when viewed with a discrimating eye. To please God perfectly it does not need that we serve him much, in the usual sense of that term. Purity of intention is the main thing. Events belong to God. To seek in all sincerity and simplicity to know what he would have us do, and then to do it with our might—this belongs to us. It is within the reach of all. It may leave one in obscurity here and now, but it will bring him into splendor by and by above.—Zion's Herald.

Easter, 1894.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE DAY.

To the Pastors of North Mississippi and Mississippi Conferences:

Dear Brethren: There is a tide in the church of Christ as well as in the affairs of men. Never in the history of the State of Mississippi has there been such an opportunity to build and equip an institution of learning. The opportunity is inspiring to all lovers of Christian education. The serious question is: Shall we avail ourselves of this opportunity? Think of one Methodist layman offering to duplicate every dollar contributed to the amount of $25,000. We are needing a large hall on Millsaps College campus for the use of boys of moderate means. We are anxious to build and equip this hall by Sept. 1, 1894.

We desire to place board in the reach of boys at actual cost. Will you help us in this movement? We heartily recommend that every pastor in the two Conferences take a collection on Easter morning for this worthy cause. Let us by our contributions and influence make the year 1894 memorable in the history of Millsaps College.

Send all contributions to the financial agent, Rev. I. W. Cooper, Jackson, Miss.

I. W. COOPER.

We heartily approve the above suggestion and appointment.

Many of our readers, we are sure, will peruse with great pleasure the article entitled, "My Conversion," on our first page. The writer is in charge of "The Hebrew-Christian Mission" in New York City. He is also editor and publisher of a monthly paper called the Hebrew-Christian.

***

We fear we shall have to part company with some of our readers. This we dislike exceedingly; but we can not furnish the paper indefinitely to those who make no effort to pay up. Let those who can not just now pay all they owe, pay what they can, and thus show a willing mind.

***

We attended service last Sabbath at Rayne Memorial. After we had tried to preach, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered. The service was closed by the reception of members by the pastor, Rev. F. A. Parker. The sacredness of the vows assumed was duly emphasized.

We are in receipt of an invitation to attend the marriage of Dr. John Harrison Blanks to Miss Ida Lewis, both of Meridian, Miss. The marriage is to take place in Central Church, Meridian, on Thursday evening, Feb. 15. We extend our congratulations and wish the young couple a happy and prosperous voyage across the sea of matrimonial life.

***

We are under obligations to Prof. William Preston Johnston for a copy of his address delivered Dec. 28, 1893, before the Louisiana State Public School Teachers' Association, at New Iberia, La., on the topic, "State Education as a Factor in Our Civilization." It is just such an able, scholarly paper as we would expect from the distinguished chancellor of Tulane University.

***

The St. Louis Preachers' Meeting has declared itself in favor of a removal of the pastoral time limit. The General Conference will make quick work of all memorials of that sort. This generation will not see the time limit removed in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. This is not an inspired prophecy, but it is a true one nevertheless. If anyone doubts it, we only say, "Wait and see."

***

We are under obligations to Rev. T. B. Malone for a copy of the Journal of the North Mississippi Conference for the session held in Columbus in December, last. The journal is admirably gotten up. It has an abstract of the proceedings of each day, besides "condensed minutes," showing in the briefest possible form the answer to each disciplinary question. The reports of committees are given in full. It contains excellent portraits of Bishop Hargrove, and of Rev. J. H. Brooks and wife, Bro. Brooks being one of the preachers who had died during the year.

The Lord's Prayer.

Sermons preached in Westminster Abbey by F. W. Farrar, D. D., F. R. S., Archdeacon of Westminster. Thomas Whittaker, New York.

The sermons in this work, twenty-one in number, were not prepared for publication. They were preached by the author in the course of his regular ministry. Their publication having been called for, the author has given them to the reading public just as they were delivered from the pulpit. The style is a little less ornate than one naturally expects from Canon Farrar, and yet many will, perhaps, relish them all the more on that account, presenting as they do the author's style of spoken address. While we would not be understood as endorsing everything the author says, we nevertheless commend the work as containing much suggestive and stimulating thought.

At a recent meeting of the trustees of the proposed Methodist Episcopal University in the city of Washington $300,000 were reported as received in pledges for building an endowment. Bishop Hurst increased this amount to $400,000 by the announcement that a friend of the enterprise, who wished his name to be kept a secret, had made out the legal documents for the gift of $100,000. Other large gifts were also reported as coming in sight.—Ex.

Our Choctaw.

Be sure to read the note from S. J. Tubby in another column, and as you read remember that Bro. Tubby is a Mississippi Indian, the first fruits of Bro. Cammack's work among the Choctaws. Within a few months after Bro. Cammack's appointment to the Indian Mission, Tubby was converted, received into the church, and licensed to preach. At the first session of the Mississippi Conference after the establishment of this mission, Tubby was present, and was heard from on several different occasions. His talks touched the heart of the Conference, and greatly intensified its interest in the Indian Mission. The gospel "is the power of God unto salvation," not only "to the Jew and the Greek," but also to the red man of the forest.

Be sure to read the ad. of John Lewis Childs in another column.

The notice headed, "Wanted," may be of service to you; read it.

Wide-awake farmers should read the ad. of C. C. L. Dill in another column.

TO FARMERS AND REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

We desire to call the attention of farmers and real estate agents to the value of the ADVOCATE as an advertising medium. The ADVOCATE goes into every county and parish in Mississippi and Louisiana, and there are very few postoffices in these States where it has not some subscribers. It has also hundreds of readers in other States. Circulating as it does very largely in the rural regions, it is a most excellent medium for advertising anything pertaining to agriculture. Has a man a farm which he wishes to sell? Or does he wish to buy a farm? What more sensible thing can he do than to insert an advertisement in a paper which is read by the farmers, as the ADVOCATE. In ante-bellum days the ADVOCATE was very largely used by farmers in this way. Since the war farmers seem to think that no paper except a great daily is of any value as an advertising medium. This is a great mistake. The great dailies circulate chiefly in the towns. While the ADVOCATE has a good circulation in the towns, it goes into the country as well. Let farmers give us a trial. From now until March 1 we will make special rates on farming lands for sale or lease. Address Rev. W. C. Black, 119 Camp street, New Orleans, La.

Catarrh Twenty Years.

THREE HUNDRED DOLLARS SPENT FOR TREATMENT IN VAIN.

This is what Dr. Hartman's free course of treatment did for me: I was sick for eighteen or twenty years and did not know what was the matter with me. I expectorated a gray, stinky mucous from the throat. Every time I took cold my throat got sore, and I would have fever. I had catarrh in my head, and it commenced to affect my eyes. My nose was stopped up, and every morning I had coughing spells. I consulted several physicians, one of whom said he could cure me in six months. I kept on doctoring until I spent $300, and was not any better, but kept gradually growing worse until I was confined to the bed. I got some Pe-ru-na and it cured the catarrh in my head and my eyes are better. I don't have any more dizzy spells, my head feels clear, I can breathe through my nose, and my throat is cured. My voice is clear. My appetite is good and I sleep well. When I began taking Pe-ru-na I weighed only 121 pounds, but now I weigh 135. I wish I could tell everyone about Pe-ru-na, so that thousands more would be cured.

Letter from Simpson Tubby.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to inform the public of my plans and intentions toward advancing the cause of the Choctaw Mission through the columns of your paper. I feel that my way is open to do a great work this year, and, by the help of God, I intend to try to do my whole duty.

On the fifteenth day of January I preached on Tallashee, near the line of Newton and Neshoba, to a congregation of thirty-five Choctaws, who seemed to be very much interested, and showed an earnest desire to become more enlightened in this grand and glorious cause. Being highly and, I think, earnestly solicited by them, I have agreed to preach to them on the second Sunday in each month.

I also expect to make two or more other appointments in the bounds of the mission, probably one or more in the northeastern part of the county among those with whom I was raised. It has long been my earnest desire to exert my influence for good and labor to enlighten these people, but on account of some old difficulties that arose between my relatives and friends, I have been debarred of this privilege to a certain extent heretofore. Now, I feel that all this is settled satisfactorily to all, and I can see my way open to accomplish great good.

I ask the prayers of all Christians that I may be successful in my work for good. By the help of God I expect to hold out faithful.

S. J. TUBBY.

Parsonage and Home Mission Society.

Living as I do in Meridian, I hesitate to urge the building of parsonages in "destitute districts" lest some good brother who has faithfully served us should be forced to live over again the days of his "waiting for a home" in our midst.

When we think of what God has done for us in the past, and the noble ambassadors given us for 1894—Bros. Woodward, Little, Holloman, Lewis, Hopper and Scarbrough—these questions force themselves upon me: Is the church doing her part? Were homes awaiting these homeless ones?

The motto of our church has long been, "A preacher for every pulpit, and a pulpit for every preacher." Now, the Parsonage and Home Mission Society would add—"A home for every preacher." With united effort this can be done, and it ought to be speedily accomplished.

The seventh annual report of this society shows the wisdom of their organization. Our Bishops have indorsed our work; and three have sent stirring appeals during the past few weeks through the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to our pastors and presiding elders. Is a word to the wise sufficient?

Though the Mississippi Conference waited till the "eleventh hour" to organize a Parsonage and Home Mission Society (not till June, 1893), yet, if every minister will initiate (as he alone can) his congregation, and remember our work in prayer, our outlook is promising, and we may yet merit the plaudit, "Well done!" and bring cheer in the future, by a "Welcome home" to every pastor. May the Lord guide and abundantly bless us in this work!

Pres. Miss. Cent. P. and H. M. Society.

Notice.

To the Friends and Brethren of Bro. George Bancroft in Alabama and Mississippi:

He is now superannuated, after having served the church for forty-five years, and needs a home for himself and faithful wife. Will you not send him a small amount to help him to get one. Send by registered letter to Why Not, Miss., or postoffice order on Meridian, Miss.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

BY REV. HENRY H. AHRENS.

Theme for Prayer Meeting.

LOVE TO THE BRETHREN.
(Matt. xxii, 37, 39.)

Even the loveless and unloved—all men love love.

1. Our theme is contained in the one word, "philanthropy." But, though, meaning originally "loving mankind," it stands now mostly for benevolence and beneficence, yearning for and engaged in doing good to men. As an affection love is a wonderful impellant. In a word, love means doing good to those whom we love.

2. To love the lovable is as natural as to be attracted by the attractive. Such love is purely human. Christian love requires more. When Christ lives in us we are able to love for Christ's sake. Thus we love men, though they appear odious, love them notwithstanding antipathy and natural aversion. Love even our enemies.

3. Love is of God. Notwithstanding manifest degeneracy and moral obliquity, love survived the wreck. Parental love. Think of Cornelia: "These are my jewels." Filial love. When Garfield was inaugurated President of the United States, he gave to his mother the place of honor. Love of friends. Think of David and Jonathan, Damon and Pythias. Love of country. Says Walter Scott:

"Lives there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said:
This is my own, my native land?"

All men love home, beauty and purity.

4. Love has its reward. When filled with love, peace and happiness make their home in the heart. As the bosom, filled with enmity and hatred, is a miniature hell, that hell is converted into heaven when love drives these grim-visaged visitors away and establishes its domicile there. Filled with love, we are indeed children of God. God is love. "And if children, then heirs," etc.

Charitableness.

In his portraiture of the final judgment Christ attaches great importance to charitableness, saying: "I was a-hungered and ye gave me meat," etc. (Matt. xv, 31-46). There is so much want, so much suffering. Distress abounds.

1. Do not search for the cause of the indigence of those craving assistance. We will render aid, though the petitioner had spent his substance with riotous living.

2. Avoid extravagance in dress and food. There is room for curtailment. Spend less money for yourself. Thus you will save a sufficient amount for the relief of the poor, the sick, the distressed. Indulgence in luxury in the present hard times is an almost unpardonable sin.

3. Some give to charitable institutions and deem themselves absolved from further obligations. But there is benefit in coming in contact with the sick and poor. Visit them. Render aid.

Some Things the League of 1894 Needs.

BY REV. HENRY LEA.

A score of things might be named essential to the success of any church, of any Epworth League, or of any Christian. We prefer to emphasize a few.

1. Cordiality.—Ice-boxes and refrigerator cars have their use, but the league has no place for either. The leaguer must be warm-hearted and open-handed. Leave red tape to the lawyers, sepulchral tones to the cemetery, formality to the cathedral, and starch to the laundry. Of the latter commodity, a little more in our backbones and a little less in our manners might be an improvement.

2. Liberality.—If the leaguer would grow, let him remember that the liberal soul shall be made fat. He must have a prayer, a good word, and an open purse for every interest of the church and for every worthy charity. A stingy Christian is a monstrosity. Consecrated dollars are greatly in demand just now.

3. Intellectuality.—The young Christian of to-day is blessed as the youth of no previous age has been. Truly he has a goodly heritage. "All fields of knowledge invite, and all may be entered. But let him be sure to seek above all to be an intelligent Christian. Let him have a reason back of each article of his creed. Let him know the history, the doctrines, the great hymns of the church. Let him be acquainted with the biographies of the saints of all the ages, of whom the world was not worthy."

4. Spirituality.—Last of all, best of all, and bracing all, is spirituality. Lack of the graces preceding is generally at bottom caused by a lack here. The spiritual soul is likely to be cordial, liberal, and intellectual. Desirable as are the other three, they are dead without spirituality. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

We need the gospel of the handshake, the gospel of the consecrated purse, the gospel of the study, but above all the gospel of communion with God.—Epworth Herald.

Mississippi Conference Minutes.

I commenced to send out the Minutes to the pastors on Tuesday, Jan. 30. This was just fifteen days later than the printer promised. He found that he had not enough figures for the statistics, and had to stop work and wait to get a new supply from the foundry. I had to guess at some of the postoffices. If pastors don't receive their Minutes, let them write at once that I may direct them to the proper office. I distribute the entire 3,000 copies; hence there are none to be supplied or sold. C. G. Seeds! World's Fair Medal & Diploma.

My exhibit of Seeds and Garden Vegetables was awarded several Premiums and a Special Diploma by Piedmont Exposition Judges in 1891. Encouraged by this success, I sent a collective lot of seeds to the World's Fair, and was awarded Medal and Diploma for best collection there. This is high endorsement, for the seed met in competition those great seed houses of this country, but mine got there beautifully. I have had experience with the various seeds offered the farmers, and my judgment says the collection below is the best. The collection is a choice selection of Garden Vegetable Seeds, and is gotten up with the idea of establishing a seed business: 28 papers (extra large) of choice Vegetable Seed; 1 package containing 200 Annuals (Flower); 1 package of my Cotton, "King's Improved," 1 package of my Corn, "King's Improved"—all prepaid for $1. Circulars telling all about my Seed free. Address

Is Different from Others.

It is intended to aid the planter in selecting the Seeds best adapted for his needs and conditions and in getting from them the best possible results. It is not, therefore, highly colored in either sense; and we have taken great care that nothing worthless be put in, or nothing worthy be left out. We invite a trial of our Seeds. We know them because we grow them. Every planter of Vegetables or Flowers ought to know about our three warrants; our cash discounts; and our gift of agricultural papers to purchasers of our Seeds. THE OLD-FASHIONED WIFE.

I sit in the dusk of life's even divine,
And look at a hand that lies softly in mine,
Its freshness is gone; it has wrinkles and seams,
Though it is the hand that once gilded my dreams,
And the one which I held in the chapel one morn,
When whistled the wind through the tassels of corn,
Ere the great yellow stalks felt the husbandman's knife;
'Tis the soft, cherished hand of the old-fashioned wife,

We've journeyed together in smiles and in tears,
We've felt the rough hand of the sorrowing years;
The old-fashioned cradle the children adored,
With dear little shoes, in the attic is stored;
And back from the past, with its mists and its shine,
A lullaby comes with a cadence divine;
And I turn, as I hear, from the world and its strife
To the tear-moistened eyes of the old-fashioned wife.

I know she is thinking of years that are fled,
The girls who are living, the boys who are dead;
I know she remembers the sweet long ago,
Ere the fingers of Time touched her tresses with snow.
She never has murmured, whatever her lot;
Her love could make pleasant the dreariest spot;
She lived for the home made serene by her life,
For patient and kind was the old-fashioned wife.

The beauties who dazzle in diamonds and lace,
My dream of her beauty can never efface;
She never wore satin; her best wedding gown
Was the gingham I brought from the neighboring town;
And thus in the glooming we sit side by side,
Almost at the fringe of the mystical tide;
And our fingers entwine at the twilight of life,
As I kiss the soft lips of the old-fashioned wife.

The Art of Going Without.

BY ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS.

A thoughtful man, to whom life had brought a heavy share of what we are accustomed, for want of a polite phrase, to call discipline, once said:

"When God sends a new trouble upon me, I set myself to work at once to bear it as well as I can, hoping that I may be able in this way to bring about the effect upon my character which he has in mind as an end in chastising me, and so—who knows?—possibly shorten the duration or dimish the severity of the experience."

This was said by one of the contemplative, solitary Christians whose close attention to the problems of the inner life gives something resembling a spiritual shrewdness to their methods of thought—a something, by the way, which really may deserve, at the least, as much respect as that worldly wisdom to which we so heartily defer in the experience of men of affairs.

Whether or not the individual conclusion of this wise saint can be converted into a general maxim, it is plainly true that the final cause of an affliction is already half gained when one has learned to bear it.

The monetary strain through which our nation has been passing will bring a vast amount of familiar misery upon thousands of people well used to being miserable in certain familiar ways, but it will bring upon other thousands of another sort a species of suffering as new as if they were expatriated to an undeveloped planet.

It is these who have the lesson of the times to learn. People who have gone cold and hungry and homeless and hopeless before—they are the post-graduates in the great university of hardship; and while they may need immediate relief more than their hitherto more fortunate fellows, they need education less.

The men and women who have never gone without, or who have not gone without for so long that they have forgotten they ever knew how, are the most pitiable pupils of this hard school. They stand at the foot of the long class which present distress and anxiety for the future are training from end to end of our troubled land. . . .

The practice of economy needs training as much as the practice of any other science; and the worst of a situation like the present is that so many of us are forced into the exercise of a skill for which we are without education of hand or brain or spirit.

"There always seems to be some conclusive reason why I have to buy the most expensive things," said, plaintively, a lady whom I once accompanied to make a trifling purchase. She paid two dollars for an article for which I had never paid more than fifty cents. She had lost property, and every dime counted to her slender purse.

But, blessed be the brave old law which puts man upon his mettle to conquer the unconquerable! There is a great deal of satisfaction to be got out of pecuniary perplexities, if one goes to work intelligently to get it. The art of going without may be made as graceful and as winsome as it is difficult.

"The family had lost two fortunes," said a guest from a Southern home. "I was with them once when we had nothing to eat for three weeks but fried potatoes, three times a day. And I never was so happy in my life." . . .

Like everything else in this life, poverty, whether relative or absolute, can be made a cross or a crown. It is all in the way we take it. Who of us has not known homes where the sweet, bright spirit that ruled them has wrought romance out of sodden care and rude denial? In later life, when we look back upon the deprivations of our first youth, what is it that we most vividly remember—the things we had, or the things we did not have? A hundred to one, I venture to say, we recall the glory of possession rather than the gloom of denial. The little inventions and plots and plans by which a quick brain and a cheery heart contrive to bridge the black chasm between demand and supply "hold fast all that they gave us" of the sweetest things in character and the bravest things in love. . . .

The art of going without may be slowly, but it can be brightly, learned. It needs due patience, some pluck, and, doubtless, the proper share of Christian grace and resignation. But it needs something else, if I may say so, just as important, and more apt to be overlooked. It needs the mere worldly qualities of good spirits, and good sense, and inventive ability. It is not enough distinctly to buy no new clothes, or go without furs, or substitute corned-beef for sirloin roast, or a corn-cob pipe for regalias. It is worth while to see "the fun" in it, since it has got to be done. It is not enough to cut down the open fires, and curtail the egg bills, and wear the overcoat shiny in the seams, or even to resign from the club and read the magazines of the public library. Rather make an interesting game of deprivation, and play for the stakes of sweet temper, and a merry courage, and the class of values which are to be had by going without another class.

One of the most exquisite courtship scenes in all literature is that where George Eliot's Dorothea naively cries to her poor and proud young lover: "I don't mind about poverty. . . . Oh, I want so little—no new clothes—and I will learn what everything costs!"

It is not easy to say, till one has studied the matter in the school of absolute experience, how few things there are in life that can be classified as the must-be, the essential.

When the horses' feet are gone, one's own are left. When the cook refuses reduction of wages, there is the cook-book, and brain and hands to use it. Must the parlor be repapered? But why? Must the boy have the dues for his secret society? Let him earn them, as his father did before him. "I lived all Summer at Cottage City," said the mistress of one of our most complex Boston mansions, "with one maid, and only four dishes to cook with."

Some of us can remember how the smoothly sliding scale of expenditure mounted years ago—when two pairs of kid gloves a year would do, where two dozen are needed now; when cream was not a necessity to coffee; when one was expected to be quite ill before the fire was lighted in one's bed-room in January. Was life, after all, so much harder then? Is it so much easier now? In fine, how serious is the affliction of plain living and high thinking? It is not hazarding much to say that it is the lightest to which fate has seen fit to expose our tossed and tested lives.

That was a wise philanthropist who dared to say: "Cold and hunger are not the worst things in the world." At all events, to think so is going far toward making ready to endure them should they indeed befall.—The Outlook.

CLING TO THY MOTHER.

BY LOUISE S. UPHAM.

Oh, little ones, cling to your mother
With kisses pure and sweet!
For life's golden sands are fallen,
And weary may be her feet;
And a-near the golden street
Already may be her feet.

Oh, little ones, cling to your mother
With loving look and tone!
For when the fields are ripened
The harvester claims his own,
And you may stand alone
When the Reaper claims his own.

Oh, little ones, cling to your mother,
And strive to lighten her cares!
For your hearts and lives are richer
For a mother's earnest prayers.
When she climbs the golden stairs,
You will miss her bedside prayers,

Oh, little ones, cling to your mother;
No love can be half so dear
As the love that crowds with blessings
Each blissful, priceless year.
But the evening may be near—
The eve of life's best year!

Oh, little ones, cling to your mother
Ere the gathering shadows fall,
And only echoes mock you
When her precious name you call.
Oh, the darkness over all
When her name in vain you call!

Oh, little ones, cling to your mother
With kisses pure and sweet!
For the light of her loving counsel
Will be as a lamp to your feet,
On, on to the golden street,
To light your timid feet.

Mother Love.

BY MRS. M. ELLA CORNELL.

"Yes," said an old lady to me. "This is a photograph of my only son Charlie. His father died when he was but a child, and since then he has been all I have had to live for. He is married now and has left me, but I love him just as well as I ever did. We had a pleasant home together, but his bride wanted a home of her own, so, of course, I had to give him up.

"I shall never forget the night previous to his wedding. He slept in the apartment adjoining mine, and it was my custom every night, from the time he was a little child, to go into his room before retiring to see that everything was comfortable for him. When he was a little boy I used to tuck the cover down around him and kiss him good-night; as he grew to be a man, however, he would often be out so late in society that I would have to retire before he returned home. But I never failed to light the gas in his room, turn back the covers from his bed, and hang his dressing-gown by the register. I loved to do it, because it told him I was thinking of him. On the night before his wedding I had made everything comfortable for him, and as I was ready to leave the room, I paused by the bedside, and oh, such a feeling of desolation and loneliness swept over me as I realized that this was the last time I would ever have these little offices to do for him. I fell on my knees beside the bed, and I wept as I had not wept before since his father died. I laid my cheek upon his pillow and thought of the little curly-headed boy I had watched grow up to manhood, who to-morrow was to leave me, whose home was to be no more my home, whose pathway in life was to get farther and farther from mine each day. I thought I had become reconciled to the fact, but at that moment a great wave of sorrow and loneliness seemed to overwhelm me. However, after giving way to my grief for a while, I turned in prayer to my Savior and thanked him for that blessed promise of his, which holds so much of comfort for lonely hearts, 'I will never leave thee nor forsake thee.'"

As I listened to these words my eyes filled with tears of sympathy, and it was, doubtless, due to this fact that the speaker was led to say as much as she did to me, a comparative stranger, whom she had known but a few weeks, meeting as we did at a Summer resort.

Young man reading these lines, do you know how much your mother loves you? Do you know that this mother's experience would be the experience of almost every mother's heart under similar circumstances? Change the old adage a little and read it thus:

"A son is a son 'till he gets a wife,
But a mother's a mother all the days of her life."

You may have more than one wife, but you can never have but one mother.

If you knew how an affectionate word from her boy thrills a mother's heart with happiness and delight, you would not be so indifferent.

If you knew how sweet an unasked-for kiss is to her, you would often bestow it.

If you knew how some little helpful deed, which is naught for your young, strong arms, but is a task for her, is appreciated, you would oftener lift her burdens.

Young man, stop and think! If you do, you will be a more loving, affectionate, dutiful son in the year that lies before us, than you were in the one that is past.

It is likely you will marry; God intends that you shall do so; but when another takes the first place in your heart that the dear mother has filled so long, make the trial for her as light as possible. Just about that time do not keep all your endearments for your sweetheart, but give your mother more than her usual share.

A man can find room in his heart for a new love without driving out his dear mother at all.

How to Take Life.

"It's awful tiresome to be a girl," said a miss of thirteen Summers, as she folded up her work and put it carefully away in her basket. "It is nothing but 'Don't do this!' and 'Don't do that!' and 'Do this just so!' and 'Do that the other way!' from morning until night. I just get tired of living, indeed I do!" and two big tears fell upon her hands as silent punctuation marks in her conversation.

"My dear child," said her teacher, "did you ever read about the training of Victoria, Queen of Great Britain? She was likely to be a queen some day, and this her mother knew. The Duchess of Kent was one of the wisest of women, and from the time little Victoria was a tiny girl her entire training was to one purpose, that she might worthily rule a great nation. When she was old enough to understand about such things, her possible responsibilities were explained to her, and when she sighed and complained, as she sometimes did, it was only necessary to remind her that some day she might be queen, and how would an ignorant, careless queen manage the affairs of such an intelligent, cultured people.

"Now, I do not suppose that you are likely to be a queen in any such sense as Victoria is, but you are, if you live to be a queen of a beautiful realm called home, and every day's lessons well learned will make you more and more fit for your responsibilities and duties. Life is a very earnest thing, a very solemn thing, if you look at it in its great depth and comprehensiveness. I don't mean that you should be solemn yourself, or feel called upon to go about burdened with the weight of the world's woes and sorrows. You know the Bible says that 'A merry heart doeth good like a medicine.' Learn to be cheerful and bright and sunshiny. Be helpful and hopeful, good-natured and obliging. It makes good friends and keeps them, and that is one of the most important things in life. Try to learn something useful every day and hour, even when you are amusing yourself. It comes easy after a while, as great ones. There is an old and very true saying that trifles make up the sum of life, and little things make or mar the harmony of every-day affairs."—New York Ledger.

Home Influence.

Our country will be what our homes make it. No homes would mean no government, no social order, no good morals, no personal development. Poor homes, without law, or order, or refinement, or Christian enlightenment, mean anarchy, degradation, crime. Hence the folly of all schemes of social life which minify the home by bringing in an order of communism, a social conglomeration and coalescence where the individuality of home life is obliterated. Individualize the home; hedge it about; build it up on a scriptural basis, and let it be the fortress of our civilization.

GUICE—Mrs. SUSAN REED GUICE. It is a privilege to have known intimately the subject of this memorial. Her life was an embodiment of Christian virtues. Under the transforming power of the Divine Spirit she was enabled to live a life of such faithfulness, kindness, modesty and beauty as was at once a charm and a blessing to all about her.

Mrs. Susan Reed Guice was born in Ross county, Ohio, May 26, 1819, and died in Natchez, Miss., Nov. 24, 1893. Her parents moved to Warrenton, Miss., in 1820, and thence to Natchez in 1828. Here she became a member of the Methodist Church in 1830. In 1844 she was married to the late Stephen L. Guice, with whom she lived in happy wedlock until his death, which occurred near Natchez, Miss., in 1879. They had seven children, four of whom are living.

Sister Guice was a dutiful wife, a fond mother, and ever a diligent worker in the church. Her pastors can never forget her zeal for the cause of Christ and her helpfulness to them. Though never ambitious for leadership, she was courageous in duty and hesitated not to do what she felt to be right, even in the face of opposition. She realized in old age the advantage of having cultivated in youth a fondness for reading. In books she found company. Her taste was pure and discriminating, and she sweetly drew a little granddaughter into close sympathy and companionship with her in this love of good literature. Her advanced years presented a beautiful picture of motherly devotion and Christian faithfulness. She loved all that pertained to our holy religion and the Methodist Church.

She had no fear of death, but said, "It is like the passing into another room, where unspeakable things will be revealed." She died at the home of her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Dicks, of Natchez, with whom she had spent most of her widowhood.

W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

WALTERS—Died, on Sicily Island, Dec. 2, 1893, CHARLES DAVID WALTERS, aged eighteen years and two months.

He was sick four days. Most of the time his suffering was intense. About two days before his death he realized that death was near, and talked freely on the subject. About twenty-four hours before he died he said to his father: "Pa, I am not afraid to die." He was conscious to the last. Just before his departure he called his mother to him, and said: "Now, mama, kiss me good-by." She placed her lips to his; he put his arms around her neck and kissed her four or five times. Then, loosing his arms, he said: "Farewell, mama; meet me in heaven." The same was done and said to the father and sister. He then asked for all in the house—perhaps fifteen persons—to come—all of whom he took by the hand and exhorted to meet him in heaven. This done, he said: "Good-by to all; tell all to meet me in heaven." He then placed his hands across his breast, and said: "Now come, Lord Jesus, and let me fly home." After which he quietly fell asleep.

Oh, that his friends may fulfill his last request!

LEGGETT—BESSIE LAOCETT, daughter of A. J. and Mrs. M. E. Leggett, was born June 20, 1889, and died Jan. 18, 1894. A sweeter child we have never known. Indeed, it would be hard to magnify her sweet characteristics. Beautiful, affectionate and vivacious, she was a favorite of all who knew her. The manner of her death was horrible. Her clothing caught fire, and ere her mother could reach her the flames had enveloped her body and were playing above her head, and when they were subdued beautiful little Bessie was changed into an object of pity and pain. After suffering intensely for forty hours death relieved her.

I went to her and asked her if she knew me. She took my finger in her little burned hand, and as she looked me in the face a beautiful smile played over her sweet face. That smile I can never forget.

None but a parent knows the depths of sadness such visits bring; but we should remember that God is too "wise to err and too good to do wrong." We have not a doubt that this precious little one is in heaven, and will there wait to welcome us at the end of our earthly pilgrimage.

BIRDSONG—The first Quarterly Conference of Edwards station, Mississippi Conference, for 1894, ordered spread upon its minutes and published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE the following expression of their feelings in regard to the recent departure from among us of its oldest member:

Bro. JABED J. BIRDSONG, who departed this life at the ripe age of eighty-three years, has been connected with the official Board of circuits, of which this church formed a part, and of this station, for about forty years—perhaps more—for a long time being president of the Board of Stewards. So long as health and strength availed he was energetic and active in the work of the church. This continued to a remarkable age. Ever genial, courteous and kind, he illustrated many of the most beautiful phases of Christian conduct. Attentive to the Word and ordinances of God's house, he was a helpful hearer to his preacher and a fine example herein to all his fellow-members. With chastened gratitude that he was so long spared to the church and the world, we would bow reverently to the will of the great Head of the church; "and the tear of regret, though in secret it rolls, shall long keep his memory green in our souls."

To his children of three generations we tender our warm Christian sympathy, commending them to the God of all consolation. May they all, with ourselves, meet him where parting is no more!

DURHAM—Near Winona, Miss., Dec. 30, 1893, MOLLIE I. DURHAM, daughter of Marion and Casandre Lusk. She was born near Kilmichael, Miss., Oct. 3, 1864. In 1878 she made a profession of religion. During the same year she joined the Methodist Church, and in 1881 joined the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at New Bethel, of which, till the day of her death, she was a faithful member. On Jan. 24, 1886, she was happily married to Walter T. Durham, and moved to his home near Winona. Her father dying soon after her marriage, her mother has had a home under her roof, where her every want was supplied.

Sister Durham has gone in and out among us for the last eight years, and though a member of another church, has been as active in her labors for the Methodist Church, of which her husband is an official member, as any of our own members.

She breathed out her young life in the arms of her sorrowing husband at ten o'clock P. M., Dec. 30, leaving her aged mother, herself on a sick bed, and a bright little girl to his care and keeping.

Just starting out in life with favorable temporal surroundings, few had a brighter prospect for a long and happy life; but, alas! a few short hours blights the blooming prospect and casts a gloom over that happy home. But we still recognize that the Lord reigns, and that righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne.

W. H. HOLMES.

CONNELL—Mrs. ELIZABETH CONNELL was born in Washington county, Fla., Sept. 15, 1834; was married to Elias F. Connell, Feb. 2, 1854. She died at Knox Point, Bossier parish, La., on Dec. 17, 1893.

She was for forty years a devout and consecrated member of the M. E. Church, South. She was devoted to her church. Only sickness kept her away from its services. She "looked well to the ways of her household" and "ate not the bread of idleness." As a mother, "she opened her mouth with wisdom," and in her tongue was the law of kindness. She was devoted to her family, but she was no less considerate for her friends; and the orphan, the poor and the stranger found her ready to befriend and help them. She will dwell in the memory of those who knew her until they join her on the other shore. Her faith gave her Christian power in this life and upheld her in the hour of death. When her physician told her that she had but a short time to live she called her children around her bedside, and uttered the sweetest words of resignation and gave assurance that all was well with her soul. Tenderly and calmly she gave to each child a few words of counsel and a mother's blessing. Holy hour! Blessed scene! May its memories linger with her children for years to come and serve to lead them to heaven! She leaves eight children, five of whom are members of the church she loved so well.

TYLER—WILLIAM GLANVILLE TYLER was born on Cope' Hill, city of Boston, May 18, 1804, and died in Tylertown, Pike county, Miss., Nov. 23, 1893. When three years old he, with his parents, removed to Andover, where he grew to manhood. About the year 1833 he came South, and lived for some time in the State of Louisiana, living in the city of New Orleans, also near Covington for awhile. From Louisiana he came to Mississippi, and lived for some time in Marion county. In 1836 he settled permanently in Tylertown, Pike county, Miss.

Bro. Tyler was twice married: First to Miss Mary L. Connally in 1837, by whom he had five children. The second time he married Mrs. Nancy Sandifer, who only lived two years. He spent the remaining years of his life with his children. The last ten years he spent with his son-in-law, Bro. D. N. Ball, where he received every attention that willing feet and hands and loving hearts could devise and perform.

Bro. Tyler was converted and joined the church at Warner Camp Ground about 1841, and for over fifty years lived a consistent life, and died a triumphant death. The writer preached his funeral sermon from II. Cor. v, 1. May God bless the bereaved ones!

M. J. MILLER.

Tylertown, Miss.

COBB—JOHNNIE COBB died Dec. 28, 1893, aged ten years and eighteen days. She was the daughter of John S. Cobb. Little Johnnie was a very sweet child. She was a member of the M. E. Church, South. I have seen her happy in the love of God. She was kind and affectionate to all. She was a great sufferer, but bore her sufferings with great resignation. A few days before her death she told her father that she did not want to get well. She expected to meet her mother at the pearly gates. May God bless the father in his great affliction!

Dear ones, be faithful, and in a little while you shall meet your loved one.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

Moderation is the silken string running through the golden chain of all virtues.—Fulton

Timothy Davis, postmaster at Pattersonville, La., says: "Some years ago, while living in Algiers, I contracted a cough that everyone thought would cause my death. I was unable to sleep, had night-sweats, and soon became too weak to work. I had several doctors and tried many remedies, but with no improvement. An old friend hearing of my condition recommended Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. It had cured him of a serious lung trouble, and he had great confidence in Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar. Before three bottles had been taken I was up and about, a well man. It saved my life. I always recommend it for consumption, asthma, bronchitis, any lung or throat trouble." One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

SEED FOR TRIAL PURPOSES ONLY.
WE HAVE EVERY SEED IN EXISTENCE.

There is no Money in Cotton at 8c.

There is an active, strong demand for long staples at 16c. Then why not plant it? Your answer is: Because none of the long staples will make enough to the acre to justify planting them even at 16 cts. per lb.; it is difficult to gin it properly; it is hard to pick out, and lands will not produce staples, and so on.

Inland Sea Island is a long staple cotton in which all objections are removed. It ENORMOUSLY PRODUCTIVE, easily ginned and no trouble to pick out. You can make it with no extra expense or trouble. See what Mr. Jeff Welborn has to say.

NEW BOSTON, TEX., Dec. 5, 1893.
RICHMOND SEED CO.,
Richmond, Va.:
This is to certify that I had "Inland Sea Island" cotton planted in alternate plots with Sea Island, Allison's Silk, Allen's latest improved long staple, Ozier Silk, Southern Hope, and some other varieties of long lint. The Inland Sea Island was a great deal earlier than any of them, and made one-third more lint per plot (of same size) than any, and double as much as any save one variety (Ozier Silk). While the lint was no longer than the Allen, it was much finer, softer and richer-colored than it or any except Sea Island and Allison's Silk, but it made four times as much per plot as either of these two. * * * I think your Inland Sea Island a big jump forward in the long lint business, because of its Earliness and Prolificness. * * *
Very truly, JEFF WELBORN.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Geo. W. Childs, philanthropist and editor of the Public Ledger, died in Philadelphia, on Feb. 3, aged sixty-three years.

Over 900 patients were cared for in the Methodist hospital of Brooklyn last year. A noble work of practical Christianity.

Gen. John B. Gordon, the soldier and statesman, delivered a lecture on "The Last Days of the Confederacy," in this city, on Feb. 2.

Several New England mills are to establish branches in the South, owing to the advantages possessed by this section in having the raw material close at hand and a reliable and cheap labor market.

A destructive wind and rain storm struck Birmingham, Ala., on Feb. 3, blowing down the Congregational Church in which the Christian Endeavor Society was holding a meeting. Over thirty persons were more or less injured.

The suit recently brought by the Knights of Labor, in the District of Columbia Supreme Court, against the Secretary of the United States Treasury, to enjoin him from issuing $50,000,000 of Government bonds, was decided against the Knights.

The Treasury Department began, on Feb. 5, to pay the bounty claims at the rate of $100,000 per day, and at an even livelier rate a little later on, should the condition of the treasury warrant it, as is now hoped and believed. This assurance that the bounty money will now begin to flow in freely will be welcome news to the sugar planters and merchants.

The Secretary of the Treasury has considered the proposals submitted for the new five per cent. loan, and has accepted the bids, naming a higher price than 117.223. The proposals submitted at the upset price have been scaled down 5.321 per cent., and the amount of bonds allotted under this reduction, together with the subscriptions accepted in full, is $50,000,000.

The joint congressional committee, consisting of members of each House of Congress, appointed to investigate the personnel of the navy, has begun its preparations for the work in hand, and a determination is expressed to make the investigation as thorough as practicable with the hope of being able to make some recommendations which will remedy such evils as may now exist.

The National Lancers, of Boston; the Governor's Grays, of Dubuque, Iowa; the Burgesses Corps, of Albany, N. Y.; Gate City Guards, of Atlanta, Ga., and the Old Guard of New York City, besides delegations from a number of other prominent military organizations in various parts of the country, are in this city this week as visitors and participants in the carnival festivities.

During the past two weeks there has been a gradual, but pronounced, advance in all the leading sugar markets of the world. The sellers of raw sugar in New York have advanced the price of centrifugals, of 96 degrees test, nearly half a cent, while the producers of sugar in Cuba have raised their limits an equal amount. In London there has been a steady advance in prices, and everywhere there appears to be a disposition to still further raise the cost of sugar.

Mr. Carlisle said, on Feb. 2, that he intended to take up the subject of the sugar bounty claims, and that he hoped the department would be able to resume payments this week. During January only $10,687 was disbursed for sugar bounty, and that sum went to the maple sugar producers. The total amount of sugar bounty claims received at the internal revenue bureau from July 1, 1893, to Feb 1, 1894, is $7 344,779, of which only $475 436 have been paid, and there remains before the department claims to the amount of $6 869,342. Members of the Louisiana delegation have repeatedly urged upon the department the necessity of paying the sugar bounty, but the claims have been held up on account of the condition of the treasury.

FOREIGN.

Damascus, the oldest inhabited city in the world, is soon to have a railroad. An American has contracted to build it, a distance of 148 miles, for $5 570,000.

Concalves, Peixoto's admiral, while going to the rendezvous at Bahia, to take command of the newly-formed government squadron, was run down by the Republica, the rebel vessel, and surrendered.

Mr. John Redmond and the other members of the Parnellite party have issued a manifesto to Irishmen appealing for funds, and declaring that the present government of Ireland is a confessed failure, that it is the same as the conservative government, and that home rule has been thrust aside.

The news from Brazil during the past few days has thrown little additional light upon the events which transpired in the harbor of Rio during the first part of the present week. It appears that as a result of the action of Admiral Benham in resolutely protecting American vessels while loading and unloading cargo, the blockade, as far as it affects foreign commerce, has been officially raised. The insurgent admiral, seeing that he could not interfere with American vessels, has agreed to permit vessels of all nationalities to approach the landing freely.

Why Hood's Wins.

It is especially gratifying that the sale of Hood's Sarsaparilla increases most rapidly in those sections where it is best known.

The inference is plain. Hood's Sarsaparilla has proven that it possesses genuine merit. It maintains a high standard, which others can not even approach. It is the people's favorite blood-purifying and building-up medicine, and is more popular this year than ever before. All this because HOOD'S CURES.

Drawing Preacher.

A pastor who will draw is in great demand. The pernicious custom of looking to the pastor alone to attract the people and hold them has been the ruin of some churches. The pastor can not fill the house. He will do well if he fills the pulpit. The church members must fill the pews. This they can do by being present every service, and by inviting others, and by treating strangers in such a way that they will desire to return, and by praying and laboring for the conversion of souls. If none are drawn to the church except those whom the minister draws, there will be a few remaining when he is gone. It is far more important to have a drawing church than a drawing pastor.—Exchange.

For General Debility

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. R. D. FAIREX, New Orleans, La., says: "I have almost universally seen good effects produced by it in diseases of the male organs of generation, general debility and pulmonary diseases."

We once called upon a family of professing Christians, and confused them by asking for the Bible; it was finally found up stairs in a bureau drawer, the only Bible in the house, unused by a large family living in a large white house in a village.—Western North Carolina Advocate.

The Burlington Hawkeye says: "More people stop thinking to talk than stop talking to think." If there were more thoughts and less chatter, Darwin would have less foundation for his theory.

Once in a while an article reaches the office of a newspaper editor in perfect readiness for print. Every word is correctly spelt; every sentence is complete; each paragraph is clearly indicated; all needed punctuation marks are in place; there is no superfluous verbiage to be erased; there are no additions, or subtractions, or modifications needed in any way to fit it for the compositor's hands. It is written on a timely topic; it has sense, force, directness and meaning; and the handwriting is legible, or, better still, the article is type-written. Do you know what happens to that manuscript, no matter how many other articles may be on hand which have merit and strength? It goes into print without delay. On the other hand, manuscripts that need to be corrected, punctuated, abbreviated, modified, recopied, hashed, threshed, and ground in an editorial mill before they are ready for print, get piled up in drawers, and on tables, and out-of-way shelves, the editor vainly hoping for a time of leisure to come by and by, when he may revise, and doctor, and shape up the contributions, so that they will appear at their best in cold type.—Central Advocate.

"Look and Live."

MR. EDITOR: I write a great deal, and, therefore, have to write fast, and my hand is not easily read by those not used to it.

Please insert the two following seperate sentences as here corrected:

"No slip-shod manners, nor half-way measures, will be accepted by the Almighty."

"And what makes the folly all the more absurd is, that saving of the soul on the Lord's plan is the surest and best way of securing everything else needed for well-being and happiness in this life even."

D. W. FOSTER.

Plaisance, La.

Silence is no certain token
That no secret grief is there;
Sorrow which is never spoken
Is the heaviest load to bear.

Seldom can the heart be lonely
If it seek a lonelier still,
Self-forgetting, seeking only
Brighter cups of love to fill.

'Twill not be a fruitless labor,
Overcome this ill with good:
Try to understand your neighbor,
And you will be understood.

The Best Men Wanted.

"Yes, sir; we want some good men, men of first-class character and ability to represent us. Among our representatives are many of the noblest and best men in America, and parties of that stamp can always find a splendid business opportunity at our establishment." That is the way Mr. B. F. Johnson, of the firm B. F. Johnson & Bro., Richmond, Va., stated the case in reference to their advertisement in this paper.

The Highest Award.

DR. PRICE'S BAKING POWDER RECEIVES IT.

(Chicago Tribune.)

For leavening power, keeping qualities, purity and general excellence the World's Fair jury decided that Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder had no equal On each of its claims it was awarded a first prize or a diplome. All the baking powders entered for prizes were subjected to a most exhaustive examination, and the jury was the best equipped to make the decision of any ever got together. Their verdict was supported by the testimony of Dr. H W. Wiley, chief chemist of the United States Department of Agriculture at Washington. Dr. Wiley is an expert on food products and the highest authority on such matters in America. This verdict settles a long-debated question as to which among the many baking powders is the best.

A Beautiful and Complete Catalogue.

The Catalogue for 1894 issued by Mr John Lewis Childs Seedsman and Florist, of Floral Park, N Y., is really a marvel and a masterpiece in the art of catalogue making. Consists of about 200 pages, and is in the form of three distinct catalogues bound together. one representing Seeds, another Bulbs and Plants, and the third Nursery Stock. Its stipple lithograph cover and numerous colored plates are radiantly handsome. Each one of the thousand or more cuts are new and of a unique design. All the reading matter has also been re-written so that the entire contents of this large Book-Catalogue, cuts, reading matter, designs and make-up, is entirely new. Tou paper used is of a fine finish and the presswork is done in exquisite bronze violet and brown colors. It is the most charming Horticultural work ever issued.

An Appeal to the Young People of Mississippi.

Dear Young Friends: Millsaps College needs a large hall for young men of limited means. We must build it. The hall is a necessity. Would it not be a handsome work for the young Mississippians to furnish the agent with money to build this hall? If we can get at the work right, we can do it. I want the young Methodists of Mississippi to send me five thousand dollars. Let us go to work in earnest. Let the young people from five to twenty-one years of age send me from fifty cents to one dollar each. Let every church and community be represented. The name and amount will appear in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. May our Father inspire your hearts, dear young friends, to help us build this hall! Let me hear at once from you. Your friend,

I. W. COOPER.

Jackson, Miss.

P. S.—Remember Major Millsaps duplicates every cent you send.

Why suffer with asthma when the famous Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup will cure you.

The papers announce the complete annihilation by an earthquake of the town of Kutecan, Persia. Twelve thousand people were killed in the awful disaster. The beautiful town of 20,000 people is a scene of desolation and death.

What Causes Pimples?

Clogging of the pores or mouths of the sebaceous glands with sebum or oily matter.

Nature will not allow the clogging of the pores to continue long, hence, inflammation, pain, swelling and redness.

What Cures Pimples?

The only reliable cure, when not due to a constitutional humor, is CUTICURA SOAP.

It dissolves sebaceous or oily matter, reduces inflammation, soothes and heals irritated and roughened surfaces, and restores the skin to its original purity.

Besides being the most effective skin purifying and beautifying soap, it is the purest, sweetest, and most delicate of toilet soaps.

A PETITION.

BY GERTRUDE BRESLAU DAVIES.

Grace for to-day, Father, is all I ask;
Strength to perform my nearest task;
Naught for to-morrow do I crave.
Let me the harvest of the present save.

There is no future I can ever know;
'Tis in the present I must reap or sow;
The good or evil all in to-day I do.
For worthy labor, then, Father, my strength renew.

Worthy labor brings truest happiness;
From sad hearts lifts half their heaviness;
Thrills numbed souls with sense of life;
On gloomiest lives throws gleams of light.

Let not my smallest duties be deferred.
The pleasant smile, the low-spoken, cheering word;
The timely aid some fainting soul may need;
The sowing of one tiny, pregnant seed.

What, though, the drops of perspiration form upon my brow,
And agony thrill through each sinew as I bow
My shoulder to the yoke; and if I sometimes faint
Beneath my burden, I would not utter weak complaint.

Trusting, O Father, that thy hand is through it all,
And that leaning upon thy strength, I can not fail,
And when the last to-day of my short life shall come,
May thou in mercy judge life's task "Well done!"

Must We Loose Our Children?

BY BISHOP KEENER.

[We reproduce the following from our senior Bishop, hoping that all our preachers will give it careful consideration. No subject before the church to-day is of more vital importance.—EDITOR.]

One of the first things I remember about church-going is the being asleep in Light Street Church, Baltimore, with my head on my mother's lap. It was a nice place, and, I doubt not, a sweet sleep. It was a proper place; I was where I ought to have been, and my mother had brought me along.

Certainly a boy asleep in a church is a more hopeful sight than the same boy not in church, but elsewhere on the Lord's day. Sleepy boys, oftentimes, hear more and remember more than sleepy, or even wide-awake men. Children are pre-eminently fitted for hearing the Word. Their eyes are mature, so are their ears. They learn a language much sooner than grown persons; even babes of two or three years learn the Chinese. So they are mature in understanding spiritual things; they fear to die; they often have great sorrow of life; they are glad to hear of the "land far off, where the King sits in his beauty."

It is a strange winnowing that sifts out of the Ecclesia all the children and most of the youth. By the by, a modern invention. Who could have thought in the days of Summerfield that the Sabbath-school would ever prove a serious hindrance to church going? They used to march us all several squares to the house of God, and seat us securely in the gallery. The ranks were not broken. Now, sixty years after, at the hour of church, the entire body of children rise up and leave the house. The school literally "breaks up." They may be seen wending their way back home from church, while parents and friends are wending their way toward it. Certainly a sad sight. But will parents be content to sit in church while their young people are they know not where?

When do these young people hear the gospel? Certainly the rosy atmosphere of the Sabbath-school is a poor substitute for the authority and reverent silence of the house of God. Of all things sacred, nothing is better calculated to impress a child than the services of a congregation on the Sabbath. It does more than all familiar home work and school-lecturing to bring the young heart into line, and in accord with the faith of Christ. When the preacher stands up before a whole congregation to read the Word and to lift up his hands in prayer; when all sit motionless and show their sense of the weighty things spoken by a man who, for the while, is the mouthpiece of Jehovah, the soft, impressible minds of the young are filled with the nearness of heaven and of God.

Parents can not do without this powerful aid in disciplining children. The fear of God, the truth of God, the sacraments of God, the servants of God are alone impressively displayed in the house of God. The children there see that their parents reverence God, and they reverence him, too. God can hold your children when you can not. They fear death and seek life as well as you, if only they can have a chance, by being carried to his house and laid at his altar. A child should never be able to remember a time when it did not go to church. These children are God's, and may not be deprived of all the pleasures and glories which attend upon his service. The promises are rich in blessings, and constitute the main wealth of the young. They have a goodly heritage, for "the blessing of the Lord it maketh rich, and he addeth no sorrow with it." When the dear young people are left without guidance by the death of precious parents, God has promised to shelter and feed them, and to "guide them by his counsel." No poor man can afford to deprive his children of the knowledge of these mercies.

The habit of staying away from church is easily acquired. We should learn easily the value of the rest which the holy day brings to the mind and heart, as well as to the muscle of man. The observance of the Lord's day brings all within the most refining atmosphere one can possibly breathe. It is a school of the highest thought and speech; it both opens and fills the mind with elevating themes, which, of all, are best calculated to bring out the good there may be in us. The Sabbath-school does its work, but only its part. Both its work and that of the congregation are needed to properly impress the young with divine things. But who could believe it! Our Methodism, on the Sabbath, consists of one million of grown people going toward church, and half a million of children going away from it. It will not require a soothsayer to interpret this flight of birds. A gentleman who had built, out of his own means, several churches, asked me why so few young people were found at preaching. I answered: "Because for ten years we have been teaching them to stay away. It only requires ten years in this country to shape public sentiment."

Our preachers, from Dan to Beersheba, should preach that our people must not farm out the religious training of their children to any school; that they must see that their children go to church as regularly as they go themselves. The preacher must inquire into their attendance upon public worship, and see that they are taught in the Sunday-school, and not merely amused. He has the Sabbath-school teachers as aids in this great work, to whom he should teach the Bible in a weekly class as well as by preaching. He should have an eye especially to the conversion of children, and ask the aid of the Holy Spirit in this great work—"Suffer the little children to come unto me."—Nashville Advocate.

Children of Mississippi.

Hear me. I have something good to tell you. We have a fine college—Millsaps College—at Jackson, Miss., on what will soon be one of the most beautiful plats of ground in the State. This college is now open and under full headway, and it is doing a great work. This college can not do the work it ought to do without a boarding-hall on the grounds. We must have one, a large hall, with forty or fifty rooms in it. The grown people, our fathers and mothers, are going to build it. We children, boys, girls, little tots and all, must have a finger in that pie and help to do that work.

We boys want to build a hall where we can board when we go to college, and the girls will help to build one where their brothers and sweethearts can stay while getting an education. The fact is, we could build this hall ourselves, without the help of the old people, if they would just give us a little time. As it is, we are going to do a good part of it, anyway. There are hundreds and thousands of poor boys and young men in Mississippi who would go to college and get a good education if they only had a cheap place to board. If we build this hall, as we will do, they can board themselves for six or seven dollars per month; perhaps for less than that. What a blessing! what a mighty work for God and for generations to come this will be! We must have a hand in it; we must, and we will.

We want two or three live boys and two or three live and lovely girls in every community in the State of Mississippi to act as agents in raising this money. Let those who will act as agents forward their names to Rev. I. W. Cooper, D. D., agent for Millsaps College, Jackson, Miss. Then let these little agents go to work among the boys and girls at home, and take the names of all persons, big and little, who will agree to give any sum, large or small, at once, or by the month, for the purpose of building this boarding-house. Get all the money you can, and forward it as fast as you can, to Rev. I. W. Cooper, D. D., Jackson, Miss. Send by post office order, postal note, or by check or draft. Dr. Cooper will send you a receipt for all sums sent, and he will enter the names of all who give and the amounts in a book to be kept among the college records, and once a month, or once a quarter, he will publish these names and amounts in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Every cent, nickel, dime, quarter, half and dollar paid in by us children, or by the grown people, will be two cents, two nickels, two dimes, two quarters, one dollar, and two dollars, when they come to be paid out. Now, children, is not this wonderful? Wonderful that our pieces of money will go in single and come out double? But so it will be. Maj R. W. Millsaps, who has already done so much for the college, and for whom it is named, will give cent for cent, nickel for nickel, dime for dime, quarter for quarter, half for half, and dollar for dollar, with the people of Mississippi, both old and young, up to twenty-five thousand dollars a year. So everyone that gives once gives twice; that gives one dollar gives two dollars. When did the people of Mississippi ever have such an opportunity of multiplying money like this before? It looks like our money would pass through the miracle-working hand of our blessed Lord.

Now, children, go to work at once. Be quick about it. Who will be the first agent, and who will send Bro. Cooper the first report?

Your uncle, GILDEROY.

My Assistant Pastor.

BY REV. J. WESLEY JOHNSTON, D. D.

This is not written by way of eulogy, nor is it intended as a memoir in which the virtues of my friend may be embalmed, neither is it meant for the Committee on Preacher and the possibilities of a better appointment for my assistant—for he is not dead, nor dying, nor does he expect to move next Spring, but intends to remain with me and do even better work in the year to come. My motives, therefore, in writing this article can not be questioned.

But in view of the great help that he has been to me, and how singularly he has identified himself with my ministry, contributing to my success in ways too numerous to mention, and doing it so quietly and unobtrusively, it is only the barest justice on my part to show generous appreciation of this devoted service.

Concerning the man himself, he is comparatively old, being not far from seventy years of age; and yet he is hale, hearty, and vigorous, and shows neither line on his forehead nor stoop in his shoulders. His voice, too, is as clear and strong as it ever was, and when he shouts, which, being an old-fashioned Methodist, he frequently does, he can be heard a great way off. And then, he is so cheery! He enters into church work with the most joyous enthusiasm, and when it comes to such times as Thanksgiving and Christmas, he makes my whole parish glad. Why, only last Thanksgiving he gathered a roomful of my people about him, and told them one of the brightest, nicest stories I ever heard, about a crabbed old uncle and a patient little Christian woman, and though tears stood in the eyes of the listeners all the while my assistant was speaking, yet each tear was shot through with arrows of light, and each face had a gladness impossible to describe.

Blessings on him! Every time I see him he suggests the possibility of growing old gracefully, and with increasing years deeper and more valued usefulness.

Then he preaches better than I do, and yet not once have I felt the least jealousy! This does not imply that he is a great preacher, or the absence of all feeling on my part, but it is the statement of a fact which can not be questioned; for my assistant has a way of making a sermon that is peculiarly his own. He doesn't hold himself down to any one text, nor a chapter, nor an epistle even; he simply turns himself loose upon everything in the Bible and all the good things out of the Bible; he wanders through the heavens and the earth, through history and philosophy; he quotes poetry, he tells stories; once in a while he refers to his own experience, and before he gets through with his sermon the wicked have been reproved, the good have been comforted, and all have had their meat in due season. Now, that is preaching, let the schools say what they will. Too many sermons are made with boards and nails, and are hammered together according to certain rules. A real sermon is never made at all; it grows out of the heart and genius of the preacher just as a tree grows out of the earth.

Every week my assistant preaches, and his sermons are just as fresh and inspiring through the burning days of Summer as in the crisp and frosty Winter. How he keeps it up is a wonder; but he does, as all of my people can testify.

And then, though he says the plainest things, and talks out in the most fearless way, he never stirs up any unpleasantness in my parish. I hope that no one can truthfully charge me with a lack of independence, for that would be a dreadful thing; but there are times when even the bravest and most outspoken men need to exercise great caution lest they be charged with partisanship or meddling in matters which are not their concern, and so many a minister is forced to keep silence, and that silence is often braver than speech. But my assistant, with a wisdom born of years, and with a courage born of profound conviction, boldly declares the thoughts and purposes of his heart; and yet, strange to say, though he never minces matters, but speaks with a meaning and an emphasis which can not be misunderstood, still he offends no one, and never stirreth up strife.

A few weeks ago, right in the midst of the hard times, when people were thinking of limiting some of their benevolences, he delivered himself on the claims of the mission work and the deep responsibility that rested upon all Christians, and it will not be his fault if the collections fall off in a single particular. I can't imagine how I could do without him. Nothing would induce me to try.

No better illustration can be given of his courage and tact than the way in which he managed to present his views to my choirmaster and organist. With rare courtesy he introduced the matter of congregational singing, and showed what a power of leadership a choir could develop, and how under its influence and example the noble hymns of our church might be sung by the people, and yet at the same time he gave to the anthem its desired prominence. And then he touched the organ keys with the hand of a master, and the noble instrument responded with all its wealth of richness and harmony. Who but my assistant would have ventured into the organ loft and choir gallery, and left behind him such pleasant and gracious impressions? Nothing in the church escapes his kindly help. He talks to my trustees about their care of the property, and they listen earnestly to all he says, for he knows the building from cellar to steeple. He talks to the sexton about heating and lighting and ventilation until he has made that good brother think that much of the church's usefulness and success depend upon his work, and that to be a doorkeeper in the house of the Lord is a most honorable and responsible position. He talks to my official Board about the matters with which they are charged, and has made them realize the divine character of official position in the house of God.

Every little while he makes a special address or appeal to my Epworth League, and does an amount of good which can hardly be estimated. He throws himself into Sunday-school work with all possible earnestness, and takes charge of a teachers' meeting, where every week he gives rare help and valuable information to all who attend. He is heard from in the prayer meeting, and though not always able to be present in body—but never from either indisposition or ill disposition—he is with us in heart and sympathy.

And what shall I say of him as a pastor? He makes about three thousand calls a year; and such calls! Of course, he has many advantages in this line of work, for he wastes no time on the doorstep while the kitchen seraph meditates on sundry great problems before answering the bell; nor does he listen sadly to the ticking of the parlor clock while the hostess is preparing to receive her minister. Fortunate man! He gets into every home without much ceremony, and is made one of the family the moment he enters. He takes the children on his knee and tells them a little story; he talks to the tired mother so that she feels rested; he has a kind word for the good man of the house when he returns from business; and the whole family is made glad by his coming. Quite frequently he makes a joke, a real joke; and you can't help but laugh with him, for he tells it in his own quiet way, which is simply inimitable.

Of course, he has his opinions and views on public questions and national politics, and yet, without compromising himself in any one particular, he is the friend of all good men, of whatever party, and they have the utmost respect for his convictions and judgments. He has been with me for a longer time than our itinerant system allows, for he does not receive his appointment to my charge from the Bishop; and yet not once to my knowledge has he created any but a healthy discussion, or caused people to question the honesty of his motives.

And yet, with all this caution and unobtrusiveness, he is a most ardent Methodist, and believes in every institution in the church. He enters into revival work with spirit and fervor; he talks about conversion in a way which shows that with him it is an experience; he exhorts the people concerning class meeting; he holds up our distinctive doctrines with both heart and voice; and though he tries to serve his day and generation, so faithfully has he adhered to the teaching of the fathers that Wesley and Asbury would recognize him instantly.

But I can not begin to tell all of the virtues and qualities of my assistant.

Still, I must say that he never wants to be anything but my assistant, and if I were to resign to-morrow, he would only ask to be allowed to help my successor.

Is it any wonder that I have for him a profound affection?—and if by any chance I miss seeing him for a little while, I feel a sense of desolation.

He tries to time his visit in between the Sundays, just where the week hollows in, when I need him most, and his coming is always a benediction. He tells me lots of things which otherwise I should not have heard, and he makes my life bigger and broader and richer than it could have been without him. Again I say, Blessings on my assistant! Tell you his name? Certainly, for everyone ought to know him. His name is THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.—New York Advocate.

The Effects of Alcohol.

All intoxicating liquors—spirits, wine, cider, perry, beer, ale, etc.—consist of water, a number of other substances dissolved in it, and alcohol. Every person knows that the latter is the only thing that causes man to drink any kind of liquor. A quart of Madeira wine, for instance, consists of two pounds and a little over four ounces of water; two ounces of gummy and tartareous matter; a little over two ounces of an oily, resinous substance, and a little over two ounces of alcohol. Take out the alcohol, and the remainder of the Madeira wine is a nauseous mess which no one would think of drinking. Take the alcohol out of beer, and it is a sour slop which no sane man would dream of taking into his stomach. Whisky consists of nearly equal parts of water and impure alcohol, the latter containing fusil oil and some essential oils derived from the grain, which give it flavor. It is the alcohol which produces intoxication, if imbibed in sufficient quantity. There is nothing else in any intoxicant which would commend it to the palate of any man.

Now, the scientific verdict as to alcohol is, that it is a poison—no more, no less; and, as a poison, its action is first upon the nerve centers. Its effects in the opening stages are modified in various ways by the temperament of the individual. Its action is generally at first to fill the person with a serene and perfect self-complacency. His feelings and faculties are rendered more intense from the stimulation of the nerves by the poison. With most persons this is shown by increased vivacity, and a tendency to talk much more than is usual.

As intoxication progresses the senses gradually become hazy, a soft humming seems to fill the pauses in the conversation, a filmy haze obscures the vision, the victim finds it difficult to preserve his equilibrium; next, objects appear double, or flit confused before the eyes; the drunkard becomes boisterous, ridiculous; articulation becomes difficult, and he finally falls to the ground insensible—that is, he is "dead drunk." From this state, after a period of deep slumber, he awakes exhausted, feverish, sick and giddy, with throbbing head, ringing ears, and bloodshot eyes.

The poison first affects the lobes of the brain, and the other nerve centers of the cerebro-spinal system are successively brought under the influence of the poison, until, in the state commonly known as "dead drunk," the only ones that are not paralyzed are those known as the automatic centers, which regulate and keep up respiration and the circulation. Enough alcohol can be taken, however, to paralyze these, in which case the deep sleep of drunkenness becomes a stupor which passes into death. There is a parallel between apoplexy and intoxication. To be drunk is simply apoplectic. Such is the action of alcohol upon the nervous system, and its action upon the other parts of the body is no less injurious.

When an alcoholic drink is taken into the stomach, the alcohol is rapidly absorbed through the coats of that organ, passes directly into the circulation, and is carried with the blood to every part of the system. That which goes to the brain produces successively the symptoms enumerated above; that carried to the lungs begins to be expelled with the expired breath of these organs. Experiments have been tried in which wine was administered in capsules, so that not one particle touched the interior of the mouth or throat; yet in two or three minutes the odor of alcohol was noted on the breath, showing that in that short time it had been absorbed, passed into the blood, and was being expelled by the lungs.

The blood, loaded with alcohol, in passing through the liver, sets up an irritation which frequently causes an incurable disease to that very important organ—cirrhosis of the liver, better known as "hobnail liver." The kidneys are stimulated and irritated, and long indulgence in the drinking habit leads to incurable diseases in them. The skin is also affected, and does its part in expelling the alcohol from the system. In point of fact, all the excretory organs set at work as soon as the alcohol gets into the system, in the endeavor to rid the body of the poison. The liver, kidneys, lungs and skin are all over-stimulated in this effort.

We hope we have made it clear in this brief resume of the action of alcohol that it is entirely a poison. It is in no sense a food. It injures the brain, the nerves, over-excites the heart, irritates the stomach, liver and kidneys; never does any good, but always harm. There is no reason against, and every reason for, putting its sale and use under the same restrictions as the sale of any other poison.

Why, then, is this not done? Simply because there is too much money in the business of selling rum. It is the gain that comes to those whose occupation it is to manufacture and sell it that has thrown together for mutual protection all these people. They use their influence and their wealth and the power they have over the besotted victims of drink, to prevent, as far as possible, any interference by the State with their debasing and soul-destroying occupation.

There is a vast amount of ignorance among the people as to the real nature of alcohol. It is the fewer number of our people, even at this date, who are convinced that alcohol is a poison, and this ignorance of the masses is one of the bulwarks of the traffic. We need more education, especially in the family, in the church, and in the common schools, as to the real nature and effect of this potent poison. When the masses of the people understand its true nature, a tremendous impulse will be given to the effort to pulverize the rum power.—Toledo Blade.

"HER HUSBAND PRAISETH HER."

BY J. W. S.

Let me give this humble token
From an overflowing heart;
Let the fountain still be open,
Wife's just praises to impart.
Eight and twenty years of union,
Sealed with matrimonial vows,
Kept with mind and heart communion,
Gathered laurels for her brows.

When her course was almost ended,
As we talked of our school days,
And to things of life attended,
Learning more of wisdom's ways;
"Yes, I loved you then"—she gently
Spoke of youthful friendliness;
That, in fact, was evidently
Fruit mature in loveliness.

Childhood love was but the budding;
Grafting, pruning work was done;
War, with desolation flooding
Households—two were made but one.
Friendliness again appearing,
Sought its loving aid to give;
Loving, serving, trusting, cheering
Each "so long as both should live."

She lived not for ease and pleasure.
Coveted not the world's applause;
Conscious duty was the measure
Of her zeal in every cause.
Ease and pain had daily striving,
Joy and grief their seasons olt,
Gentleness from all deriving,
Formed her spirit, sweet and soft.

Servants loved her for the favor
Which to them she always showed;
Strangers saw in her behavior
Some desire to do them good;
But her husband and her mother
Saw in her the brightest gem,
Crowning her as could no other
In her faithfulness to them.

View her spending that last Sunday,
Spreading forth her sweet, soft light,
In the house of God at noonday,
Afternoon in mercy's right,
Sacrificing, self-denying,
Seeding aid to those in need,
Caring for the sick and dying,
Showing sympathy, indeed.

See her lovely by the hearthstone
At the time for taking rest,
Bible open, reading lesson,
Soul in secret to be blest.
Cause of falling! how mysterious!
Bricks the pillow for her head!
Brain concussion! O how serious!
All that night the floor her bed!

Two young friends in rooms adjoining,
Knowing not her helpless state,
Passed the night in peace reposing,
Till the time of rising late.
All the aid that could be given
Brought no sign of consciousness,
Loving hearts with grief were riven—
Oh! "the Lord, our righteousness."

See death natural still prevailing,
That frail body must decay;
But the life of Christ availing
Sends the sting of death away.
Thou art faithful, blessed Jesus,
'Twas a seed in weakness sown,
In thy goodness be thou with us,
Thou hast taken away thy own.

Prohibition in Mississippi.

LOCAL OPTION A TEMPORARY RELIEF—THE TIME HAS COME FOR AN ADVANCE STEP.

An impartial review of the prohibition movement in the United States will disclose the gratifying fact that Mississippi is in the front ranks of the prohibition States. Prohibition in Mississippi has had a steady and almost undisturbed growth for fifteen years. County after county has gone dry under local option until we have at present only six or eight whisky counties in the State. The friends of prohibition did not in the beginning advocate local option because they believed it better than constitutional or statutory prohibition, but because they felt that it was the best that we could do under the existing circumstances. Local option, as they held, and county, answered a twofold purpose. It gave the county, or counties, where the prohibition sentiment was strong enough an opportunity to outlaw the open saloon, and, at the same time, gave the friends of prohibition an opportunity to educate the people and to develop a more general sentiment against the legalized liquor traffic. Local option has served this purpose, and, in doing so, has finished its work, and ought to be retired. There are only six or eight counties now in the State where it is lawful to carry on the degrading, death-dealing liquor traffic. The sentiment that local option set out to encourage and develop at present well-nigh pervades the entire State, and fills all of the ramifications of the body politic. It is now time for us to take an advance step. Local option has served us well, but it is not what we need, nor is it all that we can get. The widespread sentiment that supports local option is now ready to give us statutory prohibition; stands ready to wipe out the entire dram-shop law, which stands in the way of progress. If we are to have a legalized curse, then the present dram-shop law is well-nigh perfection. But the fact is, the people of Mississippi don't want legalized whisky. The State at large wants prohibition—not for two years, nor for twenty years, but for all time to come. If the prohibition leaders cling much longer to local option, which was never intended, only for temporary relief, prohibition will suffer loss, and Mississippi will be in danger of being dominated again by the whisky power. Under local option we have prohibition as the result of a widespread public sentiment. That sentiment, to become fixed and permanent, ought to be crystallized into a fixed and permanent constitutional law. This sentiment, unless fixed in a permanent law, stands in danger of being weakened, and finally dissipated. The people will soon despair of ever reaching the end of their desire, viz.: the abolition of the legalized, nefarious liquor traffic in the entire State, so that there shall not be a nook in Mississippi where the rum-seller will not be an outlaw. How is this long-looked for and much prayed-for end to be obtained? We do not think, so far as Mississippi is concerned, that a prohibition party is necessary to bring about this end, as necessary as the prohibition party may be to national prohibition. Let the leaders in the prohibition movement give up local option and advocate State statutory prohibition. Let them urge upon the people the necessity of electing prohibitionists to the State Legislature—men who will, by legal enactment, make it a life-time imprisonment in the State penitentiary to manufacture or sell intoxicating liquors as a beverage in Mississippi. And in my humble opinion, the sooner we begin this work which is to be the death-stroke to the liquor business, the better for prohibition in Mississippi.

Evangelists.

In the discussions, pro and con, of the evangelistic question no one, so far as I have seen, has stopped to inquire what the evangelists themselves want. Do they want any legislation—any recognition of their work by law—at the next General Conference? If I am not mistaken, this question ought to be of some consequence in our thinking, and it ought to go far towards determining the action of the legislative congress of our Methodism. I do not think the evangelists, as a class, want, need, or desire any legislation, or legal recognition, or control of their work, by the church. The machinery of the church, as it is, suits them admirably. It helps to make business for the evangelists and affords facilities for and aids them in carrying on their work. They could not get along so well without the church. The church furnishes houses for them and a body of trained helpers to aid in the work. The necessary advertising is done free of charge by the church. The church pays most of the incidental expenses and the larger part of their salaries.

Evangelists are now under no restraint whatever. They are not responsible to anybody, person or Conference, for their work. They report nowhere, to no Conference. They go whenever and wherever they please. They are not subject to orders and are not limited to any locality, to any territory. The world, as nearly as may be, is their parish. They are not constrained in any way. Legislation by way of limitation territorially, or that will restrain or constrain this class of preachers, or create responsibility to any particular body, as a Quarterly or Annual Conference, will badly cripple, if not destroy the work of this useful class of preachers. A nominal appointment by the church with the liberty or license, of unlimited range, is exactly the condition most favorable to this class in our Methodism.

So far as my observation goes, in every instance where the administration in our church has undertaken to limit or control this class of preachers, to restrain or constrain them, to rein them down to law, to conform this ministry to our method, the evangelists have quietly withdrawn from or openly kicked out of the ranks of the itinerant ministry. This tends to confirm me in the opinion that it is not law, but license, that the evangelists want. Not one of them, so far as I know, has submitted to the law as it now reads. Some claim to be under a better and higher law than the law of the church. As long as evangelists can run the machinery of the church, or use it to aid in their work, they like it; but when the church undertakes to run them by requiring conformity to the machinery, why they step out and take a row to themselves.

If I know my own heart, I have no feeling of prejudice towards any class of gospel preachers in any church; but this question is up for consideration, and pretty soon I, with hundreds of others, will have to act, or refuse to act, on it, and I can not help thinking about it. It is a virtue, or a fault, of mine to think out loud. When action is taken, a regulation adopted, I will cheerfully and gladly conform to it as long as it is law. I will not kick out of the traces and quit because I can not have my own way.

GILDEROY.

Home Religion.

Home is a sweet word when it describes a reality, and not a shadow. But, alas! there is many a splendid mansion in which there is no home. Home depends much more on mental and moral qualities than on material surroundings. We have seen an earthly paradise where there was no home, while in the mud-built cottage of the humble poor we have found a home of contentment and peace, upon which angels might have gazed with delight. We will not say that there is no home without piety, for there are sweet congenialities of nature delightful to look upon in this fallen world; but this we will say: that the highest happiness of home can never be realized where the influence of piety is not felt. Therefore, he that has set up Christ in his heart will be sure to set him up in his home. Every family should be a Christian church, and every house a house of prayer. Every householder should say with Joshua, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord," and with David, "I will walk within my house with a perfect heart." Our prayers should be as regular as our meals. We can find time to take food to sustain the physical man; should we not find time to take food to sustain the spiritual man? Does anyone claim to be a Christian whose soul is not bound up in the souls of his family? If our children are lost through our neglect, we shall be held accountable. Will a man do no more for his family than for the beasts that perish? A man provides food and drink for his family; does he not the same for his horse, his cow, and his pig? We should read God's Word and sing the songs of Zion in our homes daily, and should do all in our power to make these exercises profitable to each member of the household. We should often make special inquiry into the spiritual condition of each of our children. We should insist much upon the sinfulness of their natural state, and urge upon them the necessity of regeneration as essential to salvation. How miserable is that family that is without an altar to the Lord! Family cares, family sins, family trials, family sorrows and family wants, yet no family prayers. Shall we say we have not time for family prayers? For what purpose does our heavenly Father give us the time allotted us in this world? Is it given us simply that we may get gain, or enjoy ourselves like the brute creation? Nay, is it not given us that we may fit ourselves and our families for a home in heaven? Better would it be for us to curtail our sleep and spend less time at the table than to neglect family worship. We are commanded to "bring our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." It is made our duty to talk of God's laws and ordinances in our houses and as we walk in the way. The great need of the church to-day is a loftier type of home religion. Secure this, and every interest of the church will flourish. Nothing retards the success of the ministry so much as the defective character of our home religion. We believe, with the sainted Baxter, that when family religion shall rise to its proper elevation, conversion will be more frequently the result of religion at home than of the public teaching of the church. Let all the members of religious families resolve to show piety at home; then will home be the dwelling-place of love, the scene of friendly intercourse, and the foretaste of heaven.

Quiet Moments.

BY REV. ALEXANDER M'LAREN, D. D.

There is a wonderful word in one of the old books which is universally and blessedly true, "I will lead her into the wilderness, and there I will speak to her heart." And they, I think, know comparatively little of the intimacy and the sweetness of divine companionship who have not passed through the bitter experience of human loneliness. Christ had to take the blind man apart from the crowd before he could give him his sight. Moses had to be called into the dreary desert with its gloomy peaks and splintered crags of granite, before he could see the great sight; and Elijah had to go to the same lonely district ere to him there came the still small voice. Friend, if you are condemned to a lonely life, nestle close to God, and the solitude will be full of sweetness and blessedness. There is yet another kind of solitude. Besides the necessary one to catch the personality and the providential one which God's mercy sometimes flings upon us, there is the voluntary one, without which there is no depth of Christian life and no adequate possession of that Divine Spirit.

I know that domestic arrangements and imperative duties make it all but impossible for many Christian people to secure more than a little solitude; but God can also come to a man in a crowd. But for all that, I venture to say that no Christian person can do without some quiet moments with himself and his God. May I still further venture to say that, however useful good conferences for deepening spiritual life may be, solitary communion with Jesus Christ is better, and that, perhaps, if we had fewer congresses and meetings and unions of different kinds, and Christian people accepted more that invitation to "Come, my people, and enter into thy chamber, and shut the door," we should find a deeper possession of power than from the ordinary church meetings and such like. The voice of the Spirit of God is heard in our closets more than in crowds.

How familiar in the New Testament the possession of the Holy Spirit and the possession of gladness is! We read in one of Paul's letters how the Thessalonian Christians "received the Word in much affliction, with the joy of the Holy Ghost." And this is the teaching of Scripture throughout, that wherever there is a heart that is filled in any adequate measure, though it be not flowing over with the Spirit, there the degree of gladness corresponds with the degree of inspiration for all that is needed to make a man glad. If it be true that a divine influence can come into my heart, and fill my faculties and harmonize them all in sweet co-operation of submissive service, and can breathe into me the assurance that I am God's son, then I know no what more a soul can need for its joy; and, brethren, this is possible for every one of us.—London Baptist.

A Well-Deserved Rebuke.

One day a smart young fellow with shiny shoes, a new hat and checker-board trousers, boarded a street car in a Western city, and stepped to the front platform. He pulled out a twist of paper and lighted it, and began puffing a concentrated essence of vile odors into the faces of those who were obliged to ride upon the platform if they rode at all. One—a plain old farmer—couldn't stand it, and stepped off to wait for the next car. When he reached the station the young fellow was there before him, and it happened that the two met at the restaurant counter.

"Got any sandwiches?" called the young man to the waiter. "Here, gimme one." And he tossed out a nickel, and then proceeded to pick up and pull apart every one of the half-dozen sandwiches on the plate before he found one to suit him. The farmer, who had been waiting for his turn, drew back in disgust. Finally, he found something which the fingers of another had not fouled, and presently followed the loud young man to the car. He found every seat occupied, including the half of one on which were piled the young man's gripsack and overcoat.

"Is this seat taken?" he ventured to inquire.

"Seat's engaged," was the curt answer, with a look meant to squelch the old farmer, who went into the smoking car.

That afternoon the same young man walked into the office of the governor of the State, armed with recommendations and endorsements, an applicant for a position under the State government. He was confronted by the same plain old farmer, who recognized his traveling companion of the morning without any trouble. Glancing over his papers, the governor said:

"Hu—m, yes. You want me to appoint you to so-and-so. If I should, I guess I might as well write my own resignation at the same time."

"Wh—why so?" stammered the young fellow.

"Because I saw you pay for a street-car ride this morning, and you took the platform of the car. You bought a sandwich and spoiled the platefnl. You paid for a seat in the train, and took mine too; and if I should give you this place, how do I know that you would not take the whole administration?"—Outward.

Live in To-Day.

There is no illusion so insidious and persistent as that which introduces into the future some element of luck, which stores up for us in the future something which we have not secured for ourselves. We are always dreaming of having more time in the future, of doing things with a strong hand in consequence. To-day we have but fifteen minutes, and what can be made of such fragment of time? Next year we shall have hours, and then we will read the new books, learn the language we need to possess, accomplish the larger tasks of which we dream. But the hours never come, and the achievements are made, if they are made at all, in these odds and ends of times that come to us by the way. The wise man is he who knows the value of to-day; he who can estimate to-day rightly may leave the future to take care of itself. For the value of the future depends entirely upon the value attached to to-day; there is no magic in the years to come; nothing can bloom in those fairer fields save that which is sown to-day. The great aim of Christianity is not to teach men the glory of the life to come, but the sacredness of the life that now is; not to make men imagine the beauty of heaven, but to make them realize the divinity of earth; not to unveil the splendor of the Almighty, enthroned among angels, but to reveal deity in the Man of Nazareth. He has mastered the secret of life who has learned the value of the present moment, who sees the beauty of present surroundings, and who recognizes the possibilities of sainthood in his neighbors. To make the most and the best out of to-day is to command the highest resources of the future. For there is no future outside of us; it lies within us, and we make it for ourselves. The heaven of the future, and the hell also, are in the germ of every human soul; and no man is appointed to one or the other, for each appoints himself. To value to-day, to honor this life, to glorify humanity, is to prepare for eternity, to seek the eternal life, and to worship God. The harvest of the future is but the golden ripening of to-day's sowing.—The Interior.

Don't Complain.

What is the use? Nobody thanks you for burdening them with your load of troubles, large or small. And they are pretty sure to seem small in other people's eyes, however large in your own. "Go bury your sorrow, the world has its share," and does not care to take any more. Besides, the trouble gets larger the more you talk about it, or even think about it in a complaining spirit. It is amazing how a grievance grows if only it be dwelt on with sufficient persistence. He who looks at it long enough will see in it plenty of things that are not there at all.

It is easy to fall into the habit of grumbling about every little thing that does not suit; but who, on calm reflection, thinks it really pays? We doubt if anybody ever did. It has an ill effect on one's own spirits, sending them down below zero on the smallest provocation. It makes those around us constantly uncomfortable. And, most of all, it is a sin against God, a most ungrateful return for all his abundant mercies.

How much better to keep in the sunshine, and to take hold of things by the smooth handle! One can always find the bright side if he looks for it. Things are never so bad as they might be. Whatever God sends is meant for our good, and has something about it that should call forth praise.

So we might say complaint is always out of order. Christians should never cease to keep good-natured. If any thing troubles you, talk it over quietly with the Lord first of all; after that, if further counsel be required, an intimate friend may be called in. In cases that admit of remedy, take hold of them in resolute earnest, with a cheerful purpose to set things right. In all cases patiently endure as seeing him who is invisible, looking for the eternal weight of glory. In any case, don't complain, don't fret, don't make yourself a nuisance. "Look up and not down, look forward and not back, look out and not in, and lend a hand" of help to every one in need.—Zion's Herald.

Be Brave.

Desponding Christians win no battles. They are fitter for the hospital than the battlefield. God's heroes have been girded and inspired for heroic endeavor by this divine tonic of joy. Paul holds on his way through stripes and imprisonments, fastings and shipwrecks, never halting till he lays down his life for the Master he loved. No man can read his letters and not discover that the joy of the Lord was his strength. Military commanders know how much is dependent on the spirits of their soldiers. They are inspired by martial music, and advance to the deadly charge keeping step to patriotic airs. Cromwell's "Ironsides" marched into battle chanting, "Let God arise, and let his enemies be scattered." The Scottish Covenanters sang one of David's psalms as they drove the soldiers of Claverhouse before them at Drumclog. And the triumph of Protestantism in Germany owes not a little to the battle-hymn of Gustavus Adolphus. Nothing so braces the soul for life's conflict, nothing is so sure a prophecy of victory as a heart filled with the "joy of the Lord!" How may I obtain this joy? The answer is very short, but very comprehensive—Be faithful! Happiness is a roadside flower. It grows beside the highway of obedience. It is a coy blessing, and oftenest comes by indirection. You are intent on duty, and, lo, you find joy!—Northwestern Advocate.

How He Was Started.

I had in my charge a man who should have been an active and influential member of the church. But he was indifferent toward the church, with a strong leaning to the world. I could not get him interested in religious matters. I tried to get him to take the Advocate, but he refused. I had it sent him at my own expense. He refused to take it from the post-office, supposing that he would have to pay for it. I heard about it, and told him some friend was sending it to him. He took a few numbers home, got interested, and not long afterward informed me that he would not be without it. Following this he began to come to church and bring his family, five of whom were converted and joined the church. He is now one of the most efficient stewards in that charge.—Texas Advocate.

The Manchester Ship Canal.

The opening of the Manchester, England, ship canal on Jan. 1 was an event of far more than local importance. We in America were once in danger of falling into a kind of lethargy under the soothing impression that we possessed a monopoly of the world's energy and audacity in engineering enterprises and other great material undertakings. Nothing could be further from the truth, and it is well that we are giving more heed and showing more respect to the colossal activities that mark the last quarter of the nineteenth century in Europe. The Manchester ship canal transformed an inland inferior city into a seaport. It is a fact that the new canal constitutes the nearest shipping point for some eight millions of people, nearly all of whom are engaged in manufacturing industries in scores of towns and cities dotted over the region contiguous to the adjacent cities of Manchester and Salford, at whose great artificial docks the canal begins. The whole canal is indeed an extended dock. It is twice as wide as the Suez canal, and deep enough for all ocean-going steamers with the possible exception of a very few of the largest transatlantic liners. The cost of the undertaking has been some $75,000,000. The canal reaches the sea through the estuary of the river Mersey in the neighborhood of Liverpool. Its initial difficulties were great enough to have appalled the stoutest-hearted. The city of Liverpool exerted itself to the utmost to the granting of the charter, holding that it would be a great injury to the shipping interests of Liverpool if Manchester were allowed to become a port. The railway companies, which had profited by the heavy traffic from Liverpool to Manchester, were naturally up in arms against the project, and there were several ordinary old-fashioned canals which lay across the route and had to be disposed of in some manner. Every one of these difficulties was met and vanquished. Railroad lines were elevated and carried over the new canal on bridges.—Review of Reviews.

Woman's Practical Argument.

"What brings you here, Mary?" said Truesdell to his wife, as she entered the liquor shop.

"It is very lonesome at home, and your business seldom allows you to be there," replied the meek and resolute wife. "To me there is no company like yours, and as you can not come to me, I must come to you. I have a right to share your pleasures as well as your sorrows."

"But to come to such a place as this!" expostulated Tom.

"No place can be improper where my husband is," said Mary. "Whom God hath joined together let no man put asunder."

She took up the glass of spirits which the shopkeeper had just poured out for her husband.

"Surely you are not going to give that stuff to the children!" cried Tom, as she was passing the glass of liquor to them.

"Why not? Can children have a better example than a father's? Is not what is good for him good for them also? It will put them to sleep and they will forget that they are cold and hungry. Drink, my children; this is fire and bed, and food and clothing. Drink; you see how much good it does your father?"

With seeming reluctance, Mary suffered her husband to lead her home, and that night he prayed long and fervently that God would help him to break an evil habit and keep a newly formed but firm resolution.

His reformation was thorough, and Mrs. Truesdell is now one of the happiest of women, and remembers with a melancholy pleasure her first and last visit to the dram-shop.—Exchange.

Just So.

A pastor found many of his parishioners who were too poor to take their church paper, but who took secular papers and tales of fiction that cost four or five times as much. Cause: They had little relish for religious reading. Effect: Their relish for religious reading lessened every year. Mystery: They wondered why their spirituality was so dull and their children loathed everything of a religious character. Result: Those children who married or left home ceased church attendance altogether.—Methodist Protestant.

The Wesleyan Christian Advocate says: "The M. E. Church will learn some day that the abandonment of revival methods peculiar to Methodism for the popular methods of evangelists who cater to all churches, is not designed to make staunch Methodists; they do not make very good Christians. A poor Christian can never make a good Methodist." The Advocate surely does not believe in "playing cards with the congregation," and calling it a revival. Nor do we.

HYGIENE.

Physical Bankruptcy.

A prudent business man always has some resources in reserve to meet unexpected contingencies. He knows that he must be prepared for changes in commercial values and disappointments in business engagements. To continue a sound, healthy business, he must have something to fall back upon if occasion demands. His daily balance fluctuates more or less, but its bulk is never seriously impaired without causing much concern and inciting measures for its reinforcement. The reserve, if diminished to any considerable extent, is carefully nourished by economy of expenditure, and soon relieves itself, and then business goes on as before.

Analogous conditions prevail in the human system. A healthy man uses up, as ordinary occasion demands, a certain amount of his vital strength in the pursuance of his daily duties; his rest at night, his food, his recreation, serve to make good the loss incurred, and his balance of health remains about the same. But now some accident or disease overtakes him; his body's income is cut off, his appetite gone, his rest disturbed, while fever, pain and anxiety sap his strength and rapidly encroach upon his reserve vitality. Whether he recovers depends upon the amount of his reserve force and the degree of the demand upon it. If he has not impaired his constitution by indulgences, or weakened it by too close application to business and neglect of such sanitary principles as tend to preserve his vital forces intact, he will be able to meet the drafts drawn upon him by his illness. During convalescence, expenditure of force is as limited as possible; his vital income is greater than his outgo, his reserve is increased day by day, and when he has fully recovered, it has reached its normal conditions of stability. If, however, his recovery is incomplete, or, from the nature of his disability, impossible, his reserve force is permanently impaired, and he remains an invalid—his body capital is infringed beyond repair.

It is essential, then, if stable health is to be expected, that provision should be made for emergencies that are as sure to arise in the corporal as in the commercial system, and that simply to meet the requirements of the day is not sufficient. As in business affairs disaster surely follows enlarged responsibilities and greater risks, which are constantly making inroads upon the capital involved, so vital bankruptcy is imminent when larger drafts are made upon the nervous force than is consistent with its daily gain. In such cases nature invariably foretells the coming danger and as clearly points out the course to avoid it.—P. S. Starr, M. D., in Worthington's Magazine.

Eat More Fruit and Less Meat.

Rev. E. P. Powell, in an article in the Independent, gives the following advice, which is very like what the Journal of Hygiene has been giving for thirty years:

"One more thing I should like to say to all those people who are crying out over their big crop of apples and have unpayable debts and mortgages in this: Eat more fruit and less meat. We have a mistaken idea of the value of fruit as food. Our carnivorous tendencies are quite unnecessary for health and strength. Our mothers, seventy-five years ago, cooked apples and pears, and made butter of them, and in all ways compelled them to enter into the cuisine more than we do to-day.

"I am not a vegetarian, but I am sure that we can reduce our meat bills to one-tenth of their present size profitably. Use an abundance of cereals and vegetables and fruits and you will know less than half the diseases that curse you. My children never taste any meat except fish and eggs, and I wish I had been brought up that way myself. They have no knowledge of intestinals troubles, or headaches, or the instability and passions of meat-eaters. They are physically stout and clean, and their heads are capable of excellent work and no ache.

"I believe the moral results are not to be over-estimated. Nature has given us abundance of wholesome food that we despise in order to devour the less digestible, more costly and less natural. If evolution be true, our animal ancestors were fruit and grain eaters. Our flesh-eating propensity comes from our savage forefathers, who were also cannibals. When I see pain-drawn faces, I feel like saying, Throw away your tea and coffee and tobacco and meat, and eat nicely cooked fruits, vegetables and cereals; that is your natural food."

The Blood is the source of health. Keep it pure by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which is peculiar to itself, and superior in strength, economy, and medicinal merit.

Hood's Pills are purely vegetable, carefully prepared from the best ingredients. 25c.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. T. G. Froeman, Wier, Miss.: "Our first quarterly meeting just past. Bro. J. H. Mitchell, the presiding elder, was with us. We were all well pleased with our new presiding elder. He preached two good sermons. The occasion was one of enjoyment, so I don't think Bishop Key made any mistake in the appointment of Bro. Mitchell to the eldership. In fact, the mistakes are not often made by appointing young men or older ones to the eldership; but I think mistakes are sometimes made in keeping the same men in the eldership too long. I wish the next General Conference would make a law that would not permit any man to serve as presiding elder more than four years consecutively. I think that would be a good law. There are a great many others who think the same. There is another change I want in our law, so that we can dispose of a member that confesses to guilt of immorality, and imprudence in conduct or words, without going through all the forms of a trial. Now, for instance, here is a member that has danced and will not promise to do any better, nor show any signs of repentance. I want a way to dispose of that member without going through all the formulas of a trial."

Rev. Paul D. Hardin, P. C., Pelahatchie, Miss.: "We are beginning our second year's labor on Clarksburg circuit. There is plenty of work before us, but prospects are encouraging. Our presiding elder says we have made the best beginning in the history of the circuit. We have made a very nice addition to the parsonage since Conference. We are contemplating building two new churches this year, and steps are being taken to paint New Providence Church. Our first quarterly meeting was held at New Providence, Jan. 20 and 21. Attendance very good. We enjoyed two splendid sermons preached by Rev. C. McDonald, our beloved presiding elder. We think he is the right man in the right place. On Sunday we had a most delightful communion service conducted by Bro. McDonald, assisted by our local deacon, Rev. W. B. King, after which two persons presented themselves for church membership. Thus ended that which was indeed a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. How precious are these quarterly meeting occasions! How encouraging to the weary, half-disheartened pastor! How they inspire us with fresh zeal for the Master's cause, and greater determination to do our best! Do not deprive us of the quarterly visits of these men of God, of their loving encouragement, kind advice and wise counsel. Our beloved itinerancy would be a failure without them."

Rev. A. P. Leech, Congress, Miss.: "I was appointed to the Sparta circuit at our Conference at Columbus, and as soon as Conference was over I started to meet my first appointment and to look after a home for the preacher and his family, for there was no parsonage on the work. Some of the stewards thought it best that we should live in the neighborhood of Friendship Church, and in the home of my wife's sister; so I went there, and after some repairs and additions to the house, which was soon done, I went back to Columbus after wife and our household goods. On Wednesday, Jan. 17, we boarded the train at Columbus with all our dry goods and our cow along for our new work. We landed at Mayben on the G. P. railroad about 2 o'clock on the same day. We had been there but a short time until three wagons came up to move our goods out eighteen miles in the country to our new home. We enjoyed the hospitality of our good Bro. J. A. and Sister Thomas on Wednesday night. Thursday, as soon as we could load our wagons, we left for our home, and about sundown we landed and found loved ones waiting for us with a good warm supper on hand which we did justice to. After supper was over, and we were talking over the trials of the day, there was noise of feet coming into the house. We opened the door and found it to be several of the neighbors, brothers and sisters, who had come to meet the new preacher and his wife and to welcome them on the work. After introductions and handshakings, we quietly seated ourselves around the fire, but had not been there long until we were invited into another room, and there we found a table loaded with good things to eat, consisting of flour, hams, canned fruit, dried fruit, meal, lard, potatoes, and other things, that would make the preacher and his wife feel good. Now, Mr. Editor, my people don't call this a storm or pounding, but a reception, and I think they are right. They have received us so kindly that we start out on this year's work to do the best year's work of our lives. Pray for us and our work."

Rev. J. A. Braswell, Orwood, Miss.: "I suppose you will allow a word from the Morgansville mission preacher, as we do not often disturb you with reports, and never with storms or pounding. We are not bothered in this part of the Conference with storms or poundings, but, like some of the rest of the brethren, we are visited with a quiet, gentle breeze occasionally. We being returned as supply to this mission, our people have determined to make us happy. They have secured us a nice, comfortable home in the little village of Orwood, Lafayette county, Miss. We are happy in our home, and proud of our work. I trust as happy as any preacher in the Conference. Our salary is small, but the harvest is great. My motto is, to save the sheaves. We received fifty-seven precious souls into the church, and baptized twenty-three infants last year. Why not expect double that number this year? I am expecting great things of the Lord. Have already had some most precious services. Am taking my collections as I go. Have met nothing but the hearty response of my people yet. Will have all in cash and subscription by the meeting of my first Quarterly Conference. We have one church under construction at present. Expect to repair another this year, and there is considerable talk of building another. Some preachers might feel greatly humiliated to be read out to a mission, especially such one as this was at the session of the Conference at Corinth. But I verily believe it not far in the future when some one will be proud to go to Morgansville as pastor. God is with us, and I feel assured that as long as he leads I can say success. I am here again for this Conference year. My prayer is, Lord, lead me, that I may lead this people. Dear brethren of the North Mississippi Conference, this mission being in the bounds of your Conference, I feel like I have the right to demand and expect you when you go to a throne of God's grace in prayer that you remember us and the Morgansville mission. Call it by name. Pray God to abundantly bless and prosper it under our care this year. This request I ask of you, at least, once a day. I close by praying God to bless every charge in the bounds of our Conference, and the church in general."

THE CUISINE.

CONDUCTED BY L. A. B.

TO PREVENT CAKE BURNING.—When baking cakes, set a dish of water in the oven with them and they will not be in any danger of scorching.

BANANA CHARLOTTE.—This is simple and refreshing. The sides of a quart mould are to be lined with sponge cake, and the bottom of the mould with thin slices of bananas. Fill the mould with stiff whipped cream. Set it aside in the ice-box till wanted. Remove carefully from the mould and serve.

LEMON SAUCE.—Two cups of white sugar, two eggs, juice and grated peel of one lemon, one-third of a cup of butter, and a small tablespoonful of corn starch. Mix all well together, and just before serving add a pint of boiling water, set it on the stove, stir constantly and let it boil up once, no more, or the egg may curdle.

BLANQUET OF CHICKEN.—Cut up and cool boiled chicken. Braid one large tablespoonful of flour, add one large cupful of white sauce; cook two minutes; add salt, pepper, and one cupful of cream. Boil up, add fowl and boil ten minutes. Beat the yolks of four eggs with four tablespoonfuls of milk, and add. Serve with rice border or garnish of toast.

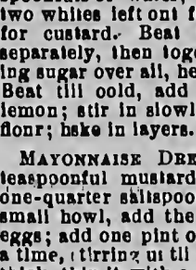
CREAM SPONGE CAKE.—Three quarters of a pound of sugar, three tablespoonfuls of water, boil; seven eggs, two whites left out for icing, one yolk for custard. Beat white and yolks separately, then together. Pour boiling sugar over all, beating all the time. Beat till cold, add the juice of one lemon; stir in slowly half a pound of flour; bake in layers.

MAYONNAISE DRESSING.—Mix one teaspoonful mustard, one of salt and one-quarter saltspoonful cayenne in a small bowl, add the yolks of two raw eggs; add one pint oil, a few drops at a time, stirring it till it thickens; when thick, thin it with a little lemon juice or vinegar; then add more oil, and so continue until you have used two tablespoonfuls each of lemon juice and vinegar in the preparation of the dressing.

OYSTER SAUCE.—Take a cupful of milk or cream, the liquor from a couple dozen of oysters, a tablespoonful of butter, a pinch each of grated nutmeg and cayenne. Bring it to a boil; add a tablespoonful and a half of flour mixed smooth in a little cold milk. Stir carefully, so it will not be lumpy. Put the oysters in a frying kettle or strainer, and hold them for half a minute in boiling water. Put them in the sauce boat and pour the sauce over them. The addition of a little anchovy sauce is a great improvement.

Eyesight Saved

After Scarlet Fever, Diphtheria, Pneumonia and similar diseases, Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled to thoroughly purify the blood and give needed strength. Read this:



Clifford Blackman.

"My boy had Scarlet Fever when 4 years old, leaving him weak and blood poisoned with canker. His eyes became inflamed, his sufferings were intense, and 7 weeks he could not open his eyes. I took him to the Eye and Ear Infirmary on Charles street, but their remedies failed to do any good. I began giving him

Times of Refreshing.

A great tidal wave of revival power is sweeping over the land. Revivals have been so numerous and so sweeping of late that some of the secular newspapers have been led to attempt the task of gathering statistics concerning them. The St. Louis Globe-Democrat has gathered statistics on the subject as far as possible from five States—Missouri, Arkansas, Texas, Illinois and Kansas. It reports in these States more than 49,000 conversions during the last five months. The accessions to the Methodist Church are put down at 21,840.

A revival of wonderful power is reported as going on in Nashville, Tenn. Two or three other meetings were in progress at the same time with the Sam Jones' meeting, and yet there were crowded houses at each place and many conversions.

A revival of marvelous power and extent is sweeping through the Holston Conference. Dr. Carroll, presiding elder of the Morristown district, reports over a thousand conversions in his district since Conference. Other sections of the Conference are beneficiaries of the pentecostal effusion.

Let all our preachers and people pray that this may be the most glorious year in the history of the church.

Bricks without Straw.

It is just as necessary for a preacher to have books as it is for a carpenter to have tools. Yet stewards very rarely take this into the account in fixing his salary. Only such family necessities as groceries, clothing, etc., are considered. Hence there is no margin for the purchase of books, even if the salary were all paid. But in many cases the salary is not all paid. People clamor for a ministry that is up with the times, and yet they fail to furnish the indispensable condition of such a ministry. How can a man be up with the times unless he reads? And how can he read unless he has books and periodicals? And how can he get these without money? These are questions which we commend to the consideration of stewards. We have known preachers to sell books as fast as they had read them—books which they would have been glad to keep, and which they ought to have kept—in order to buy other books. Fifty dollars a year put into a preacher's hands as a book fund would be a fine investment for many of our churches.

Pulpit and Pew.

Preachers and preaching occupy a prominent place in the literature of the day. Much that is wise and much that is otherwise has been written on the subject within the past two decades. It is assumed by a certain class of writers that the pulpit has lost its power. We do not believe this to be true; but we will not discuss that point at this time. Another assumption that is made with an air of great confidence, as if it were an axiomatic truth, is that whenever and wherever the pulpit fails to reach and save men, the fault is with itself.

This we conceive to be an egregious error. If the preaching fails to accomplish the great end aimed at, it does not necessarily follow that the preacher is to blame. Has the pew no responsibility in it at this point?

On this subject let history speak. What of Elijah? His ministry accomplished very little in the way of a reformation of the corrupt morals of his age? Was the fault with him? Who will so affirm? And what of the almost fruitless half-century ministry of Isaiah and Hosea? Was it their fault that Israel went continually from bad to worse? No man in his senses will make such an affirmation. Israel apostatized not because of their preaching, but in spite of it. And the same may be said of a host of others whose names adorn the annals of Hebrew prophecy. Our Savior's ministry also comes into view at this point. Although his preaching was of such a character as to extort from his most inveterate foes the declaration that "He spake as never man spake," and although it was accompanied by miracle-working power, yet the results of his personal ministry were quite insignificant. From all this it follows that the hearer has responsibilities as well as the preacher. Free agency counts for something. Men may accept or reject the gospel. Our Savior's injunction, "Take heed how ye hear," is one which needs to be continually rung in the ears of humanity.

First and foremost men need to have a proper conception of the end of preaching. Too many seem to think that entertainment is the end sought. Hence they go to church, provided there is something on the programme that is to their liking. Learning and oratory will draw hearers of a certain sort. Wit, coarseness, or vulgarity will draw another class. If the service gives promise of none of these things that suit their taste, then they are conspicuously absent. All this is antagonistic to the conception of preaching that is presented in the Bible. Preaching is either God's instrumentality for saving mankind from sin and spiritual death or it is of less insignificance than a tinkling cymbal. The preacher is either a messenger from God, or he is the veriest humbug on earth. This conception of the Christian ministry ought to be kept in mind perpetually.

Men ought to go to church to worship God, and to get spiritual help, whether they expect to be entertained from an esthetical standpoint or not. The sermon that has in it neither fun, learning nor eloquence may contain spiritual truth of the most vital importance. We are, therefore, under obligations to attend church when opportunity offers, and to hear attentively with a sincere desire to know the truth and a willingness to obey the truth.

Many fail just here. They are willing to hear the truth, provided it does not impinge upon their own consciences. Let the preacher discourse ever so plainly and pointedly upon the sins and follies of others, and they are delighted; but woe be unto him if he has the audacity to attack the sins of which they are guilty! The scriptural conception of the good hearer is that he is more anxious to hear about his own sins than about the sins of others. The end for which men should hear preaching is that they may be enabled to lead lives of righteousness and live in constant communion with God. Cornelius-like, we ought to hear as in the sight of God! In order to get the best results from hearing preparation is needed. The hearer no less than the preacher ought to go to the sanctuary from his closet. He ought to pray earnestly that he may be enabled to find in the sermon the food that his soul needs. He who hears in this way is almost sure to find profit in the hearing, while he who goes to church for the same reason that he would attend a lecture or the theatre usually gets very little true spiritual profit even from the best sermon.

"Preachers and Preaching."

MR. EDITOR: Last Summer I read a series of lectures on "Preachers and Preaching" delivered at Chautauqua by Dr. D. H. Johnson, of Chicago. I was so pleased with them that, by your permission, I will reproduce some of his best thoughts for the benefit of those of your readers who may not have seen them.

The subject of the first lecture was, "The Preacher in his Study and with His Books," in which he said: A preacher is nothing if not a student. Pulpit efficiency requires "piety, a good voice, a little common sense, plus brains." The "study" should be a place for thoughtful and prayerful preparation for all his ministerial and parochial duties. It should be free from intrusion. Here the preacher meets and communes with God. Here he should be surrounded with good books. His one motive should be to make himself a more efficient preacher. He should be often on his knees. Let him decide how many hours of each day to devote to study, and what part of the day, and set it apart for that purpose, and then sacredly adhere to his plan. "Study is close, careful, hard, uninterrupted application, taxing all the powers of the intellect." A preacher should supply himself with good, standard books, but only as they are needed. In studying a book read first the preface, table of contents, and the introduction. By this time one can decide whether the book is worth reading. If so then read attentively with pencil in hand, and mark carefully and liberally. If you read merely for the general drift of the argument, read hurriedly; but if for the style of the writer, read more deliberately.

The second lecture was on, "The Preacher with His Text," in which he said: A text is not indispensable to the sermon, but a theme is. Yet a preacher should announce a text. The text should contain the subject to be discussed. It should be complete in itself, clearly genuine—the truth of God, brief and specific. It should be selected with scrupulous care. A preacher should be collecting texts all the time, noting them in a text book, outlining plans of sermons, and jotting down good thoughts that otherwise will be forgotten. He should put no meaning into a text that is not there. High sounding and odd texts are to be avoided, but plain and familiar texts are to be preferred. Do not take two texts; they never point exactly in the same direction. Be sure of the correct meaning of the text, and stick to it in preaching. By honoring God's truth we honor God himself. Use great themes in the pulpit. A question arises: Should the text suggest the theme, or the theme the text? Both. In the parish with the flock the theme will suggest the text. In the study with the books the text will suggest the theme. [Some years ago I read a good article in the Homiletical Review on, "How the Pastor Helps the Preacher," in which the writer showed that a pastor in his pastoral work may gather much valuable material for his sermons which he can not get elsewhere.]

The subject of the third lecture was, "The Ideal Sermon." He said: To make and deliver sermons is the great life-work of the preacher. A sermon is "a formal religious discourse founded upon the Word of God and designed to save men." The sermon is ideal when it is perfect in its adaptations to this end. This adaptation relates to the subject matter, the inward structure, and the outward form. A preacher must be true to the truth, and true to himself—that is, he must be "brave and natural." "The sermon must be a perfect climax; the sermon is the climax itself." There must be in it "unity, order, and movement." Unity is one out of many—many ideas from the same source and bearing on the same end. All irrelevant matter should be excluded, and only such materials used as will develop the theme and accomplish the end in view. Unity stimulates the inventive faculties and makes definite impressions on the hearers. Order is as important as unity. Be methodical and systematic in the treatment of the subject. All men like orderly arrangements. Movement is another fundamental quality in preaching. It is continuity, progress, the exhilaration of a forward movement. The truth is borne along and the people with it. These are the chief secrets of power, humanly speaking—"unity, order and movement." Let the sermon be perspicuous, vivid, and energetic.

"Sermonic Preparation" was the subject of the fourth lecture, in which he said: To improve his general efficiency as a preacher the minister should cultivate a vivid sense of the divine reality of the gospel message—a sense of the invisible. He should also cultivate the homiletic bias all the way through life. This will give him method, and a facility in grasping the salient points of a text. He should avoid pulpit helps: they are pulpit "hinderances." He should make himself familiar with the sources of material—good books, especially the Bible.

As for special preparation, get a text, and write down the theme to be discussed, and decide what you wish to accomplish by the discussion of the theme. These points settled, decide how best to discuss the theme in order to accomplish that object. There are four general objects to be accomplished by the sermon, viz.: Instruction, conviction, stimulation and persuasion. Arrange materials in hand to the best advantage. Then write your sermon at one sitting if possible. Stimulate yourself by thinking of the object in view. Do not suffer yourself disturbed while writing. Write for the ear rather than for the eye.

The subject of the fifth and last lecture was, "Delivery." He said: Delivery is the chief thing in eloquence. Everyone can acquire a good delivery. Orators are made, not born. As to sources of power in delivery, they are physical, mental, and intermediate—that is, both physical and mental. As to the physical, stand firmly on your feet, erect, easy, graceful. Gestures are an immense aid both to expression and to impression. A gesture should be the expression of feeling. Get the habit of thus expressing feeling by practicing out of the pulpit before a glass and learn to be graceful. In the pulpit they should never be thought of, but should be spontaneous and natural. Little children not spoiled are natural, and are good object lessons to be studied. Motion for passion is outward, away from the body. Motion for thought is inward, towards the body. There should be first the expression in the face, then the expression in the voice, and finally the expression in the gesture. There should not be too much gesticulation, and the gesture should be adapted to the subject.

The voice is a source of power and holds the first place as a physical instrument in preaching. Here is the rule he lays down for the use of the voice in preaching: "Begin low, rise high; wax warm, rise higher; and at the end take fire and sit down in a storm." Then he says: In preaching use the confidential tone; talk to your audience in an easy, familiar way, and avoid sustained loudness. I suppose these two rules can be harmonized.

But the secret of power after all is in the spiritual realm—ideas, feelings, earnestness and authority. The basis of earnestness is conviction, not only of the truth of the message being delivered, but also of your personal responsibility to God in its delivery.

I have given a very imperfect outline of the lectures as published in the Assembly Herald. If this outline shall be of any advantage to young preachers who may read it, I shall be more than compensated for the time and labor spent in writing it.

W. B. LEWIS.

Natchez, Miss.

Read This.

We hereby make an appeal in behalf of Rev. J. H. Evans, of the Mississippi Conference, who is sadly in need of help. He and his family are entirely without furniture, the scant supply which they now have being borrowed for a short time only. When this is taken away, as it will be soon, they will be left without a chair, bedstead or furniture of any kind and almost without bedding. Bro. Evans has no money to buy with, and is not likely to get any, as he on a mission which can not pay him enough to live on, much less to buy furniture. He is a true itinerant, having served the church faithfully in many hard fields. He is now advanced in years. Surely there are many good people who will respond promptly to this call. Send money by postoffice order or registered letter to Rev. J. H. Evans, Raleigh, Smith county, Miss.

The New Orleans Advocate's Position Endorsed.

We wrote an editorial a few weeks since in which we took the position that the time has come when our church ought to confer upon every preacher in charge the right to administer the sacraments. The last issue of the Nashville has an article from Bishop Fitzgerald advocating the same view. We quote as follows: "A letter now lying on my desk from a young preacher in Oregon states that he fears the loss of several persons converted under his ministry because he can not legally baptize them. He is the only minister of our denomination within the bounds of a wide territory. The presiding elder's quarterly visit does not meet the difficulty in cases like this, which are, perhaps, more numerous than many of our people realize."

Read the communication of Bro. J. P. Drake and the accompanying letter of Sister Lambuth. Then, if you feel that you ought to contribute to this cause, send the money as indicated by Bro. Drake. We will publish a list of contributors.

Now is the Time.

Our church in Mississippi has this year a rare opportunity to do something handsome in behalf of Christian education. Just think of it—one man proposing to duplicate any amount that may be contributed for this cause, provided the aggregate is not over $25,000. Surely this ought to stimulate our people to do their best. When every dollar a man gives counts two this certainly ought to be an incentive to give all he can. The suggestion of Dr. Cooper about making a special effort on a particular Sabbath is worthy of careful consideration. But whether that is done or not, let each church do something.

NOTES.

Rev. S. A. Russell, of Louisiana, looked in upon us a few days since.

***

Rev. D. C. Rawls, of the Mississippi Conference, has been sojourning in the city recently.

***

Crawford Street Church, Vicksburg, Miss., Dr. C. G. Andrews, pastor, has an interesting meeting in progress.

***

We have had appreciated calls recently from Bro. B. F. Ormond, of Meridian. Also from Bro. R. H. Noblin, of Edwards.

***

A letter from Rev. J. P. Drake brings the glad tidings that the afflicted members of Rev. A. D. Miller's family are now convalescing.

***

By a private letter from Dr. J. M. Beard we learn that he is comfortably domiciled at Lafayette, and that the outlook on his district is cheering.

***

The poetry on the second page, signed J. W. S., is from the pen of Rev. J. W. Sandell, of the Mississippi Conference, whose estimable wife died in the faith a few weeks since.

***

We have made arrangements to offer some valuable premiums for subscriptions. The first of these offers we make in this issue. Others will be made in the near future. See "Our Grand Combination" offer.

***

We learn that Rev. A. D. Miller, of the Mississippi Conference, is passing through the deep waters. Four of his family, including his wife and grown son, have been seriously ill for some time with pneumonia. Bro. Miller has the sympathies and prayers of his brethren. We hope all will soon be well.

***

Dwight L. Moody, the world-renowned evangelist, and Ira D. Sankey, the great singer, began a series of meetings in Washington City, Wednesday. A chorus of 1,500 voices has been in practice under the direction of Mr. Sankey. The meetings are to have the support of all the evangelical organizations, and it is said everything points toward an unusually successful series.

***

Our Hygiene Department, we are glad to say, is a decided success. The people read it and profit by it. We have received testimonials concerning it from physicians of high standing as well as from the people. We have the promise of an article in the near future from a physician who stands in the very front rank of the profession on a subject that concerns a multitude of people.

***

Gen. Walthall's seat in the United States Senate has been filled by the election of Hon. A. J. McLaurin, of Brandon. Mr. McLaurin is a lawyer of fine abilities and a man of sterling integrity. He is a man of great affability—one who will make friends wherever he goes. He is a Methodist, and a regular attendant upon the services of his church. We predict that he will be true to his Church as well as his State in Washington.

***

The Louisiana Conference Parsonage and Home Mission Society has held services each day during the past week at Rayne Memorial Church, in this city. The services were interesting and profitable. A special service was held on Friday night at Carondelet Street Church, at which appropriate addresses were delivered by Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D., presiding elder of the New Orleans district; Rev. T. K. Faunt LeRoy, pastor of Felicity Street Church, and Mrs. E. E. Wiley, of Emory, Va. This organization, though in its infancy, has already done a great work in stimulating the church to build homes for our preachers. It is really wonderful to know that Southern Methodism has built about as many parsonages in the last eight years as in all its previous history. We hope the meetings held during the past week will result in giving our church, as a whole, a clearer view of the aims of this society.

King's Improved Cotton.

Extra Early. Prolific. Long Limbs. 36 to 40 per cent. Lint.

This cotton gave the heaviest yield (1,370 pounds seed cotton) per acre in competition with 36 other varieties at the Mississippi Agricultural Experiment Station in 1890, and its good record has been fully maintained in all subsequent experiments.

This trial was absolutely impartial. Each cotton had exactly the same chances in every way. The result shows that, under similar conditions, with exactly the same treatment in every way, King's Improved Cotton will produce from 20 to 100 per cent. more cotton than the most noted varieties in the South.

Price: 25 CENTS PER PACKAGE.

SEEDS.

World's Fair Medal & Diploma

King's exhibit of Seeds and Garden Vegetables was awarded several premiums and a special diploma by Piedmont Exposition judges in 1891. It was also awarded a medal at the World's Fair, as being the best on exhibition there. The collection is a choice selection of garden vegetable seeds.

The collection contains twenty papers of seed.

25 CENTS PER PACKAGE.

KING'S IMPROVED CORN.

At the Georgia State Experiment Station this corn was tested with 15 kinds. The purpose of the trial was to find out which variety would make the largest quantity per acre, under same conditions.

Result: King's beat 15 other kinds, producing, with same chances identically, 50 per cent. more than some of the improved varieties.

This corn is a large white kind—makes excellent bread. Produces well on poor land.

Price: 25 CENTS PER PACKAGE.

Grand Combination Offer

1 package of King's Improved Cotton, 1 package of King's Improved Corn, and 20 papers of best Garden Seed, described above—all for 25 cents.

HOW TO OBTAIN

THIS OFFER.

If you are not a subscriber for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, subscribe at once. Send $2 for the paper, with 25 cents additional.

If you are already a subscriber, but are in arrears, pay up your subscription to January, 1895, and send 25 cents additional.

If you have already paid up to January, 1895, then pay up to January, 1896, and send 25 cents additional.

This is a rare offer. You get for 25 cents a collection which would cost you 75 cents if you were to buy from the producer. No farmer ought to delay a day. Here is an opportunity to secure corn, cotton and garden vegetables of the very best varieties at the lowest possible price.

Bishop R. K Hargrove will preach the commencement sermon at Wofford College next June.

Bishop Granbery, on last Sabbath, Feb. 11, preached one of the four Spring sermons at the University of Virginia.

R. Foster Stone closed a temperance meeting at La Plata, Mo., last Sunday. Over 600 persons signed the temperance pledge.

The Methodist Episcopal Church is building a Publishing House to cost $100 000 in Rome, and they expect to open a school there.

Robert College, in Bulgaria, has given to that country nearly all its present statesmen and leaders of thought. It is a Methodist college.

Rev. Dr. Alonzo Hill, president of Tuscaloosa Female College, Ala., died suddenly last week. He was a man of great moral worth, and an excellent educator.

Many a Methodist who is too poor to take his church paper, rolls the tobacco quid as a sweet morsel under his tongue at a cost of thirty dollars a year.—Holston Methodist.

Southern Christian Advocate: Chancellor J. H. Kirkland, of Vanderbilt University, has consented to deliver the literary address at the next commencement of Wofford College.

Thibet is the only country now closed to Christian missionaries. Miss Taylor, who has been laboring in China, has made some explorations in Thibet and thinks the time has come to do something. She is now in England organizing a Thibet mission.

We have heard of quite a number of church members who have begun the practice of economy these hard times by giving less to the church and benevolence, and in a few instances by giving up their church paper. But we have not heard of one giving up tobacco—no, not one!—Baltimore Methodist.

A remarkable example of the good effect of a godly man's life has been furnished near Omagh, county Tyrone, Ireland, where a member of the Presbyterian Church, just deceased, has left $150,000 to Wesleyan foreign missions, in memory of a poor man, a Methodist, long since departed, who used to talk to him of Jesus and his love.

Dr. W. M. Leftwich left Nashville on the first instant for a protracted visit to Texas. He will do evangelistic work in connection with the pastors in that State. The Texans may be sure of hearing a sound, strong, earnest gospel. Dr. Leftwich is a man of versatile gifts. He can do more things well than almost any other preacher in our acquaintance.—Nashville Advocate.

A new religious movement for total abstinence has recently been organized by Mr. John S. Huyler, of New York, and incorporated under the laws of the State. It is called the Christian Men's Union, and is unsectarian and non-political. Its object is "to arouse Christian men throughout the nation and organize them into unions for united efforts to save the youth from spirituous and fermented beverages, and to rescue those already enslaved." The plan for spreading the work is to form local unions all over this country and Canada. Men are to be sent out from New York to organize these unions.

The press dispatches announce the death of Rev. Dr. Canaro D. Smith at his home near Franklin, N. C., on the 30th ultimo. Dr. Smith in his day ranked with the foremost preachers of the Holston Conference. After itinerating for a quarter of a century, he was compelled by ill health to retire to the local ranks. Following his natural tastes and appetites, he gave himself to the study of the mineralogy and geology of Western North Carolina, and became an authority on those subjects. As he was able he continued to preach, and was always sure of an audience. He was an honor to our church, a good citizen, a sincere Christian, an able minister of the New Testament.—Nashville Advocate.

Mrs. E. E. Wiley.

Mrs. E. E. Wiley has been abundant in labor during her stay in New Orleans. She made a talk every day at the meeting of the Conference society. On Sunday she made four talks, viz: at Parker's Chapel, Felicity, Louisiana Avenue and Algiers. These addresses were all good. That at Louisiana Avenue, in the afternoon, was especially effective. Mrs. Wiley is doing noble service in a good cause.

What They Say of Us.

We are constantly receiving letters highly commendatory of the editorial conduct of the ADVOCATE.

An educator, whose name is known throughout Southern Methodism, writes as follows:

No other paper coming to my address equals yours in the richness and fitness of its selections. You have tact editorial—a rare endowment.

A prominent minister writes:

I like the paper you are making exceedingly. And the best of all is you are improving your look from week to week.

A layman of high standing says:

Allow me to thank you for the rich feast you spread before your readers every week. You are rendering the church a noble service.

A good sister writes:

The ADVOCATE is a feast to my soul; and it seems to me that it gets better and better all the time.

These are samples of a great number of letters received within the last few weeks. We thank God, and take courage.

The Kobe Industrial School.

The following extract from a letter just received from our dear and honored sister speaks for itself. Though not intended for publication, I am sure she will pardon the liberty I thus take. Her own words will move the hearts of the people more than anything I can say. Brethren, please give the matter immediate attention. The money need not be paid immediately. Good subscriptions are now in order to be cashed before the year shall close. Preachers and other workers for God can get Sunday-schools and missionary societies to pledge anything from five dollars up. This is a special work that will interest the young as well as the older. Brethren, let us honor ourselves by aiding in this good cause that promises such rich harvests. Cash or subscriptions sent to Dr. T. S. West, at Jackson, Miss., will be duly reported. Who will first respond?

J. P. DRAKE.

McMeekin, Fla., Feb. 2, 1894.

Rev. J. P. Drake—

Dear Brother: Your kind letter to Dr. W. R Lambuth has been forwarded me to this place, where I took up winter-quarters directly after the close of our Conference, and I am exceedingly thankful to report myself in better health than at any time since leaving Japan. For this I am very grateful to our dear Father in heaven, who has so kindly preserved me and given me such tokens of loving favor.

Let me thank you, too, for your gift to the Industrial School Fund in Kobe, Japan. The nine dollars for yourself and one dollar from your sister, Mrs. B. Jones, will be a great help, and I pray that the blessing of God may attend its use and lead many another Christian brother and sister to do likewise. Perhaps, Dr. Black would not mind keeping this matter before the Methodist people within reach of his ADVOCATE, also publishing a list of all sums donated as they may be sent him.

Do you think this plan would be a good one? And do you not think the sisters and the children of the different districts might be invited to aid in this matter? If I could afford to do so, I would gladly go around and solicit funds myself. The expense of travel is considerable, and if by making our wants known in the church papers, we can reach our desired end, then may it not be better to secure funds in that way? I was disappointed that we could not have received what willing hearts were ready to give at Conference time, but I trust in God for help and for funds to do what he would be pleased to have done.

I learn from Dr. W. R. Lambuth that fifty dollars were in hand a few weeks since at Nashville for the Industrial School, and it may be there is more by this time.

It has been in my heart to try and be ready for a return to Japan by July at any rate, and I would be much encouraged if we had the Industrial School funds in hand to report as ready for use on my arrival in Kobe. A late letter tells me that the school grows in interest, and for this I am truly thankful. Will you not join in prayer for a special blessing upon our Japan work, and also that the native Christians in Japan may all have a fresh and full outpouring of the Holy Ghost upon them this present year, so that they may remain firm and consecrated to the dear Savior's service among their unconverted people!

When and where is your District Conference to be held? Could you send me a list of District Conferences within the bounds of Mississippi, and also of any special meetings to be held in March and April? Please address me at McMeekin, Fla., care Mrs. A. H. McClellan.

Yours sincerely in the Master's work, M. I. LAMBUTH.

Minutes of the North Mississippi Conference.

I am sorry the Minutes fail to show what pastoral charges were aided from the home mission fund. I do not know whether the omission occurs from design or by accident. However that may be, I think those who furnish the "sinews of war" ought to have the means of knowing how their money is used. It is true during the missionary anniversary the amounts appropriated or paid each so-called missionary was announced; but few of the men who paid the money were there to hear it, and hence they do not know, and have no means of knowing, how their money was disposed of by the Mission Board. No pretense of economy of time or space can be urged in justification of this omission. Fifteen minutes' time would have sufficed to put the omitted information in form for publication, and less than one page of the published Minutes would have contained it all. I hope the treasurer or secretary will supply the information through the ADVOCATE. D. G. W. ELLIS.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

BY REV. HENRY H. AHRENS.

Theme for Prayer Meeting.

TRIAL OF ABRAHAM'S FAITH.

(Gen. xxii, 1-13.)

In the grand enumeration of the heroes of faith (Heb. xi), a brilliant galaxy, the name of Abraham occupies a prominent place. See

1. Abraham's wisdom. (1) Kept the purpose of his journey from his wife. She would have interfered. (2) He rose up early. Difficult tasks must be performed without delay. Parleying adds to the difficulty. Seek conversion early in life. See

2. The great trial. (1) Knowing his strength, God purposely lacerated Abraham's heart by the phraseology in which the instruction was couched. "Take thy son, thy only son, whom thou lovest." (2) His son's interrogatory intensified the patriarch's agony: "Here is the fire and the wood; but where is the lamb?" (3) Daggers of anguish must have pierced the patriarch's soul while erecting the altar. (4) At last the awful deed had to be performed. Though almost overcome with greatest pang, "Abraham stretched forth his hand, and took the knife to slay his son." See the

3. Divine interposition. (1) God called on Abraham not to carry out the letter of the instructions given. (2) Assured him that the willingness to sacrifice his son was proof sufficient of his piety. (3) God provided a ram for a sacrifice.

Learn: (1) The best we have is not too good for God. Learn: (2) God did more than Abraham. "He spared not his own son, but delivered him up for us all."

The Union League.

The New Orleans Epworth Union League held the monthly reunion in Carondelet Street Church, Feb. 8. President Morris DePass in the chair. The secretary, Miss Addie McKnight, officiated with her usual alacrity. Dr. Black, editor of our CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, opened the meeting with religious exercises. The reports from the various congregational Leagues, by their secretaries, indicated progress. Drs. Carter and LaPrade honored the League with their presence. It was resolved that the secretaries of the congregational Leagues report monthly at the union meeting—first, the number of members; second, how much money had been received, and how spent; third, what is being done in the way of charity and mission work. The next monthly meeting will be held in Felicity Street Church.

Frugality.

Some celebrated foreigner declared, "Americans are a nation of spendthrifts." But prodigality is no more liberality than avariciousness is frugality. A miser is no more despicable than a spendthrift. It is true that "a penny saved is a penny made." We must learn to deny ourselves what is not strictly necessary. We contract too many expensive habits. Save, lest bankruptcy overwhelm you with disgrace. Save, lest in old age you will be reduced to penury. Save, lest ultimately you sink into a pauper's grave.

Children's First Contribution to Millsaps College Hall.

My Dear Little Friends: My first contribution by the children to our new hall is from Carrollton, Miss. One dollar each from David L., Louise E., Charles Galloway and Fanny C. Bingham. Now, this is a fine beginning. These friends have the honor of sending the first letter, and it was a hopeful one. We want such friends in every community in the State. We are going to do great things for the Lord this year. We must have a name for our hall, and we desire every young person sending a contribution to send his vote as to what the hall should be named. A record will be kept of the amount you send and of your vote. As soon as you read this write me.

Your friend, I. W. COOPER.

A Protest.

Permit me, Mr. Editor, to utter my protest against the call to an Easter observance by the financial agent of Millsaps College even though that call be re-enforced by the names of the presidents of the faculty and of the trustees. So long as I live will I never participate in or in any manner countenance an Easter observance—unless I should go clean over to Rome. Certainly I shall not stop in the Protestant Episcopal half-way house or join in encouraging Methodists to ape the so-called "æsthetics" of that Parliamentary offspring of England's State Church. I prefer the old methods and the old gospel without any Dolly Varden or Mardi Gras additions. I am sick of this annual effort, first from one quarter and then from another, to foist Easter observances on us. Methodism has flourished without such stuff. We need none of it now.

Notice.

To the Preachers in the Aberdeen District, North Mississippi Conference—

Dear Brethren: You have noticed in last week's ADVOCATE from Bro. Newell, secretary Board of Missions, that I have been appointed your district secretary, to report the work and success of each pastor in the district in the cause of Christian missions. Please let me have a report from each charge by the first of March, that we all may comply with this resolution of our Board. Fraternally yours,

John O'Neil.

Will you please inform me, through the valuable columns of your paper, if such a man as John O'Neil lives in New Orleans? He was a native of Newtownhamilton, County Armagh, Ireland. He left his native home about the year of 1860, and proceeded to Scotland. He remained there about two years, and then came to America and located in New Orleans, where he bought some property, the amount of which I do not know. Nothing has been heard of him since. Any information as to his whereabouts will be thankfully received by his sister,

THE BEST. Tested and Proven

Seeds! World's Fair Medal & Diploma.

My exhibit of Seeds and Garden Vegetables was awarded several Premiums and a Special Diploma by Piedmont Exposition Judges in 1891. Encouraged by this success, I sent a collection of seeds to the World's Fair, and was awarded Medal and Diploma for best collection there. This is high endorsement, for the seed met in competition those great seed houses of this country, but mine got there beautifully. I have had experience with the various seeds offered the farmers, and my judgment says the collection below is the best. The collection is a choice selection of Garden Vegetable Seeds, and is gotten up with the idea of establishing a seed business: 28 papers (extra large) of choice Vegetable Seed; 1 package containing 200 Annuals (Flower); 1 package of my Cotton, "King's Improved;" 1 package of my Corn, "King's Improved"—all postpaid for $1. HOME CIRCLE.

AT MOTHER'S KNEE.

Safe to the fold the Shepherd leads
His little lambs at close of day,
And thus my darlings come to me,
At last grown wearied of their play;
And while the twilight shadows fall
O'er hill and meadow from above,
I draw my little lambkins safe
Within the fold of home and love.

All day the restless feet have chased
The wandering sunbeams here and there;
All day the merry breeze has kissed
My darlings' cheeks, and brow, and hair;
All day my listening ear has caught
The happy sound of childish glee,
Until, at last, the sunset hour
Has brought the children to my knee.

Oh, drowsy eyes of blue and brown,
Oh, nodding heads! I understand;
'Tis time two little travelers start,
With mother's aid, for "slumber-land."
So fold the dresses snug away,
And free the restless, dainty feet
From shoe and stocking. Thus, at last,
My little lambs, refreshed and sweet.

And robed in white, before me kneel
With folded hands. O Father, thou
Who art the Shepherd of thy flock,
Bow down thine ear and listen now
To each low, childish prayer that these,
My children, offer up to thee.
Hallow the twilight hour, O Lord,
That brings them thus before my knee.

And so through all the silent hours
Which lie between the night and day,
They shall not fear, since from the fold
Thy love will drive all foes away.
Sleep, little ones, oh, sweetly sleep,
Till morning sunbeams gather fast.
And safe from "slumber-land" you come
Back to your mother's knee at last.

Family Manners.

The virtues are of various sizes. There are big, heroic virtues, to which youth is forever leaping; and there are little virtues, which do not make much showing in our private Book of Martyrs. To the latter class belongs the virtue of politeness.

Some will even deny that it is a virtue. We all know the man who cares for nothing under heaven but Truth—spelt always with a capital T; who looks upon fine manners as he would look upon the seductions of the sirens; who tramps his way through society, positive, self-assertive, leaving a track of discomfort up to his own house door, from behind which we hear his characteristic remark: "My dear, I'm not scolding. I'm just telling you."

Good man!—it is only that he lacks the sixth, saving sense of the artistry of life. It is a sense which should awake with the rest of the senses—in childhood. The manners one attempts to put on in after life are apt to fit ill. Worst of all, they leave one at the mercy of traitorous memory.

We remember a young woman who had grown up in a wealthy but uncultivated home. She was talented and noble-hearted. But many kindly people were forced to say of her, "She is not a lady." She herself confessed it one day in a passionate outburst:

"I know I'm rude, but I can't help it. I never was taught to be polite at home, and now to remember what I ought and ought not to do is as difficult as walking on ice. When I'm exacted I'm sure to say or do something which shocks the very people I care most for, and they give me the cold shoulder and take up with girls who I know are inferior."

And the worst of it is, it was all true.

The thousand and one points of common good breeding which children acquire in a well ordered, gracious home under the eye of a winning mother—to be gentle of manner; to walk, stand and sit gracefully; not to fidget, grimace, yawn; in conversation to use low and pleasant tones; not to interrupt, or contradict, or brag; not to assert too strongly or laugh too loud—all this comes to the children, if at times slowly, still assuredly. Their minds open to the beauty of gentle, graceful living as naturally as to the beauty of the works of art upon their walls.

If it were not so, if fine manners could be taught to children only by constant nagging, we might well prefer that the poor innocent should be left to their ignorance and their bliss. What is demanded is the lift of the whole family life to a high level; and then the adoption of Froebel's noble motto, "Come and let us live with our children."

Hence it is that parents who have a code of company manners, who are more shocked at some excrescence of animal spirits in the parlor than at the breaking of all the Decalogue in the nursery, do not find the family growth in politeness satisfactory. And we shall be likely to hear them, a little later on, lamenting the ways of their careless girls and rough boys, and settling into the belief that the boys, at least, are by nature incorrigibly rude, fit only to be kept out of sight until they assume responsibility for themselves.

Your wise mother is not given to worrying over trifles. She does not expect perfection in a day. And she has put from her, as far as the East is from the West, the ghastly possibility of setting vanity up in the room of love. So she does not begin with exhaustive attention to the minutiæ of etiquette, knowing that way lies the danger of making her boys prigs and her girls self-conscious society misses before they are in their teens. She lays down, as the laws of her household, the broad principles of respect for elders, reverence for women, kindness for all; and she permeates the home atmosphere with her finest conceptions of the deference and the sympathy due from soul to soul.

Her children very early delight to place a chair for grandmother, and to save father steps. They learn to be proud of that restrait which enables them to keep self in the background, and to defer to brother and sister. It never enters their heads that servants are less worthy of respect than other people. They are as unabashed in the presence of wealth and power as they are tender toward suffering and poverty. When she teaches them from time to time her code of manners—and she is careful to perfect it according to her best judgment—she teaches it for home use, and it becomes fixed by becoming natural.

Thus, over and above all formal rules, untrammeled by them, developing and individuality which is its own badge of distinction, there come to such a brood of brave girls and gentle boys a feeling for the charm of life and a sweet humanity which blossoms spontaneously into

"Noble manners, or the flower
And perfect fruit of noble mind."
—Harper's Bazar.

Don't Worry.

If you want a good appetite, don't worry. If you want a healthy body, don't worry. If you want things to go right in your home or your business, don't worry. Nervousness, according to the American Artisan, is the bane of the race. It is not confined to the women by any means, but extends to the men as well. What good does fretting do? It only increases with indulgence, like anger, or appetite, or love, or any other human impulse. It deranges one's temper, excites unpleasant feelings towards everybody, and confuses the mind. It affects the whole person, unfits one for the proper completion of the work whose trifling interruption or disturbance started the fretful fit. Suppose these things go wrong to-day, the to-morrows are coming in which to try again, and the thing is not worth clonding your own spirit and those around you, injuring yourself and them physically for such a trifle. Strive to cultivate a spirit of patience, both for your own good and the good of those about you. You will never regret the step; for it will not only add to your own happiness, but the example of your conduct will effect those with whom you associate, and in whom you are interested. Suppose somebody makes a mistake, suppose you are crossed, or a trifling accident occurs; to fly into a fretful mood will not mend, but help to hinder the attainment of what you wish. Then, when a thing is beyond repair, waste no useless regrets over it, and do no idle fretting. Strive for that serenity of spirit that will enable you to make the best of all things. That means contentment in its best sense, and contentment is the only true happiness of life. A pleasant disposition and good work will make the whole surroundings ring with cheerfulness.—Ex.

THE BOY THAT LAUGHS.

I know a funny little boy—
The happiest ever born;
His face is like a beam of joy,
Although his clothes are torn.

I saw him tumble on his nose,
And waited for a groan—
But how he laughed! Do you suppose
He struck his funny-bone?

There's sunshine in each word he speaks,
His laugh is something grand;
Its ripples overrun his cheeks
Like waves on snowy sand.

He laughs the moment he awakes,
And till the day is done;
The school-room for a joke he takes—
His lessons are but fun.

No matter how the day may go,
You can not make him cry;
He's worth a dozen boys, I know,
Who pout and mope and sigh.
—Wide Awake.

The Young Man's Aim.

The Scientific American, a few years ago, related the case of a young man who stepped into an Indianapolis rolling mill and asked for work. "What can you do?" asked the president. "I don't know," said the young man. "Have you a trade?" "No, sir." "Where did you come from?" "From Peunsylvania." "Are you a German?" "No, sir; I am an American." "If you were a German, or an Irishman, or a Frenchman, I could set you to work; because you would know how to do something. You would have aimed at something. Too many of our American young men are living at random," said the president.

General Grant, when honored with the freedom of the city of London, was approached by a ragged tramp who reminded Grant that they once worked side by side in the same tannery. "Yes," said the general, "and I remember you were the better workman." "True," said the tramp, "but you aimed better than I."

Success comes to him who aims well. And a good aim involves correct habits, right conceptions, and self-denying devotion to duty. The young man who had a good situation in a meat market, and shot himself because he could not step at once into a place where he could dress better and work less, may have aimed well; but he failed to do what his aim involved.

George Law began life in Troy, New York, without a friend or a penny in the world. One day he saw a hod-carrier fall from a building and break his leg. Young Law at once asked the foreman for the man's place. "Did you ever carry a hod?" said the foreman. "No," said Law. "Then you will break you leg, and perhaps your neck." "Never mind that," said Law, "can I have the place?" He got it. And from the grasping of that humble opportunity, and unflagging devotion to it, he became one of the wealthiest builders in the United States.

A young man with a high aim and a resolute will to follow it, will be deaf to the sirens' song tempting him to enter into the ruinous drift of fast living and social dissipation. As the conservation of the forces of nature is necessary in the material universe, so every young man, to succeed, must be a conservator of his moral and physical forces. Young man, make sure of a high ideal. Aim above the range of all unholy lust. Meet every duty and self-denial of to-day like a real hero, and conquer it into servitude for the greater and more difficult ones of to-morrow; for unless you do that you will not be equal to to-morrow's conquests.

One reason why so many are grand failures is because they have not taken time to learn how in the business of life. This is a grave mistake. Ex-President Merrick, in a chapel lecture to the students of the Ohio Wesleyan University, once said:

"Young men, qualify yourselves for your work. Learn how to do it well. And if you do not enter upon your chosen profession before you are thirty years of age, you will accomplish more than if you had started at twenty without it." Aim at a complete mastery of your calling. Aim high; and follow up your aim with diligence, self-denial, and a good, well-built character. Aim higher in your reading than the daily paper and the latest novel. Aim for nothing short of the highest success. Aimlessness is a sin. It is an eating cancer that feeds upon a young man's vital forces, and robs him of his opportunities. But aim higher than the vain, pleasure-loving society of the world. The road to honor does not run through Vanity. Be men—ambitious men, high-minded men; too noble in spirit and too lofty in aim to be the slaves of groveling sense.—Delta.

Household Religion.

Surely this is the only kind worth mentioning. That is, the religion which is not felt in the household from day to day, the religion which confines itself to the church and to Sunday or to a certain round of outward observances, must be spurious. It certainly will not pass muster as genuine Christianity.

The sort of piety on which Christ puts his stamp studies the comfort of all around. It is full of sympathy, brotherly kindness, and friendly aid. It is considerate for others' feelings, and scrupulous about others' rights. It carries a cheerful countenance, speaks pleasant words, and abounds in little deeds of love. It does not forget that happiness is made up mainly of trifles, being not a single, magnificent gem, but a mosaic composed of a thousand pieces. And it resolves to enroll itself in the number of happiness-makers, burden-bearers, who scatter flowers, diffuse sunshine, and take all possible pains to give pleasure.

Of what vital importance it is to every household that it be a shrine of this religion. How otherwise can the children grow up good? Of what use is right instruction by the preacher one day in the week if it be offset by bad example at home six days? What avails a formal lecture from the parent now and then if it be not emphasized by a consistent life?

Blessed are the children of true Christian parents, day by day drinking in wholesome spiritual food and strengthening moral nutriment! Blessed are the parents of Christian children, sending forth into the future prolonged influences for good, permanently represented on the earth by intelligence and virtue long years after they themselves have ascended to heaven! How miserable the estate of those whose names must go down to posterity linked with creatures of wretchedness, vice and crime! Too late for repentance do such behold the legitimate outcome of the absence of household religion.

Some have we seen whose own parents had left in their hearts and lives a precious legacy of Christian faith and love divine. Yet they themselves were not pious, and so were making a break in the chain, and defrauding their children of that boon which should have passed on without diminution. Those children had no godly influences around them, and hence in the hour of temptation would have no sweet memories to hold them fast, and in the stress of the world's conflicts they would be almost sure to deteriorate. An impaired vitality of virtue would probably be passed on in turn to their children, and so the stock would degenerate. How sad!

Let every man that is a man, every woman that is a woman, reflect very seriously on these things, and in some moment of sacred silence answer honestly one or two questions: Will your children have as good a chance as you had, not merely in temporal, but in spiritual matters? Or will they reproach you some day, and say that they have been robbed of the best part of what should have been theirs? Are you doing by them as you would wish to be done by? They have a right to receive from you an example of positive piety. It will be worth to them more than lands and gold.

Household religion—something that shall brighten the eye, sweeten the voice, check the hasty word, alter the impatient tone, make the brow smoother, the heart happier, and the home a paradise! This is what we need.—Zion's Herald.

It is told of Hannah More that she had a good way of managing tale-bearers. It is said that whenever she was told anything derogatory to another her invariable reply was, "Come, we will go and ask if this be true." The effect was sometimes ludicrously painful. The tale-bearer was taken back, stammered out a qualification, or begged that no notice might be taken of the statement. But the good lady was inexorable; off she took the scandal-monger to the scandalized to make inquiry and compare accounts. It is not likely that anybody ever a second time ventured to repeat a gossipy story to Hannah More.

APPLEWHITE—Died at their home, near Walden, Miss., Dec. 27, 1893, Sister S. C. APPLEWHITE, wife of Bro. J. W. Applewhite, and eldest daughter of T. D. Anderson, of Winona, Miss.

The above announcement will sadden the hearts of all the preachers who have traveled the Winona and Walden circuits for the last fifteen or twenty years, and call up in memory the happy hours spent in her pleasant home and the unnumbered acts of kindness received at her hands. She was born near the home where she spent her happy married life on April 4, 1856, and was married to her now bereaved husband, Oct. 24, 1872, and till the hour of her departure ever proved herself worthy of the love given and the confidence reposed in her. Her mother dying soon after her marriage, the care and training of her four younger sisters for a season were thrown upon her, and well did she meet the obligations and discharge the duties thus imposed.

In 1874 she professed religion and joined the M. E. Church, South, at Columbiana, of which till the day of her death she was one of its most active and useful members. Nine children were born to them—one son and eight daughters. Two of the daughters died in infancy. The son, a student in Millsaps College, was permitted to be at her bedside, but ere the eldest daughter, who was at school in Nashville, could reach home the dark-winged messenger had stilled that mother's throbbing heart forever, and she had joined loved ones in the great hereafter.

On the twenty-ninth, followed by a large concourse of kindred and friends, her remains were borne to the family grave-yard, where, after appropriate services conducted by the writer, assisted by her incoming pastor, Bro. Lipscomb, we laid her beside kindred and loved ones to rest in full assurance of hope. Here, in a few short years, the writer has been called to lay four generations in their last resting-place. How true it is that we have no continuing city, but, like our fathers, are but strangers and sojourners beneath the sun!

W. H. HOLMES.

MURPHY—Little MARY ALA, infant daughter of John R. and F. E. Murphy, was born in Natchitoches parish, La., on Jan. 20, 1893, and died on July 7, of the same year. All that medical skill and sympathizing friends could do to alleviate the suffering little one was done, but in vain, for death triumphed over the body, and the liberated spirit went to him who said, "Of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

PRUITT—ROBERT EDWARD PRUITT, of Memphis, Ala., died Jan. 4, 1894. He professed religion at a camp meeting just as he was attaining his majority, and joined the Presbyterian Church, in which he adorned the doctrines of Christ about fifty-five years. He was an elder thirty years. He was faithful in all departments of Christian work, vigorous for the right, and making no compromise with sin. He was a high-toned Christian gentleman. His home was hospitality itself. Many a Methodist itinerant preacher can dwell with pleasure upon remembrances of kindness received at his home. His active work began its close about six years ago, when his eyesight began to fail. The last four years he was totally blind. He never complained—was always bright and cheerful. The writer has seen him often during the last two years, and he has never known anyone more content with his state.

He was born in Green county, Ala., Aug. 24, 1819; was happily married to Miss Mary Jane Woodward, Feb. 9, 1859. Their marriage was blessed with three children, two of whom died in infancy. An only son lived to bless his father in his declining days. Bro. Pruitt had lived the last thirty-five years in Memphis, where his life ended. "He being dead, yet speaketh." D. W. BABB.

Stone, Ala.

SANDELL—PRAMELIA L. SANDELL was born near Magnolia, Pike county, Miss., April 6, 1836; died in Magnolia, Dec. 12, 1893. She was the daughter of Thomas and Almira Powell, one of the most worthy and substantial families of Pike county. She was first married to W. J. Martin, who died during the late war. She was married to Rev. J. W. Sandell, of the Mississippi Conference, Sept. 10, 1865. Of her he says: "She was truly 'an help-meet.'"

As the only surviving daughter, and the wife of an itinerant preacher, her convictions of duty were very strong, and in both relations she was ever true. Her devotion to her aged and suffering mother was most beautiful.

She joined the church while young, and was a consistent Christian till death. Her religious life was a constant development of the Christian graces: industrious, provident, and kind, not living for self, but those about her. Having no children of her own, her heart was open to the motherless, who to-day call her blessed. The suffering and needy ever found in her a sympathetic and helpful friend. She chose to minister rather than to be ministered to. She has gone to her reward.

The God of all grace sustains the devoted husband. V. V. BOONE, P. C.

WILDBLOOD—On Sept. 8, 1893, it pleased God to call from us our beloved brother, WILLIAM TILMON WILDBLOOD. His death was a violent one—caught on gin saws while under full headway and horribly mutilated. He lived eighteen hours and was conscious to the last breath. He called his wife and children about him, and asked them to meet him in heaven. We laid him away in the old Beauchamp Grave-yard. Many sorrowing friends were present to shed tears upon his grave.

He was one of the best men I ever saw—a faithful member of the church and a model steward. During my two years as his pastor on Bayou Sara circuit I was often in his home. I never heard him say an unkind word about anyone. If he referred to a bad man, it was with words of pity. He leaves a noble Christian wife, a granddaughter of Sam Dawson, who was once a member of the Mississippi Conference; also three sons and one sweet little daughter, to mourn his loss. Weep not, bereaved ones; your loss is his eternal gain. Be faithful, and by and by you will meet him where there will be no more parting.

J. R. WHITTINGTON, P. C.

WARREN—G. W. WARREN was born Nov. 19, 1852; died Aug. 26, 1893. He leaves a wife and six children, besides a host of friends, to mourn his loss.

He was a dutiful son, a kind brother, a loving father and an affectionate husband. He was a member of the church and a true Christian. He had been an official member of the church for about ten years, during which time he missed only two Quarterly Conferences. These were the two last that were held on the circuit before his death. Both absences were caused by sickness. During his last illness he said he could hear the angels in heaven singing, and when he could sing all those beautiful songs all would be well with him. We have no doubt that he has joined that holy band. So we would say to the loved ones: "Grieve not. While it is your loss, it is his eternal gain. Strive to meet him on the other shore."

A FRIEND.

TAYLOR—Little MARY AGNES, daughter of H. H. and S. O. Taylor, was born on April 20, 1891, in Natchitoches parish, La. Her mother died on May 6, 1891, leaving little Agnes to the care of her sister. This sister and her husband, Mr. Geo. S. and Mrs. Mattie R. Hammett, carefully kept this precious charge. They had no little girl, and they loved her as their own. Their two little boys loved and petted her as their own little sister. She was a sweet, affectionate little girl. But she is gone, and now their home is so sad. She died on Oct. 7, 1893, of membraneous croup. She also leaves her own father, two little brothers and a sister and a devoted grandpa. May the Lord comfort her sorrowing friends, and help them to so live that they may go to her!

MCRANIE—LILLIAN ESTELLE MCRANIE was born in Garden City, Franklin county, Miss., Sunday, Dec. 24, 1893, and died Jan. 28, 1894, aged one month and four days. This was the only child of Sister Ida McRanie. Her husband was sick with typhoid fever in Texas when his babe died. He never saw its sweet face before God took it to himself.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

Many people regard religion as they regard the small-pox. They desire to have it as slight as possible, and they are very careful that it does not mark them

Many people neglect a cold, thinking it will go as it came. Frequently with serious results, the cold of to-day may be the pneumonia of to-morrow. Nothing will cure a cough or cold so rapidly as Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. Its reputation has been established for over fifty years as the best remedy for coughs, colds, bronchitis, asthma, all throat and lung troubles. For croup and whooping-cough it is invaluable. Mothers will be saved much anxiety and loss of children by having Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar always on hand. Consumption has been cured many times by its use. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

There is no Money in Cotton at 8c.

There is an active, strong demand for long staples at 16c. Then why not plant it? Your answer is: Because none of the long staples will make enough to the acre to justify planting them even at 16 cts. per lb.; it is difficult to gin it properly; it is hard to pick out, and lands will not produce staples, and so on.

Inland Sea Island is a long staple cotton in which all objections are removed. It is ENORMOUSLY PRODUCTIVE, easily ginned and no trouble to pick out. You can make it with no extra expense or trouble. See what Mr. Jeff Welborn has to say.

NEW BOSTON, TEX., Dec. 5, 1893.
RICHMOND SEED CO.,
Richmond, Va.:
This is to certify that I had "Inland Sea Island" cotton planted in alternate plots with Sea Island, Allison's Silk, Allen's latest improved long staple, Ozier Silk, Southern Hope, and some other varieties of long lint. The Inland Sea Island was a great deal earlier than any of them, and made one-third more lint per plot (of same size) than any, and double as much as any save one variety (Ozier Silk). While the lint was no longer than the Allen, it was much finer, softer and richer-colored than it or any except Sea Island and Allison's Silk, but it made four times as much per plot as either of these two. * * * I think your Inland Sea Island a big jump forward in the long lint business, because of its Earliness and Prolificness. * * *
Very truly, JEFF WELBORN.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The Anti-Option bill, introduced by Mr. Hatch, was referred to the subcommittee on internal revenne on Feb. 8.

The sugar situation is more encouraging, and the Louisiana senators are hopeful of securing a fair duty on sugar.

The United States warship Kearsarge has been wrecked on Rancador Reef, 300 miles north of Colon. No lives were lost.

Chicago is worried over the fact that so many of its streets and avenues have the same names. One hundred and sixty-five names have to do duty for 720 streets. And the result is not wholly satisfactory.

A cyclone crossed the State of Louisiana on Feb. 8, from west to east. The track of the cyclone was about 300 yards wide, and leveled everything in its path. The injury, as reported, was greatest around Port Hudson, Alexandria and Bayou Sara.

The Mormons are making arrangements for the purchase of 3,000 000 acres of land in the State of Chihuahua in Mexico. A contract for the purpose has already been entered into between representatives of the Mormons and the owner of the land, which has been duly approved by the heads of the church in Utah.

The loss of the Kearsarge has served to call attention to the fact that the Navy Department has carried that vessel, as well as the old Hartford, on the active list for years more out of sentiment than because of their ability to do good service. The keeping of these vessels in repair has cost more than it would have taken to build new ships.

A syndicate of Mexican and American capitalists has been organized for the purpose of constructing a pan-American telegraph line to extend along the Pacific coast from Victoria, British Columbia, to Santiago, Chili, passing through the United States, Mexico, the Central American States and the Pacific coast countries of South America.

The measure now on its passage before Congress creating the new "Washington National Park" brings into prominence a region of marvelous scenic and natural interest. The area set apart includes some 1 200 square miles, lying about forty miles southeast of the city of Tacoma, and contains within its borders the highest, and altogether most superb mountain peak in the United States, Mt. Rainier, or as the aborigines call it, Mt. Tacoma. About this majestic peak is the greatest glacial system in the world, about four times in extent that of the Alps, while on the southern slope of the mountain is a weirdly beautiful natural inclosure known as Paradise Valley.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, has completed arrangements for a tour of the world during the coming Spring and Summer. The trip was determined upon when he was in Russia in 1892. He intends to go overland to San Francisco, and sail from that port the last week in May, taking the steamer to the Hawaiian islands. He will visit New Zealand, Australia, China and India, spending a large portion of his time in China, at Amoy. The homeward route will be from Ceylon, through Europe and across the Atlantic. Dr. Talmage will be accompanied by his wife and two daughters, and will preach and lecture in every place he visits.

On Monday night a severe storm swept through the Southern States. In many places the storm was accompanied by hail and in some places by sleet. A terrific rainfall occurred in other localities. The loss of life, so far as our information goes, is not great. Cattle, however, are reported to have perished in great numbers in some parts of Texas. Wesson and Beauregard, Miss., suffered considerable damage. Enterprise was also in the track of the storm, though it suffered comparatively little. A number of towns in Texas and a few in Alabama are reported as considerably damaged. A severe blizzard swept through the North from New York to the far West, obstructing travel and causing a great deal of suffering.

FOREIGN.

The Russo-German commercial treaty has been signed. The treaty is to last ten years.

Serious engineering investigations have been in progress in France in the interest of a deep water passage from Paris to the sea. With the help of the river Seine it is now considered perfectly feasible.

A great canal from Bordeaux, on the Atlantic coast, across the narrow neck north of the Pyrenees to Narbonne, on the Mediterranean coast, is now a project definitely entertained by the people of France.

Returns of the Manchester ship canal for the first week show that twenty-nine vessels were berthed at Manchester and Salford docks. They carried about 17,000 tons of merchandise. There were also many passenger trips. The locks, sluices and other machinery worked well.

The daily cannonading about Rio de Janeiro is still kept up, but with less vigor than formerly. The warship Aquidaban and another insurgent vessel have left the harbor. It is supposed they intend to intercept President Peixoto's squadron and challenge it to surrender on the outside, where it could have no support from the government forts.

The contest between President Vasquez, of Honduras, and the insurgent leader, Bonilla, with his allies from Nicaragua, appears to be still undecided. Vasquez is besieged in Tegucigalpa, the Hondurean capital; but he has so far been able to hold out successfully, having even succeeded in breaking the lines of the besiegers sufficiently to secure re-enforcement.

President Peixoto, of Brazil, issued a decree, on Feb. 8, ordering elections for President, Vice-President and members of Congress, to be held on March 1. The declared cause of the present revolution was that Peixoto intended to be a candidate for the presidency at the next election in violation of the constitution, which, it was claimed, makes him ineligible to another term, because he has filled the office, and that he had planned to maintain a military despotism. That cause has been removed.

It has been reported that the contract for building the Southern Pacific railroad bridge over the Mississippi river at New Orleans has been awarded to the Phoenixville (Pa.) Bridge Company, at the cost of $5,000,000. The bridge will give the Southern Pacific an all-rail entrance into New Orleans, and form a most important link in railroad communication between Texas and the Southwest and the Gulf States east of the Mississippi river.

An Appeal to the Young People of Mississippi.

Dear Young Friends: Millsaps College needs a large hall for young men of limited means. We must build it. The hall is a necessity. Would it not be a handsome work for the young Mississippians to furnish the agent with money to build this hall? If we can get at the work right, we can do it. I want the young Methodists of Mississippi to send me five thousand dollars. Let us go to work in earnest. Let the young people from five to twenty-one years of age send me from fifty cents to one dollar each. Let every church and community be represented. The name and amount will appear in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE May our Father inspire your hearts, dear young friends, to help us build this hall! Let me hear at once from you. Your friend,

I. W. COOPER.

Jackson, Miss.

P. S.—Remember Major Millsaps duplicates every cent you send.

For Headache and Indigestion

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

A prominent physician of Buffalo, N. Y., says of it: "I have severe headaches, and it relieves them. I am fond of the pleasures of the table, and as a consequence of my indulgence there, I have to pay the penalty. It divides penalty with me. Indeed, it is an indispensable article to me."

Notice.

To the Friends and Brethren of Bro. George Bancroft in Alabama and Mississippi:

He is now superannuated, after having served the church for forty-five years, and needs a home for himself and faithful wife. Will you not send him a small amount to help him to get one. Send by registered letter to Why Not, Miss., or postoffice order on Meridian, Miss.

Look Here, Preachers!

By special arrangement with the New York and London Electric Association, Kansas City, Mo., I will sell to preachers for the next ninety days Prof. W. M. Wilson's Marvelous Eye Restorer (ACTINA POCKET BATTERY) and Catarrh Cure at $8; list price, $10.

It cures Cataract, Granulated Lids and all kinds of sore eyes. It cures Catarrh, Hay Fever, La Grippe, all kinds of Sore Throat and Deafness. It cures Neuralgia and all kinds of Headache. It will restore the eyes, so that glasses may forever be laid aside. Two months' use of it has restored my eyes till I read the finest print without glasses. It also has restored my partially deaf ear. Preachers of all denominations ought to avail themselves of this reduction. (It is only for ninety days.)

Send your order, accompanied by the cash, postoffice money order, to

WHAT IS ECZEMA?

It is an agony of agonies.

A torture of tortures.

It is an itching and burning of the skin almost beyond endurance.

It is thousands of pin-headed vesicles filled with an acrid fluid, ever forming, ever bursting, ever flowing upon the raw excoriated skin.

No part of the human skin is exempt.

It tortures, disfigures, humiliates more than all other skin diseases.

Tender babies are among its most numerous victims.

They are often born with it.

Sleep and rest are out of the question.

Most remedies and the best physicians generally fail, even to relieve.

If CUTICURA did no more than cure Eczema, it would be entitled to the gratitude of mankind.

It not only cures but

A single application is often sufficient to afford instant relief, permit rest and sleep, and point to a speedy cure.

CUTICURA works wonders because it is the most wonderful skin cure of modern times.

Sold throughout the world. Price, CUTICURA, 50c.; SOAP, 25c.; RESOLVENT, $1. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston.

"All about the Skin, Scalp, and Blood," free.

From the Moment of Birth

Use CUTICURA SOAP

It is not only the purest, sweetest, and most refreshing of nursery soaps, but it contains delicate emollient properties which purify and beautify the skin, and prevent skin blemishes occasioned by imperfect cleansing and impure soap.

OMISSION.

BY MARION HARLAND.

I might have said a word of cheer
Before I let him go.
His weary visage haunts me yet;
But how could I foreknow
The slighted chance would be the last
To me in mercy given?
My utmost yearnings can not send
That word from earth to heaven.

I might have looked the love I felt;
My brother had sore need
Of that for which—too shy and proud—
He lacked the speech to plead.
But self is near, and self is strong,
And I was blind that day;
Besought within my careless eyes,
And went, athirst, away.

I might have held in closer clasp
The hand he laid in mine;
The pulsing warmth of my rich life
Had been as generous wine,
Swelling a stream that, even then,
Was ebbing faint and slow.
Mine might have been (God knows!) the art
To stay the fatal flow.

O, word and look and clasp withheld!
O, brother-heart, now stilled!
Dear life, forever out of reach,
I might have warm and filled!
Talents misused and seasons lost,
O'er which I mourn in vain—
A waste as barren to my tears
As desert sands to rain!

Ah, friend! whose eyes to-day may look
Love into living eyes,
Whose tone and touch, perchance, may thrill
Sad hearts with sweet surprise,
Be instant, like your Lord, in love,
And lavish as his grace,
With light and dew and manna-fall,
For night comes on apace.

Memories of Rev. William Winans, D. D., as a Preacher and Theologian.

BY REV. S. W. SPEER, D. D., Kentucky Conference.

MR. EDITOR: At the last session of the Kentucky Conference I had the pleasure of meeting the venerable Dr. S. W. Speer, now more than fourscore years of age, and yet an active pastor in charge of a station. The associate of Dr. Bascom in educational work, and for some years an able preacher in our Southwest, I had much delightful conversation with him about the heroic days of the far past. Especially was I gratified with his reminiscences of the Mississippi Conference, and his memories of its most distinguished representatives—Drs. William Winans and Benjamin M. Drake. At my solicitation he has written some recollections of Dr. Winans. Though requested for other use, I am sure the readers of the ADVOCATE will be grateful for an opportunity to see the interesting tribute. The Doctor informs me that he is writing recollections of the members of the Mississippi Conference from November, 1835, to November, 1863. Those papers would find eager readers should they appear in the columns of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

Jackson, Miss., Feb. 9, 1894.

In November, 1835, I went as traveling companion with Rev. Bishop Joshua Soule, D. D., from the Tennessee Annual Conference, held at Florence, Ala., to Woodville, Miss., the seat of the Mississippi Conference, which was held the last of November, 1835. At this Conference I met with Rev. William Winans, D. D., then in middle life—a man of good personal appearance, affable in manners, and genial in social intercourse; a man of wide and influence, of dignified bearing, and held in high esteem by his brethren and co-laborers. In the progress of Conference business I was soon assured that he was an able leader; that he was well versed in the rules of order in business and in debate, and before the close of Conference I was pleased to find that he held a high position as a preacher and divine. The acquaintance thus begun continued through twenty-three years with increasing interest. During this time we frequently met at quarterly meetings, at camp meetings, at college commencements, in the family circle, at the yearly Conferences, and in General Conference. He was always upon the same elevated, refined religious platform—always warm-hearted and easy of access, genial and communicative with young people, shedding light and cheer on their pathway—especially so with young preachers—casting mantles over their inexperience, and raising the faint-hearted up to manly confidence.

As a presiding elder, he was a model. Methodism in Mississippi and Louisiana was placed on high ground by the impress of his thought and character. He made no random statement of doctrinal points. His ethics were clear and incisive. In his hands Wesleyan Methodism was safe in all its bearings. He was as clear and earnest in his teachings in the social circle as in the pulpit or on the platform, and all these teachings were exemplified in a life of rectitude. He was a close observer of men and things as the current events of the day; an attentive and discriminating reader of books and periodicals; a diligent student of the Holy Scriptures and systems of theology. The Wesleyan classic writers—Wesley, Fletcher and Watson—received special attention. His literary reading was select and extensive. We turn from these pleasing memories of this great and good man to speak of him as a theologian and preacher. His printed discourses will give an idea of his methods of thought, and an outline of his dogmatic statement of divine things—the sublime truths of revealed religion. But, as the living preacher, these discourses are but the fossil remains of thought. They were once full of life, vitalized by a moving force, intensified by the living voice, the piercing eye, the glowing countenance and the soul-stirring gestures—expressive of deepest thought and feeling as to God and final destiny.

When he appeared in the presence of an audience he had something to say. The subject had been carefully analyzed in his own mind, so that he could see its points and bearings, and feel its force on human life and consciousness. Thus knowing the truth in its vital ethic force, he was all aglow with its beauty and its power. He was apt to teach; his diction was easy and pleasing; his words well-chosen, clear, comprehensive, and expressive; his style lofty and dignified; his manner didactic; his sentences were sometimes long, but never foggy or obscure; his gestures were emphatic and full of meaning—you could not miss their intent; his delivery was forcible, and always secured attention. Intense feeling was manifest in his effort to make the approaches to the temple of truth easy and inviting. He aimed to produce profound convictions of the truth in the minds of his hearers, that, moved by these convictions, they might act promptly and wisely. His exegetical notes and comments upon the text and its connections served as a prelude; then the doctrinal points were stated as a basis to the argument; then the logical proofs and bearings swept along with the rapidity and force of a cyclone. There was no abatement in the argument until the reason why was apparent to every hearer. Then, if these things be true, why delay? Why hesitate to accept and obey the truth?

To give some idea of his method, I submit a brief sketch on the being and perfection of God, but not in his exact words. (Psalm xc, 1, 2.)

There was a time, in ages gone by, when naught was but God. Then came a time when things began to be. God spake, and the heavens and earth assumed their places in the vast expanse. The rays of light and central suns obeyed his mandate, and at his bidding they continue yet to move and shine. The infinite, all-perfect mind had only to speak, "Let there be light," and light was. The adjustments of worlds and sidereal systems exhibit infinite power and wisdom and skill of the Creator. God alone can reveal himself in the realms of mind and matter—the great first cause, ever present, ever felt.

Thy universe is full of thee;
In all things we thy glory see;
The sand grain and the central sun
Are held in thy firm grasp alone.

God is the one all-wise, all-perfect personal Intelligence, who brought all finite being and substance into existence, and sustains them in being by the word of his power.

God ineffably supreme in infinity,
Thy power and glory in the universe we see;
Then how wise it is that finite minds cling to thee,
The ever-flowing stream of true felicity.

Dr. Winans relied chiefly upon revealed truth, and the felt needs and longings of the human mind, as proofs of the being and perfection of God; yet he would use the reasonings of Butler, Paley and Chalmers with much effect. He exhibited his greatest strength in discussing the doctrine of sin and its remedy; how great the evil to require the sufferings and death of Christ to expiate its guilt and remove its curse, to abolish death and bring life and immortality to light through the gospel, could only be reached through the innocent sufferer. Holiness of heart and life was a favorite theme. He emphasized the continuous indwelling of the Holy Spirit as requisite to a life of moral purity and rectitude. In presenting the final day of discrimination, he reached the sublime in thought and descriptive force.

Dr. Winans was a thoughtful man, and knew the force and value of correct thinking. One in ancient times said, "When I consider, I am afraid." The field of thought is wide and diversified; but that which demands eternal vigilance is the passing moments, with its environments. On the proper use or neglect of this moment hangs future destiny. What combinations of lights and shades impress each passing moment!

At this point it may be the thought evolved the good from seeming ill, and left the mind more pure and true. Then another moment came, laden with blessings rich and full, which called for gratitude and praise; or, it may be, to turn a loving heart in blessings to the suffering poor; or, it may be, the mind, in thoughtful mood, turns to the vast expanse of blue, with its countless diamond points of gleaming brightness, and thence to the Infinite, enthroned in depths of uncreated light, the source of grace and love to man, to whom it bows in reverent adoration and loving trust.

Dr. Winans, in his eulogy on the life and character of Rev. Elijah Steele (who died early in his ministry), took for the basis of thought Isaiah lxv, 20: "The child shall die an hundred years old, but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed." He forcibly impressed the contrast on his hearers. The child rightly trained in word and doctrine, like Timothy, and in the practice of virtue and piety, like Samuel, would accomplish in a few years the work assigned to the longest life; that it was not the number of years that men may live, but the proper use of the time and means at their command, which produced the highest results. Although Elijah Steele was cut down in early life, at the threshold of a useful and brilliant ministry, yet he had finished his day's labor with success, and had done his work well, perhaps better than if he had lived an hundred years. Early life, wisely spent, leaves no regrets, and lays up in store a reserved force by which to make the most and the best of coming days. "But the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed." This is scripturally and scientifically true: "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." One hundred years full of sin, doubt, and defiant wickedness, and these years multiplied by the minor points of time as to cumulative and progressive force of each step in crime in its downward trend to perdition, what will the harvest be at the close of the century! With growing years, increasing guilt, how deep must sink the deathless soul in the stench of sin through these prostrated years of crime! The leprous spots must the deeper strike and the darker grow until, in the last throes of sinking life, God's eternal wrath and hate of sin settles down upon that aged, abandoned, accursed soul. All is night. The irreversible decree, "He which is filthy, let him be filthy still," holds with firm grasp the pathless gulf, "The wrath of God abideth on him."

Dr. Winans was a prominent force in the discussions in the General Conference of 1844, which led to the disruption of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, and the organization of two distinct churches.

Dr. Winans and myself, with others, were sent as delegates from the Mississippi Conference to the convention that met in the Fourth Street Church, in the city of Louisville, first of May, 1845. We were on the steamer Saltana, just above Smithland, on Sunday morning preceding the convention. Dr. Winans was requested to preach. At ten A. M. the service began. He took for his text, "Therefore be ye also ready." (Matt. xxiv, 44.) He had given a brilliant exordium, and was entering upon his argument, when the application was made by a tremendous crash. The shaft of the left-hand wheel had broken; the wheel fell in towards the cabin, near where the preacher was standing. The boat was headed to the shore; another boat came up. All aboard for Louisville! The scene was changed. We were in Louisville in time for the convention.

South Carolina Letter.

MR. EDITOR: I am reminded that I owe you a letter. I believe this is my first effort to burden the columns of the paper since you have been on the tripod. You have kept the paper so full of such excellent reading matter since you have been in charge that I thought it would almost be an imposition for me to offer anything for its columns. However, I feel disposed to write a word this morning, and, at least, express my high appreciation of the weekly visits of your most readable journal.

I have been very forcibly struck with the character of your selected matter. It must require a great deal of time to examine your large list of exchanges, and to draw therefrom the best and most readable articles. This is a part of the editor's work that is not appreciated as it should be. The general reader sees the selected article, and, after a casual perusal, says, "Well, he didn't write that, and consequently doesn't deserve credit for it," when, perhaps, in order to get the article, the editor spent more time in its selection than it would have required to have written an editorial. I have just finished the ADVOCATE of Feb. 8, and feel that the contents of that single number would repay any subscriber the full price of an annual subscription.

Let us start on the first page. There is that excellent piece of poetry, "There Is No Death." No one but God knows how many hearts have received comfort from it. It strikingly sets forth the precious doctrine of immortality. Then there is that interesting selection from the Hebrew-Christian, "My Conversion." I am convinced that the Christian church has been too unmindful of the Jewish people. How often do you hear a prayer offered for them? I was much gratified some time ago to see some statistics showing the progress of the mission to the Jews in New York City and elsewhere. The church must awake to the fact that it is her duty to preach Christ to the Jews as well as to others. Then comes that pointed article on "Religion in the Home," by Phillips Brooks. It is timely, and will, no doubt, do much good. Anything from the pen of Brooks is worth reading. I am sorry he is dead. The Episcopal Church in Massachusetts was not the only loser in his death. The Christian church at large was a loser. It seems a great pity that such broad-minded and talented men have to die. The touching article of Mrs. Nathan Scarritt will be read with great interest and, I trust, profit. And, Doctor, you could not have found a more timely article than that one from Zion's Herald on "The Control of Ministerial Transfers." If we are going to have the itinerant system at all, let us have it unfettered and free. A blow at the transfer power is a blow at the itinerant system. The South Carolina Conference has lost heavily by the transfer power of recent years. We had to give Dr. A. Coke Smith to the Virginia Conference, Dr. R. D. Smart to the Little Rock Conference, and Dr. Chreitzberg to the Western North Carolina Conference. We regretted to part with these brethren, but we saw that those Conferences needed help, so we kindly consented to let the Bishop transfer the above preachers. But I have wandered from my text. I need not say that your editorials are good. You know that as well as I do. In fact, the whole paper is good. If you haven't a good large subscription list, I am sure it is not because you do not deserve it. May the Lord give you much success in your noble work!

George W. Childs.

THE LESSONS OF HIS LIFE.

The following admirable paper concerning the career of the great journalist and philanthropist, George W. Childs, we clip from the Christian Intelligencer:

The loss of this eminent editor, philanthropist and patriotic citizen, of this pure, kindly and generous man, will be deplored throughout the country and in other lands. Thousands of thousands admired Mr. Childs. He was held in the highest esteem and beloved by a multitude who had never seen his face. His many wise benefactions which were the natural expression of his love of men, though performed without ostentation, could not be concealed, and gave him a place of honor in the hearts of men of all classes. The amount of his gifts to the needy and deserving, to organized philanthropy, to schools, and many attempts to relieve the wants and sufferings and to improve the condition of men, will probably never be known. Giving with him was so constant that it may be called the daily habit of his life. His income was large, his benevolence kept pace with it, and a fortnight ago he was one of the first of the world's philanthropists. His generosity was not indiscriminate; an endeavor was always made to ascertain whether the applicant or recipient was worthy.

Men love the man who loves them. There are sour, envious, embittered spirits who rail at those higher than themselves, whatever may be their excellences; but the multitude admire him whose prosperity only enlarges the ability of his sympathy to relieve and assist the unfortunate and those aspiring to an honorable and useful life. Mr. Childs was a generous employer. When his men were disabled by sickness or disaster he cared for them as might be necessary. When they were disabled by age or infirmity their salaries were still paid. Among his papers is a list of disabled employees who have not done a day's work in years, and yet have been drawing their salaries. He gave an education to three hundred girls who desired it, and loved to boast in recent years that every one of them had proved worthy of his generosity. These are only examples of his benevolence. The full record will never be known. Such a life has power, wins approbation and affection. The power of Christianity resides in the fact that Jesus died for us, gave himself for us, that through him we might be saved. There is a lesson for all in the illustrious life now ended.

The life is a lesson also in intelligent application to duty, tireless industry, self-control and self-denial. Mr. Childs was born in Baltimore, Md., on May 12, 1829. His father was poor; the circumstances of the son were most discouraging. At twelve years of age he began to earn a part of his living by sweeping out a store and tending the counter during his school vacations, at two dollars a week. At thirteen he entered the navy, but life there was too dull, afforded no opportunity to gratify the aspirations of his ardent spirit, and he abandoned it. At fifteen he is to be found in a book store. The business pleased him. He mastered it, lived frugally, opened an account in a savings bank, was a pattern of industry. At seventeen he earned twelve dollars a week. Out of his income he saved in a few years a thousand dollars. In due time a small book store of his own was opened, which, through his intelligent application and genial disposition, grew into a great publishing house, and the publisher became a millionaire. The Public Ledger was bought, and by its character and the indomitable energy of the proprietor and editor, became an eminent success. Mr. Childs worked on it and for it from ten o'clock in the morning until midnight. He made it a clean, pure, trustworthy family paper. For many years no headlines even, beyond a simple title, were allowed for articles or items. Until within recent years there was no more industrious man to be found anywhere than the proprietor of the Ledger. He was diligent in business, fervent in spirit. A like partinacious devotion to work is possible to other men. The proverb, "The hand of the diligent maketh rich," received a splendid illustration and fulfillment in his life.

There was self-control and self-denial in all this. Mr. Childs denied himself the ease and recreation and self-indulgence he might have enjoyed. He preferred to do with his might what his hand found to do, to do it incessantly, and to do it with constant regard for the interests of other men.

He was a man of prayer. He sought the help of God, recognized his dependence and responsibility, his need of divine assistance. He respected the Sabbath as God's day, and the day of rest and worship. No Sunday edition burdened the presses of the Ledger.

The genial, generous, industrious spirit became illustrious. Famous men were numbered among his friends. Men called him Philadelphia's first citizen, and he was esteemed at home and abroad as one of the first citizens of the republic, although he never held a public office. The nation inherits a noble example.

We find special pleasure in commending the proprietor and editor of a daily journal who would not publish a Sunday edition. His success proves that Sunday editions are not necessary. We rejoice that he honored the Lord's day, and in the purity, integrity, fairness and humanity of the Public Ledger, Mr. Childs' paper was a newspaper in the best sense.

Union of Prayer for the Lord's Day.

The first week of April has been for several years observed in many parts of the world as a season of united prayer for the Lord's Day.

In behalf of a large number of Christian people interested therein, the undersigned beg leave to commend this subject to the attention of ministers and churches, and respectfully to suggest that on the first day of April next the observance of the Lord's Day be made the topic of special instruction and prayer, and, as far as practicable, the remaining days of the week.

The remarkable awakening of public sentiment during the past year, in defense of the national recognition of the day of rest, given special occasion for gratitude to God, and encouragement to continued efforts for the maintenance of his holy day.

Yet never was there greater need of prayer for the divine help in view of the growing tendency on the part of many who profess and call themselves Christians, to spend the hours of the Lord's Day in secular pleasures and pursuits. And never was there more pressing need of prayer that the selfish competitions of trade and greed of gain may not be permitted to rob those who earn their daily bread by their daily labor of their sacred right to rest and worship.

Opinions Worth Quoting.

We do not believe that the American pulpit was ever as strong as it is today; or ever had as potent an influence; or ever possessed so many men of prophetic nature; or ever was more charged with a divine message; or ever spoke so practically, directly, efficiently to the lives and consciences of men. . . . There are quacks in medicine, pettifoggers in law, peddlers in trade, scribblers in the press, and mountebanks in the ministry. But we believe that, given a body of a hundred men, picked at random out of any one of the professions, the hundred selected from the ministry will not be inferior in intellectual calibre, moral earnestness, spiritual vision, manly fibre, to either of the other groups. We desire to be modest in our claims for the clergy; we, therefore, do not assert for them a superiority.—Outlook.

Gambling.

A considerable proportion of failure in business, and ninety per cent. of the defalcations and theft and ruin of youth among people who are employed in places of trust, are due directly to gambling. I have seen in my vast employment so much misery from the head of the family neglecting its support, and squandering his earnings in the lottery or the policy shop, and promising young men led astray in a small way, and finally becoming fugitives or landing in the criminal dock, that I have come to believe that the community which licenses and tolerates public gambling can not have prosperity in business, religion in its churches, or morality among its people.—Chauncey Depew.

DON'T LOOK FOR THE FLAWS.

Don't look for the flaws, as you go on through life:
And even when you find them,
It is wise and kind to be somewhat blind,
And look for the virtue behind them.
For the cloudiest night has a tint of light
Somewhere in its shadows hiding;
It is better by far to look for a star
Than the spots on the sun abiding.

The current of life runs ever away
To the bosom of God's great ocean;
Don't set your force 'gainst the river's course,
And think to alter its motion;
Don't waste a curse on the universe—
Don't butt at the storm with your puny form—
But bend and let it go o'er you.

The world will never adjust itself
To suit your whims to the letter;
Some things must go wrong your whole life long,
And the sooner you know it the better.
It is folly to fight with the Infinite,
And go under at last in the wrestle;
The wisest man shapes into God's plan
As the water shapes into a vessel.

A Spiritual Phenomenon.

BY REV. J. W. HARMON.

In the year 1846, I need not detail any of the causes which led me to leave my charge, the old Magazine Street Methodist Church, in New Orleans, and take a trip up the Mississippi river. (This charge, with the old Cadiz Street Methodist Church, were merged into the Felicity Street Church.) In returning in the Fall, I stopped at Natchez and there received letters informing me that my people had not returned from their Summer tonring, and that it was not safe to return to the city as there were sporadic cases of yellow fever. Not willing to remain idle, I proposed to the able and zealous pastor of the Methodist Church to hold a series of meetings, to which Bro. Ben Jones readily consented. Without any previous announcements we took all by surprise and opened our meeting, holding services three times a day. At the close of the first week some eight or ten seekers were found at the altar. A few days more and the number increased to fifteen or twenty, with no special demonstrations and with no conversions. We then consulted as to whether the members were doing their duty, and to rebuke them for their want of zeal. But the wiser judgment prevailed under the plea that the number of seekers had steadily increased.

At the close of the second week nearly thirty penitents were pleading for mercy and pardon. Again were we surprised indeed that not a conversion had taken place. This time it was seriously debated as to whether the members ought not to be held responsible and the rod of chastisement laid upon their consciences. But there stood the unanswerable argument—the penitents constantly increasing, indicating that it was God's work and ought not to be complained of by anyone.

Towards the close of the third week fifty penitents were earnestly seeking salvation. The heaving of bosoms and eloquent tears on the faces of so many, and not a single conversion, was somewhat perplexing, and an impatient spirit came very near getting the mastery over us. We had now to use all the front pews and the amen corner to accommodate the number of seekers. We made the discovery that sixty or more penitents had been at the altar, and still not one conversion. But we also made another discovery that it was God's own work among the people, and we came to the wise conclusion to let God do his own work and in his own good way and time. With the front pews, from one side of the church to the other, full, and the amen corner crowded, it was a happy thought that not one word of chilling complaint had fallen from our lips.

In the meantime, Dr. Drake, the presiding elder of the district, came to the meeting and was studying with intense interest, and giving his fatherly advice.

At last the meeting one day at the three o'clock service culminated in its power. It so happened that I was standing at the altar-railing, in a conversational tone talking to the penitents, when a young lady, seated at one end of the middle pews, slid gently back upon the pew, her bonnet falling away from her face, and a light as visible as the flickering candle played all over her face; when in a tone of voice of the sweetest melody, something above a whisper, she said, "Blessed Jesus, blessed Jesus," and in a very few minutes every penitent, from one side of the church to the other and in the amen corner, was converted. No noisy shouting followed; nothing but subdued praises of joy were heard, until the intensity of spiritual glory so filled the house that no one was able to stand. I sank down on the altar floor, resting on the railing. Rev. Dr. Drake almost fell flat on the floor near the pulpit, and Bro. Jones in falling caught on the chair. For a few moments the expression of the poet found a fullness of meaning I never understood until that hour:

"Praise sat silent on our tongues."

It was a spiritual phenomenon—entrancing indeed. Rising with difficulty to my feet, I repeated that loving expression of the poet:

"And if our fellowship below
In Jesus be so sweet,
What height of rapture
Shall we know
When round his throne we meet."

Hearing a sound as of some one among the pews holding a conversation, I advanced along the aisle, and that motherly saint, Sister N. B. Carson (the mother of Bro. Tom Reed, the lawyer), was asking permission from the Holy Father to shout just a little, as her lawyer son was converted. She had been very much opposed to shouting.

Just before the meeting closed that memorable evening in the old Natchez brick church, a man from New Orleans whom I well knew came into the church. He was an old whisky, red-faced sinner. As he advanced up the aisle, he turned white in the face, and, struck with partial blindness, he caught at one of the pews, missed it, and fell flat on the floor.

Oh, there was a spiritual glory in that church, and when the congregation passed out the power of the Holy Spirit passed out with them, and over the whole city. Penitents who had been at the altar and confined at home were converted in different parts of the city and out to the suburbs. At the night meeting there was a shout in the camp of Israel; no such thing as preaching to a congregation who were shouting the praises of a pardoning God and merciful Savior.

The next day nearly every business place was closed, and the people stood in groups wondering what had come to pass. By request a meeting was begun at Washington, six miles out from Natchez, and the power prevailed at the very beginning, and numbers were converted. Some six hundred souls or more were converted and brought under the power of the Holy Spirit. All the churches shared in the showers of blessings that fell in pentecostal power.

Since that day the sainted spirits of Mother Cecil and Carson, Reed, and others have gone to join in the song of angels and the raptures of eternity.

"The Future of Christianity."

Mr. William Salter, leader in "Ethical Culture," uses this caption to lecture the church of to-day on how it might be, what it ought to be, on to-morrow. If we grant his premise, there is no escape from his conclusions; but we can not accept as true that which lacks essential proof. If it be true that environment is greater than Christ, and culture is more than Christianity, then both the Author and the fact of Christianity are merely tentative, and are only worthy of acceptance, as they reveal a compliance with the demands of forces that make respectable existence possible. But all this is vigorously denied by the Christianity of yesterday and to-day, and will be by that of to-morrow. The supposition that if Christ had first appeared on earth in the full glow and sweep of our present civilization, he would have made a very different revelation of the Father unto man, and taught a very different doctrine as to the needs of man, reveals, in the highest sense, a defective "ethical culture" in the assumptionist. The fact that what he did reveal and teach has given the development, is the strongest possible proof that he would not depart from any given rule of advance. The text of our Lord's teachings, and on which the wonderful advance has been made, is given in these words: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." The call to self-denial does not differ essentially from the accepted demand made upon the successful man in all departments of life. The man who does not first heartily consent to give up self in the interest of the object before him is universally defeated before the issue is joined. In fact, he is only playing with the possibilities of life, and is soon regarded as visionary and untrustworthy. But the cross! What is the signification? What did it mean to Christ when he was bearing it to the "place of a skull?" Look at it covered with redeeming blood, and you will not fail to get the correct answer. Paul comprehended the fullness of its meaning when he said: "But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." It is the death of self, and life unto Christ. This is not merely a condition, but it is the absolute fact of Christianity, and it answers every other question belonging thereto. If there is a condition of being in this or in any other world, not demanding the double-death experience of Paul, then neither our Christ nor our Christianity is intended for them. It is only for those who are in sin, and must be saved by the grace of the Son of God. But Christianity, with or without "ethical culture," will never submit to a change so long as there are lost to be found and perishing to be saved. It is not a question of likes or of dislikes with man; it is a question of a preparation to follow Christ. And whither will he lead? Certainly not into the world, nor into a love of sin, but into every duty to God and man, and into all purity of heart. Paul understood the direction of Christ's leading when he said: "Quench not the Spirit. Despise not prophesyings. Prove all things; hold fast that which is good. Abstain from all appearance of evil." There be some who scoff this rigid view of Christianity and its mission. They would change it to conformity with the broad and cultured views of to-day, and make large promise of its triumphs to-morrow. Yes, and these same people imagine the cross to consist in the duties they owe to God and man; and because they do a few things unpleasant to their unregenerate souls, they suppose they are bearing the cross of Christ. Imagine Christ going about the service of the Father, and helping poor, suffering humanity, and praying that the "cup might pass." It was the cross, with its blood and death, that gave him sorrow, and that was to "draw all men unto him." And by this cross the Christianity of the future, as in the past, will abide, and will finally bring all "ethical culture."

Boys and Girls Don't Take Dares.

Boys and girls don't take dares; Mississippi boys and girls don't. They are not made out of that kind of material—are not built that way. They have too much push and pluck for anything of that kind.

Maj. R. W. Millsaps has dared the boys and girls of Mississippi—and for the matter of that, the grown folks, too—to put down as much as twenty-five thousand dollars a year for Millsaps College. He says: "I will put down as much as you do; I dare you to try it."

Is there a Methodist man or woman, boy or girl in Mississippi who will take that dare? Some of the grown folks may, but the spunky and pincky boys and girls of this State will not. No, sir; not a bit of it. They will feed the hens on parched corn and sell eggs to get money to help build that boarding-hall on the campus of Millsaps College. The boys will run errands for dimes, black boots for nickels, or do anything else honorable to get money for this noble work. The girls will sew, knit, piece quilts, save chewing-gum money, or practice any other self-denial necessary to help the boys to qualify themselves for life's great work. They are going to do this—mark what I say—and that right away. They will lay down nickels, dimes, quarters and dollars, thick as hops, and say, "Now, Major Millsaps, cover these." The Major will have to hustle to keep up with the procession, or he will have to hire a man or two to hustle for him.

The children of Mississippi can give five thousand dollars the first year—this year, and start in February—and that will be ten thousand from them, or through them, for the college. The grown folks can give twenty thousand, and not feel it, and that will be forty thousand through them—fifty thousand in all. Let's do it.

Your uncle, GILDEBOY.

Precept and Example.

"Hear, O my son, and receive my sayings. . . . I have taught thee in the way of wisdom: I have led thee in right paths."—Prov. iv, 10, 11.

It is a great matter for a parent if he is able to say to his grown son, "I have taught thee in the way of wisdom; I have led thee in right paths." Teaching and leading are closely allied, but not identical. It is possible and common, to have the first in large measure, where the second is wanting. They are two elements which together make up a whole. With both, education in a family will go prosperously on. Where one is wanting it will be halting and ineffectual. Many a parent who acquits himself well in the department of teaching his children, fails miserably in the department of leading them in the right path. It is easier to tell another the right way than to walk in it yourself. To lead your child in right paths implies that you go in them before him. Here lies the reason why so many parents practically fail to give their children a good education. Only a godly man can bring up his child for God. It is not uncommon to find men who are themselves vicious, desiring to have their children educated in virtue. Infidels sometimes take measures to have Christianity taught to their children. Many will do evil; few dare to teach it to their own offspring. This is the unwilling homage which the evil are constrained to pay to goodness.

Great is the effect when parents consistently and steadfastly go before their children, giving them a daily example of their daily precepts; but to teach the family spiritual things, while the life of the teacher is carnal, is both painful and fruitless. A man can not walk with one leg, although the limb he is in robust health; more especially if the other limb, instead of being altogether wanting, is hanging on him, and trailing after him dead. In this case it is impossible to get quit of the impediment; it will not off. The only way of getting relief from its weight is to get it made alive. An example of some kind parents must exhibit in their families. If it be not such as to help, it will certainly hinder the education of the young. God in his providential laws permits no neutrality in the family; there you must be either for or against him.

One of the broadest and best defined experiences that passed under my observation, and was imprinted on my memory in early youth, was that of a family whose father stood high above all his neighbors in religious profession and yet returned from market drunk as often as he had the means. The sons of that family all turned out ill. Nothing is impossible with God; but it would have been indeed a miracle of mercy if these young men, who were accustomed from childhood to see in their own father a lofty, spiritual profession wedded to the vilest vice, had themselves, as they grew up, lived soberly and righteously, and godly in the world.

Giving to the Lord.

If a tithe of the money that is put into vices and useless extravagances could be put into God's great work, the world might be saved during this generation. And yet people complain because the gospel costs so much. To be sure it costs something, though the grace of God is free, but it does not cost so much to support it as it does to be without it. Almost everything helpful costs, and it is well that it is so, for we mostly prize only that which costs us something. It costs to run a school, a store, a shop, a factory or farm.

There is fuel and light and work, materials to be paid for, and sometimes it seems like one continuous, uninterrupted outlay to keep them going. And there are so many repairs to be made and so many improvements needed to keep the business in a prosperous condition, that it almost staggers our courage and faith to meet them. But there must need be some outgoes to insure increased income. Stagnation and decay call for no improvement or increased facility and lack of facility as a sign of decay.

Farmers and business men understand this principle and act upon it. As Christians we ought to see it and act upon it in regard to the church of God.

And then, too, one dollar rightly invested brings back two and may start ten or a hundred in circulation. The spirit of improvement is contagious. If a woman gets a handsome new bonnet, her neighbors want a little better one, and if a man repaints his house, his neighbors must have theirs painted, too. This principle is equally true of the larger and nobler improvements in a community. The young people are alive to every advancement, and if the church is in a state of stagnation and decay it has little attraction for them. It costs to sustain the gospel so as to do aggressive work and make it a drawing power among the young, but the investment pays. Money put into gospel work and into church improvement is not thrown away, but is as bread cast upon the waters that shall return after many days. "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver."—Country Church.

A Year Famous for Believing.

"God grant that this may be a year famous for believing," was the wish which the excellent William Romaine expressed for his congregation on a New Year's Sunday. Can we do better than to repeat it as we stand on the threshold of 1894? Great thinkers are not wanting in our generation; but are great believers as common as they have been in other days? If they are not, it may be the fault of the age, which can not easily tolerate credulity, but sets the highest value on originality. "Give us a man who thinks for himself," is the demand of the hour. But there is nothing which the church of God so much needs as strong men who think God's thoughts after him, and stagger not at the promises through unbelief. Faith and reason are like the two compartments of an hour-glass—when the one is full the other is empty. That is to say, what we can prove logically or mathematically it requires no faith to accept; what we are obliged to accept solely on the testimony or promise of God it demands our utmost faith to credit. But in the last instance we are brought close to God. Trust in the soul's touch, laid at first, perhaps, upon the hem of Christ's garment, but learning little by little to lean upon his heart. Practice this much neglected grace, O reader! Accustom yourself to test the promises of God; learn the sweetness of confiding in the Lord in matters pertaining to every-day life; rejoice in everything which brings you into straits and shuts you up to the Almighty as your only refuge. Abundance of blessings almost always brings leanness of soul, and for the reason that faith has no strenuous exercise when our wants are all supplied. Blessed are the poor, for it is easy for such to be rich in faith. Blessed are the rich who know how to be poor in spirit, living in humble dependence on God, though by earthly fortune they are called "independent." Faith makes us intimate with God; faith teaches us to demonstrate his power and his providence; faith gives eyes to the blind, feet to the lame, and a light to them that sit in darkness. Even the beatitudes, rich and comprehensive as they are, waited to be crowned by a new beatitude—one not given in the Sermon on the Mount, but spoken by the risen Christ: "Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed."

If any of us shall make the coming year one famous for believing, it shall be also one memorable for communion with God and for contact with Christ. In a time when scholars are insisting on bringing Scripture to the test of "the scientific method," it is the Christian's great and exceptional opportunity to show what the Word of God can yield to the believing method. —A. J. Gordon, in the Methodist Recorder.

Interest and Capital.

Every human being has an unlimited account of grace at the bank of God's love. The only condition of drawing upon this account to any extent of need is the willingness to appear before God, confess the need, and solicit forgiveness and help.

But there are some Christians who are so possessed by the materialistic view of life, so tied down to the business spirit and method, that they can not conceive of this spiritual capital as being unlimited; and so they are all the time trying to live on the interest of divine grace. They shrink from touching the capital. These are the class of people who, when they have committed a sin, instead of casting themselves before the throne of grace and seeking full and immediate pardon, continue for a long time with the shadow of remorse darkening their lives, until there comes a time when it seems as if the stain had somehow been gradually removed, as if the increment of God's compassion toward a penitent soul had at last canceled the debt.

Perhaps most of us have known periods of this spiritual bankruptcy—times when we have felt as if we must for a long time labor under the displeasure of God, waiting for the shadow of our sin to drift away, ere the sunshine of his face could be turned upon us again. But this feeling is totally wrong. God has made boundless provision of grace for the repentant sinner. "My grace is sufficient for every need." It is not necessary that we should await the accumulation of his forgiving love toward us. He promises us, he urges us to accept, forgiveness full, free and immediate. The infinite capital of divine mercy is at our disposal. We can not overdraw it; we can not make too large a demand upon that love of God which is as boundless as the sea. And the joy of the sinning one who simply flings himself utterly and unreservedly upon the divine mercy—who can measure it? Surely it is all the confirmation we need ask of the fact that God loves to forgive his children unto the uttermost.—Zion's Herald.

Carpe Diem.

Only think, too, how much may be achieved in a little while. The atonement for a world of perishing sinners was accomplished between the sixth hour and the ninth hour on darkened Calvary. That flash of divine electricity from the Holy Spirit which struck Saul of Tarsus to the ground was the work of an instant; but the great electric burner of the converted Paul has blazed over all the world for centuries. A half hour's faithful preaching of Jesus by a poor itinerant Methodist exhorter at Colchester brought the boy Spurgeon to a decision, and launched the mightiest ministry of modern times. Lady Henry Somerset tells us that a few minutes of solemn reflection in her garden decided her to exchange a life of fashionable frivolity for a life of consecrated philanthropy. Why cite any more cases when every Christian can testify that the best decisions and deeds of his or her life turned on the pivot of a few minutes? In the United States mint they coin eagles out of the sweepings of gold dust from the floor. Brethren, we ought to be misers of our minutes! If on a dying-bed they are so precious, why not in the fuller days of our healthful energies? Said General Mitchell, the great astronomer, to an officer who apologized for being only a few minutes behind time: "Sir, I have been in the habit of calculating the tenth part of a second!"

Our whole eternity will hinge on the "little while" of probation here. Only an inch of time to choose between an eternity of glory or the endless woes of hell! And, as a convert exclaimed in a prayer meeting: "It was only a moment's work with me when I was in earnest." May God help us all to be faithful only for a little while; and then comes the unfading crown.

"A little while for patient vigil keeping
To face the stern—to wrestle with the strong;
A little while to sow the seed with weeping,
Then bind the sheaves and sing the harvest song.

"A little while to keep the oil from failing,
A little while faith's flickering lamp to trim,
And then the Bridegroom's coming footsteps hailing,
We'll haste to meet him with the bridal hymn."

—Dr. Cuyler.

The Bad Clock.

I have a clock on my parlor mantlepiece. A very pretty little clock it is, with a gilt frame and a glass case to cover it. Almost everyone who sees it says, "What a pretty clock!" But it has one great defect—it will not go; and, therefore, as a clock it is perfectly useless. Though it is very pretty, it is a bad clock, because it never tells what time it is.

Now, my bad clock is like many persons in the world. Just as my clock does not answer the purpose for which it was made—that is, to keep time—so many persons do not answer the purpose for which they were made. What did God make us for? "Why," you will say, "he made us that we might love him and serve him." Well, then, if we do not love God and serve him, we do not answer the purpose for which he made us: we may be very pretty, and very kind and very obliging; but if we do not answer the purpose for which God made us, we are just like the clock—bad. Those of my readers who live in the country, and have seen an apple tree in full blossom, know what a beautiful sight it is. But suppose it only bore blossoms, and did not produce fruit, you would say it is a bad apple tree. And so it is. Everything is bad, every person is bad, and every boy and girl is bad, if they do not answer the purpose for which God made them.—Ex.

Southern Methodism.

In the last edition of the hymn book of the M. E. Church, South, appears that grand old hymn, called the "Old Ship of Zion," 914, marked "Author unknown." Perhaps, I may be able to throw some light upon the subject. In the western part of Hanover county, Va., between the years 1820 and 1830, there lived a colored local Methodist preacher by the name of David Payne, a bright mulatto, a man of remarkable gifts as a preacher, without any education, but only taught to read by the white children with whom he was raised. He had a fine voice and good ear for music; was a splendid singer. My father, Rev. Garland James, used to tell me about him when I was a boy. He said he had heard him preach often; that he was a great revivalist, and had great success in getting souls to his ministry, especially among the colored people. Both white and colored would flock to hear him preach. It was always understood that Payne was the author both of the words and tune of this soul-stirring song. When Payne would strike up this old song the whole audience would appear electrified; sinners would flock to the altar and cry for mercy. Payne went as a missionary to Liberia, Africa, between the years 1826 and 1830, and died there soon after his arrival.—W. C. James, in Nashville Advocate.

Revival Stumbling-Blocks.

People who have no faith. People who talk too much. People of inconsistent lives. People with no moral nerve. People who always come late. People with quirks and whims. People who are proud and stiff. People who occupy back seats. People who do no praying at home. People who ride theological hobbies. People who are always finding fault. People who pray four times too long. People who are in love with themselves. People who know more than the pastor. People who are self-appointed exhorters. People who start tunes nobody can sing. People who are cool to poor folks who come. People whose zeal is not exactly "according to knowledge." People who make a great noise when nothing particular is going on. People who imagine they have a monopoly of all the holiness in the church. People who talk glowingly in church and are dumb as an oyster at home.—Word and Work.

Notice.

To the Friends and Brethren of Bro. George Bancroft in Alabama and Mississippi:

He is now superannuated, after having served the church for forty-five years, and needs a home for himself and faithful wife. Will you not send him a small amount to help him to a home. Send by registered letter to Why Not, Miss., or postoffice order on Meridian, Miss.

HYGIENE.

Sunshine and Health.

A well-known physiologist has shown that the processes of healthful activity proceed more rapidly, other things being equal, if one is exposed to the light of day. More oxygen is absorbed into the system in the same time; the heart beats more strongly, and the circulation is more rapid. In fact, so far as has been observed, all the organs of the body, such as the kidneys and skin, whose work is that of eliminating from the body the waste products harmful to it, are stimulated and strengthened by the mere presence of sunlight.

Again, the student of bacteriology, in his search for the causes of disease, has shown that many disease-germs thrive poorly, if at all, with the direct rays of sunlight upon them. Indeed, few bacteria survive exposure to many hours of sunlight.

The germs of the disease known as tuberculosis, or consumption, have been shown by one investigator to survive for many months in a receptacle guarded from sunlight and air. Placed in another receptacle, and set in a position where there was a slight circulation of air, the bacteria lived a much shorter time. Others, exposed to direct sunlight, lived but a few hours.

We have, therefore, two scientific reasons why the mere presence of sunlight is beneficial. It enables one to throw off more easily the waste products that are constantly generated in the body, and it is also one of the most powerful disinfectants known to science. Sunlight is thus nature's germ-killer; in comparison with it, indeed, no other agent deserves the name.

Flowers flourish in the sunlight so as to appear to grow toward it; and some, like sunflowers, follow the course of the sun from dawn till sunset, exposing to his ardent rays their full expanse of blossoms, thus openly acknowledging that the delicate chemical processes which are necessary to their perfection are accomplished by his direct aid.

Give to houses plenty of window space, then, and open their portals to sun and light.

Many who pay high prices for the luxury of the sun-bath of the sanitarium are extremely chary of exposing themselves to its influence in other places. Sunlight is beneficial, not only to the strong and well, but to the delicate and weak, both at home and during the coming season.—Youth's Companion.

Chloral Taking.

The death of Tyndall from chloral, or chloral-hydrate, as it is more properly called, induces us to say a few words concerning this drug. Chloral is an oily, pungent substance produced by the action of chlorine on ordinary alcohol. It is an intermediate compound in the production of chloroform, and chloral-hydrate is produced by the action of water on chloral. It has the effect of producing sleep, and drugs of this class are very extensively used in medicine, as every one knows. Tyndall had, it is said, formed the habit of using it to produce a more profound sleep than he could otherwise obtain, and it was indirectly the result of this habit that his life was prematurely cut short. Now, sleeplessness is a symptom of a diseased condition of the nervous system, especially of the brain, and the true remedy is not to compel sleep by a poison which produces a spasm, so to say, of the cerebral blood vessels in which they send the excess of blood out of the brain. The true remedy is to first remove the cause whatever it is, as over-work, mental strain, worry, improper food, too little exercise, indigestion, etc., and then to restore the normal condition of the brain by rest, relaxation, recreation, exercise, and, if need be, by the use of cooling applications to the head, as cold water to produce a tonic and strengthening effect on the blood vessels, so they may act on the blood naturally to relieve the brain of undue stimulation. The hygiene remedies for sleeplessness are so numerous and so well known to hygienists and many others that there need be no longer any excuse for using most dangerous drug, which has, no doubt, shortened the lives of multitudes. Even the British Medical Journal declares that "99 per cent. of these sleep-producing doses are worse than useless." It is a misfortune that so great a man as Tyndall, who knew well, theoretically, the need of care for the body, as the brief extract from one of his addresses given recently shows, and who was himself a hygienist to a certain extent, did not know something about the superiority of hygienic remedies over poisons, and also of the danger of introducing constantly into the body of toxic agents which give only temporary relief. Quite enough poison is generated in our systems by the changes going on there in work, and to add others only puts greater tax on the organs of excretion to cast them out. We will only add that the people who have not yet learned how to live so as to avoid sleeplessness should insist that their physicians educate themselves in the use of those remedies which do not endanger their lives or injure their nervous systems. Physicians follow, but do not directly produce public opinion and will educate themselves in the best methods if it is required of them.—Exchange.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. H. J. Boltz, Rocky Mount, La.: "At the last session of the Conference, held at Homer, I was appointed by Bishop Key to this charge (North Bossier circuit). We arrived here Jan. 4. We have made one round, and are very well pleased. These good people have received us with open hearts and have treated us very kindly, indeed. We have plenty of elbow room here. We have six regular appointments, and could get more if we could take them. Our first Quarterly Conference was held Feb. 8. Our beloved presiding elder was on hand, and preached and presided to the delight and satisfaction of all who were present. We hope to accomplish much good here this year for the Master."

Rev. R. A. Meek, Hernando and Coldwater charge, North Mississippi Conference: "The outlook is encouraging in our new field. The people gave us a generous reception, and their kindness lasts. Our congregations are increasing; our prayer meetings are well attended, and there seems to be a general quickening in zeal and interest among our members. We are praying for a sweeping revival. We hear good reports of all the preachers in the district. Bro. Dye's members say that they have the biggest preacher in the State. Bro. Gordon's say that they have him. From these and similar expressions, we infer that Bishop Hargrove's appointments are giving uniform satisfaction in this section. Our presiding elder, Bro. Morehead, is 'instant in season and out of season,' Wide-awake, well-informed, and thoroughly consecrated, he is the right man in the right place. The General Conference will be close to us, only a few miles away. We herewith invite you to spend a Sunday with us while it is in session."

Rev. H. M. Banks, Dry Creek charge, Louisiana Conference: "We would like to say that we have been made to feel the sore pressure of the financial stringency in this part of the Lord's vineyard, and, like the children of Israel at the Red Sea, we have stood still to see the salvation of the Lord, and this standing was simply walking by faith with much prayer, and as we go forward the way grows brighter. If you don't object, I will tell you where the silvery edge to the dark cloud began to appear. It was on the evening of Jan. 22, at about half-past seven o'clock a gentle tap was heard at the door of the parsonage, when, on opening the door, presents, presents began to fall into our hands so fast that we were compelled to cry out for another place of deposit. The party was headed by Miss Hulda Miller, one of our most efficient workers in the church at this place. After the storm had subsided a little we asked for the Doxology, and a prayer of thanksgiving was offered by Bro. Morrow, one of our best workers in the steward's office, and the company soon dispersed, all hearts being made glad. We ask all the brethren who read this to pray specially for the work in this part. A number of us here are praying for the baptism of the Holy Ghost.

"'Prayer makes the darkest clouds withdraw;
Prayer climbs the ladder Jacob saw,
Gives exercise to faith and love,
Brings ever blessing from above.'"

Rev. W. J. Roberts, Brandon, Miss.: "Brandon is rich in reminiscences of Mississippi Methodism. Here three Annual Conferences have been held, presided over respectively by Bishops Early, Kavanaugh and Wightman. This station has been served by some of our ripest scholars and truest men. Their works are visible, for we are now worshiping in a beautiful church erected at a cost of $6,400. Methodism here embraces in her membership men of nearly every vocation in life, and has a strong hold upon the people, especially upon the more intelligent class. Among our members we have five lawyers, four of whom are on the official Boards. These brethren are likewise held in high esteem by the State, having filled her responsible offices from the governor's chair down. Very recently the Mississippi Legislature elected one of our stewards, Bro. A. J. McLaurin, to the dignified office of United States senator. We feel proud of his true worth, and congratulate the United States and the State of Mississippi upon having him and his safe counsel in managing the affairs of our nation. Methodist religion is a great and needed factor in the politics of our country. Our Methodist women of Brandon are, if anything, superior to the men; stormed the pastor and wife; are faithful workers for the church; know how to sing exquisitely; and, above all, have a harmonious choir. Isn't that queer? We are planning and working to accomplish a great victory for our Master."

Rev. J. H. Evans, Raleigh, Miss.: "After four years' hard labor on the Williamsburg circuit, by the authority of the Bishop, I was sent to this mission, and by the assistance of the good people of Williamsburg charge got here, and am trying to do all I can, by the grace of God, in this field of thorns and thistles. I call this charge a mission as I could find no other name so appropriate; but we are here in the town of gullies and ditches, the county seat of Smith county; but notwithstanding the deep cayed-in ruts Raleigh is improving. There is a large well-built court-house just finished, and there is another new building going up. There are four small stores and one paper here and a very good school. There is a Methodist and also a Baptist Church going up, but neither of them finished. But we want to speak a few words concerning our parting with old friends at Williamsburg. Oh! the many kind words of love, many kind deeds done for our comfort, the kind offers in moving us up to this place, and the many gifts in token of their appreciation and love toward us all! These acts of kindness will never be forgotten as long as memory is retained. When I think of the pleasant moments we have spent with the good people at Williamsburg I think I would like to return and spend the remaining part of my fast declining years with those good people; but I know this is impossible, for the Bishops and the presiding elders are men of authority, and when they fix the doom of the preachers in the Conference, and say 'Go,' the servants must obey. When that man of authority stands on the stage and reads out the doom of every preacher in the Conference, then comes the heartache and the headache. But all must obey, so here we go—some to good places, and some to better; some to poor places and some to poorer; some to almost nothing, and very little of that. But, thanks be to the holy name of our blessed Lord, he can overrule it all for good and for the glory of his name. Pray for us."

THE CUISINE.

CONDUCTED BY L. A. B.

BOILED ICING.—Put one cupful of white sugar and two tablespoonfuls of water into a small kettle and boil until it strings. Remove from the fire and add the white of one egg beaten stiff. Stir all together, flavor and cover the cakes with it when it becomes cool.

GOLD AND SILVER CAKE.—White part: whites of three eggs, one cupful of powdered sugar, one-half cupful of butter, two cupfuls of flour, one-half cupful of milk, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Flavor with almond. Make the yellow part in the same way, using the yolks of the eggs, and flavor with lemon. Cover the top and edges with boiled icing.

BREAKFAST MUFFINS.—One pint of flour; a pinch of salt; fresh milk enough to mix to a thin batter. Three eggs beaten light and added to the batter just before baking. Grease well three sets of "gem" pans, fill with the batter and set them in a very hot stove. In fifteen minutes they should be done, and if properly made, as light as possible. No lard must be put in them.

CHARLOTTE RUSSE.—Put two-thirds of a pint of new milk in the range to heat; one-third box gelatin in a little tepid water to dissolve; heat yolks of three eggs and a small cup of sugar until light, pour over the boiling milk, add gelatin, and cook about five minutes until it thickens; whip one quart of cream. When custard is cool flavor with vanilla and heat in the whipped cream.—Mrs. John G. Carlisle's Kentucky Cook Book.

EGGS.—In preparing eggs for an invalid they should be cooked in water or milk rather than fried; or they may be baked with a little butter until the white is set. For a change from the usual method of boiling in the shell, drop a muffin ring in a pan of boiling water and break the egg in this, and as soon as the white is set remove the ring and carefully take up the nicely-rounded egg with a spoon, being careful not to break the soft yolk. Or the eggs may be poached in boiling milk instead of water, and when they are removed thicken the milk slightly with a very little flour, pour it over toasted bread, and place a poached egg on each slice.

HOW TO MAKE MEXICAN CANDY.—Three cups sugar, wet with one cup water. Let this cook, till it drops hard in water, or as if intended for pulling, then stir in one grated cocoanut and two cups of pecans. Let cook a few minutes, stirring to prevent scorching, then stir in three well-beaten eggs, stir constantly; let cook till thick enough to drop in little cakes, then pour into clean biscuit pans, about a third of an inch thick, and put into the oven and bake till brown. Take the pans from oven; when cool cut the candy in squares, and when cold, remove, and the candy is ready for use. If liked, vanilla flavoring is added before baking.—Detroit Free Press.

A Veteran's Story

Joe. Hemmerich.

Mr. Joseph Hemmerich, an old soldier, 520 E. 146th St., N. Y. City, writes voluntarily. In 1862, at the battle of Fair Oaks, he was stricken with typhoid fever, and after a struggle of several years in hospitals, was discharged as incurable with Consumption. Doctors said both lungs were affected and he could not live long, but a comrade urged him to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. Before he had finished one bottle his cough began to get loose, the choking sensation left, and night sweats grew less and less. He is now in good health and cordially recommends as a blood purifier and tonic medicine, especially to comrades in the G. A. R.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Our Reward.

A letter recently received from a preacher in one of the patronizing Conferences, among other cheering words, has this to say about the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE:

The weekly visits of the ADVOCATE are a benediction to my soul. It has been the means of converting my daughter, and it stimulates the whole family. It contains food for both brain and soul.

So long as the ADVOCATE can produce results like this, we shall feel that our labor is not in vain.

The Church Paper.

The question is frequently asked, Why is it that religious papers are higher than secular papers? Several things are to be considered in estimating the price of a paper. A weekly paper that is wholly made up out of the issues of a daily costs very little. There is no cost whatever for composition. The stereotype plates that have already been used for the daily are used for the weekly. The only items of expense in getting out a paper in this way are paper, ink and press work.

Those papers which are made up in this way are the very ones that are brought into comparison with the religious papers as to subscription price. This is manifestly unfair. If the religious public will sustain a daily Advocate, we will guarantee to give them the weekly of same size as present paper at seventy-five cents a year.

Another way in which some papers manage to reduce the subscription price is by using what is called plate matter, i. e., matter which is stereotyped and sold to hundreds of papers all over the country. This matter is frequently not of such a quality as we would be willing to put before our readers. Were we willing to use such stuff put up by wholesale by some agency that has no aim higher than that of gain we could reduce the price of the paper to one dollar and realize a greater profit than we now do at two dollars. The size of a paper should also be taken into the account. Before you pronounce the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE high, count its columns of reading matter; then count the lines in a column, and thus ascertain the exact amount of fresh matter you get every week. Then do the same for some cheap paper, and in many cases you will see that the so-called cheap paper is really the high one. You pay twice as much per inch for the reading matter it contains as the ADVOCATE charges you. We publish matter enough every week to make a very respectable sized book.

Alone with God.

After Peter had thrice denied his Lord, and after the Savior had cast upon him that eloquent look of mingled reproach and love, it is said that "Peter went out and wept bitterly." Not only did he weep, he went out to weep. There is a charming touch of naturalness in this brief statement. It would almost have staggered our faith had we been told that Peter shed his tears of penitential sorrow in the midst of the vile crew of scoffers that thronged him during that mock trial. As well might we expect the fruitage of the tropics amid the icebergs of Greenland. Imagine a penitent soul pouring out cries for mercy amid the associations of the bar room or the gambling hell. The very supposition is absurd. The soul that is seeking pardon will have no such surroundings. It desires to be alone with God. To what particular spot Peter wended his way we are not informed. Doubtless he sought some place of retirement—some sequestered spot where no eye but God's could see and no ear but God's could hear, and there poured out his soul in earnest, fervent prayer. And we have no doubt that this conscience-stricken apostle continued his agonizing cries until he received the assurance of his restoration to the divine favor. It is here in this hour of secret soul-agony that we find the source of Peter's marvelous strength in after years. On the day of Pentecost, and from that time onward, Peter was, perhaps, the most intrepid of all the apostles. Like wrestling Jacob, he had been alone with God and prevailed in a contest with the Most High.

This chapter in the experience of the apostle to the Circumcision is fraught with lessons of wisdom for us. All men need frequently to be alone with God. One of the greatest obstacles to spiritual development at the present day is found just here. In this busy, bustling age men have their time so entirely taken up with secular affairs, or with the outward activities of church life that they have no seasons of retirement for devout meditation. Many active church workers spend very little time in private communion with God. As to the rank and file of the church, we fear that comparatively few of them make it a daily business to commune with God in secret. They may kneel just before retiring at night and repeat a form of prayer, but this is a very different thing from that close communion with God of which we speak. In this sort of cold, formal, perfunctory prayer-saying many essential elements are lacking. There is very little retrospection—very little looking back over the deeds of the day to see what duties have been neglected and what sins have been committed. There is very little introspection—very little scrutiny of motives—very little self-catechisation as to the moral character of the springs of action. Hence, there is very little deep contrition. The man who thus says prayers may admit in a general way that he is a sinner as all men are; but he has no such conception of the moral turpitude of many of his daily acts as would come to him with overwhelming power should he allow himself to be often alone with God in earnest, agonizing prayer. Being alone with God is also the indispensable condition of lofty spiritual enjoyment. He who merely says prayers has very little religious enjoyment. Were we to institute a search for an exuberantly joyous Christian, we would find him among those who daily repair to their closets and bar out the world and all its affairs while they open their hearts to the influences that come down from above. And joy is a source of strength. The happy Christian is usually the strong one. The man who is the readiest to do and dare in the Master's cause is he who day by day has conscious, blissful communion with the great Father of spirits. Peter's night of solitary weeping has a lesson for the unconverted, no less than for the Christian. The one thing that prevents the conversion of thousands of persons in this heaven-favored land is that they will not allow themselves to be "alone with God." When the Spirit utters in their ears its solemn warnings and its earnest pleadings freighted with all the fullness of love divine, they rush into the giddy whirl of pleasure, or the absorbing activities of business life, in order to drown its "still, small voice."

We know of no wiser counsel to give to either saint or sinner than this: Make it a rule of your life as unalterable as the laws of the Medes and Persians to spend each day, at least, a few moments alone with God. Exclude the world and all its affairs from your thoughts. Think only of your relations to God, and of the obligations growing out of these relations. Ask yourself whether you are meeting these obligations, whether you are accomplishing the design of your creation, whether you are moving in the sphere which God has prescribed for you. Do this with a prayer for divine illumination, and the result can not be otherwise than helpful.

The Secret of a Happy Life.

1. Don't worry. Do your best, and unanxiously leave the rest to God. It is not so much hard work as fret and worry that kills men. Let your troubles be turned from stumbling-blocks into stepping-stones on which to mount courageously to higher things. This universe is not left to the blind rule of fortuitous atoms. In all its vast machinery not one delicate screw is loose, and from microscopic mote to fixed star, and from faintest heart-throb to singing celestial spheres, God's tender, all-comprehensive thought sleeplessly moves and blessedly sustains. If God arrays the lily in more than imperial beauty and splendor, and no sparrow's fall or grass-blade goes unwatched by his careful eye, surely he will not leave your immortal nature unadorned or uncared for. Overregard for material blessings is the secret of carking care and bootless anxiety.

2. Forget your past mistakes, and look forward hopefully into the future. Like Lot's ill-fated, backward-looking wife, peering back too wistfully means retrogression and harm. Don't brood too much over yesterday's failures and missteps, but like a Corinthian athlete, with eye and limb and nerve impetuously straining for the parsley-wreathed goal, so do you, with quenchless enthusiasm, press on to nobler achievements, inspired by loftier visions and holier ideals. Tardy laggards never clutch life's golden prizes. Let the years evermore lift you nearer divinity. To morbidly brood over bygone sins will not redeem and exalt to-day. Unavailing regrets not only unfit for action, but embitter the passing hours. Be not content with last week's perfumeless, wilted bouquets when the green earth is even now embossed with an army of sweet-eyed flowers. Don't sentimentally bemoan the past, but look upon every past distress as a reason for fronting to-morrow with hardier nerve and more magnificent bravery.

3. Enjoy life as the days go by. If you reject the little and inconspicuous chances of happiness to-day, to-morrow you may vainly seek to catch the shy, fickle sylph of pleasure. The feast of life sinks into insipid dreariness if allowed to stand too long. Don't wait until your fresh, keen nerve of enjoyment has withered with age. The unsoiled freshness and rainbow beauty and unworn strength of youth are all too soon faded and gone. Every day has in it some golden hour that ought not to pass away unimproved.

4. Cultivate sunny-heartedness of temper, and you will find it a priceless charm for brightening existence and hushing troubled waters into happy peace. Form the habit of giving cheer and encouragement to others, never uttering needlessly a disheartening word. Don't quench hope, or throw cold water on reasonable enthusiasm, or chill ardor, or create an atmosphere of censure and fault-finding, but make folks tingle to the finger-tips with the heartiness and spontaneity of your presence and greeting. Make others happy, and you can not help but be benefited. Don't let the black pinioned raven's croak drown the skylark's roseate note. Don't talk in a series of grunts and growls. Instead of resembling a gruff and surly thunder cloud, try to be a flood of captivating sunshine. Learn to reflect nature's bright moods when dewdrops, and liquid pearls of bird-song, and gorgeous pomps of sky and sea, and her thousand and one aspects of pure loveliness sweep the cobwebs out of the brain and make the heart sing. Let no wagging of evil tongues, or barbed malice, or frozen sneer, or stroke of misfortune rob you of the cheerful faith that at the core of every hideous experience lies a heart of blessing and goodness.

5. Look on the Godward side of your troubles. The gardener's sharp pruning-knife in the midst of the too luxuriant tendrils is not a sign of anger, but of love. It is the unchastened child that is spoilt. Just as grape clusters grow more luscious and richer flavored by the touch of the unsparing blade, so the bleeding heart develops the virtues of a saint by the keen shocks of suffering.

6. Be Christ-like and live for the sole purpose of redeeming others from sin and guilt. If you seek enjoyment as a definite object in life, happiness will coyly elude your panting and breathless chase. Live above the sordid aims and green-eyed envy of the world, working unselfishly for God and man, and you shall taste the bliss of Christ's serene and ineffable joy. Our age runs to minor strains, and the cup of nectar, instead of being unspeakably delicious, smacks of gall and wormwood. Why? Because we hunt for pleasure too hotly, and, lo! the gay cup bubbles with ruin; because our mad chase after excitement at last jades and bitterly reacts; because we plunge too eagerly into secular pursuits, and incessant toil is apt to breed weariness and disgust. Imitate Christ, and every day will beget a sort of ecstacy and elevation in doing good to others. Without Christ no royal purple or sumptuous fare can escape being hopelessly pierced with sorrow and pain. With Christ, a man walks in unperturbed calm above carpings of criticism, or arrows of slander, or the cold, brutal sneer of ostracism. Living like Christ makes life divinely beautiful and joyous. Under the touch of his transfiguring presence every dark path opens up glimpses of light somewhere, every throb of pain shall ultimately rise into a pulse of gladness, every sting of misery shall be transformed into a burst of praise, every tragic loss and tear of grief shall turn into a palmy triumph and an eternal gain, and every pit of sin and sorrow shall become a starting-point from which to soar to heaven.—Rev. Philip Graif, in Herald and Presbyter.

Glorifying God in Business Life.

BY R. S. MACARTHUR, D. D.

We are to glorify God in all our business relations. There is danger that we shall make an unwarrantable distinction between our business engagements and our religious obligations. They do not belong to different spheres of duty. We too often act as if Sundays and churches belonged to God, and week days and business houses to the world, the flesh and the devil. There is a sense in which the house which has been consecrated to God is peculiarly sacred; but there is also a sense in which every office and store may be consecrated to God. Religion is not for Sundays and churches alone, but it is for week days and business houses as well. Religion sanctifies and glorifies every relation in life. If a man can not take his religion into his business, he must have a bad business or a very poor religion. We all recognize the importance of what is known as "a call to the ministry;" the man who refuses to heed this call does so at his peril. But it must not be forgotten that every man is called to some form of ministry in the kingdom of our Lord.

The whole duty of everyone everywhere is to glorify God; and the exalted privilege of every man is to enjoy God forever. No man is excused from this great obligation because he refuses to confess Christ. This refusal but adds to his guilt. If you are engaged in an honest business for which you have qualifications, and which you are conducting in a religious spirit, you may rest assured that God has called you into that business. By giving you ability to perform your work God has set you apart to that duty. Other business men may not have formally laid their hands upon your head, giving you ordination to that service, but tacitly they have given their approval, and God has given his blessing. This conception of our daily calling exalts and glorifies it; it makes the lowliest duty radiant with the glory of the loftiest motive. This conception of life and duty converts every office and store, every workshop and factory, every parlor and kitchen, into a sanctuary. It makes every counter and desk, every anvil and bench, a pulpit from which men and women may preach the gospel of Christ, and in which they are to glorify God. We are to find our opportunity to serve God, not apart from, but within, our daily vocation. Any other thought of secular service degrades it and dishonors God.—Christian Enquirer.

A Christian Advocate in the Home of Every New Convert. Why Not?

Many hundreds of new converts are now uniting with our churches in this region. In some cases whole families have been brought into the new life. A question which confronts each pastor after an accession of converts is this: How shall we hold and train them? No one can estimate the losses which Methodism has sustained by failure at this point. In the aggregate hundreds of thousands of men and women, during the past fifty years, have been dropped from our rolls during the probationary period of their membership. Of these, doubtless, a considerable number were never converted; others in large numbers might have been saved to the church with proper care and training. Among the agencies to be used by wise pastors in retaining and culturing their new converts the introduction of the church paper into their hands at the very start of the new life is to be reckoned chief. The pastor can not see every convert each week—the paper makes a weekly visit; the pastor's ministry of necessity is a limited one; the ministry of the paper is manifold; it cultivates the taste, the mind, the heart; it furnishes edifying matter for the soul; it brings warning, hope and comfort; it is always at hand, it serves to fill up with helpful admonitions, inspiring counsels, and cheery words the odd intervals of leisure. It creates a bond at once which unites the convert not only to the local church, but to the denomination—more than this, to the universal church, the body of Christ, which fills the world. Brother pastor, why not make a diligent effort to place a copy of the church paper in the home of every new convert? Can you do any better service for your probationers than this?—Central Advocate.

A Sunday at Pearlington.

We spent last Sabbath at Pearlington, Miss. Leaving New Orleans by the Louisville and Nashville railroad at 3:45 P. M., we reached Lookout in about an hour and a half. Here boarding the fleet little mail steamer, City of Pearlington, we were soon steaming up the Pearl, and in less than forty-five minutes we reached our destination. We were met at the wharf by the Bishop of Pearlington, Rev. J. V. Penn, who escorted us to the residence of Bro. Joseph Farve, to whom and to his excellent wife we are indebted for many courtesies during our stay. We preached Sunday morning to a good congregation. At night we had the pleasure of hearing an excellent sermon by Bro. Penn. Bro. Penn has taken a good start. He expects soon to complete the church, which is still in an unfinished condition, owing to the financial stringency of last year. The church was built two years ago under the pastorate of Rev. T. W. Adams, and was so far completed as to be occupied. It is yet uncelled. When completed it will be quite a tasteful structure. It is of ample dimensions for the community. The church has made liberal provision for the support of the pastor.

A New Department.

Believing that by so doing we will meet a want on the part of a large number of our readers, we have made arrangements to begin in our next issue a department of "Agriculture and Horticulture." Distrusting our own ability to conduct a column of this sort, we have secured the services of a live, progressive, wide-awake farmer to take charge of that department.

We introduce to our readers as our agricultural editor, Rev. J. W. McNeil, of Crystal Springs, Miss. Bro. McNeil is known to many of our readers as one of the leading officials of the Crystal Springs Camp Meeting Association. He has also represented Copiah county in the Legislature. He was for several years a member of the Mississippi Conference.

Premiums.

Don't fail to read our premium offers in another column. Note that we have two offers—the Grand Combination Offer of last week and also a list of books. Those who accept our Grand Combination Offer may look for their seeds in about six days from our receipt of the order. If the goods are not received in that time, drop us a card.

NOTES.

We are indebted to Rev. J. T. Sawyer for a copy of the Minutes of the last session of the Louisiana Conference. The secretarial work is done with Dr. Sawyer's usual accuracy. The Minutes contain an excellent wood-cut of Bishop Key.

***

There are 16,739 local preachers in Wesleyan Methodist Church of Great Britain, an increase of 2,286 since 1885. A Special Committee appointed by the last Conference to consider the best methods for maintaining and increasing the efficiency of local preachers has been in session in Centenary Hall, London. That is an important question in our Zion also.

***

We have a number of communications on hand that will appear in due time. No contributor should be nervous if his communication does not appear in next issue. Of course, we must exercise our judgment as to what articles are to have precedence. Some communications must appear at once or not at all. Others will be as good ever after the lapse of months.

A dispatch to the Globe-Democrat from St. Joseph, Mo., says that the whole city is stirred by a great revival and that there are about 100 conversions each night. Mayor Shepherd issued a proclamation requesting that all factories, stores and places of business be closed yesterday (Tuesday), from 9 o'clock A. M. to 2 o'clock P. M., in order to give the proprietors and employees an opportunity to attend the services.—St. Louis Advocate.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Rev. H. J. Harris, of the Mississippi Conference, made us a pleasant call a few days since.

Bishop Keener occupied the pulpit at Felicity last Sabbath, and preached a strong spiritual sermon.

Louisiana Avenue had the privilege of hearing two excellent sermons last Sabbath from Dr. C. W. Carter.

Rev. W. S. Lagrone writes:

Rev. J. W. Honnoll has been appointed to Tupelo by Bishop Hargrove.

"Glideroy" is to preach the commencement sermon for the Lexington Normal College, Lexington, Miss., in June.

The Kosciusko District Conference is to be held at Ackerman about the first of April. Bishop Hargrove is expected to preside.

We are pained to learn of the death of Rev. O. N. Koon, of the North Mississippi Conference. A good man has gone to his reward.

Rev. N. B. Harmon and Rev. W. M. Sullivan, of the Mississippi Conference, have recently visited the Crescent City and the ADVOCATE office.

We regret to learn of the illness of Bro. Huff, of the Mississippi Conference. We hope to hear of his speedy restoration to his usual health.

We regret to learn that our good brother "Glideroy" has serious illness in his family, his daughter-in-law having been down with typhoid fever for nearly four months.

Prof. L. T. Fizhugh, president of Whitworth College, let the light of his countenance shine upon us a few days ago. He reports several new pupils since the holidays.

Our sanctum was enlivened recently by a visit from the genial president of Millsaps College, Dr. W. B. Murrah. The Doctor reports the college in a flourishing condition.

Dr. Gillman, president of Johns Hopkins University, and Dr. J. L. M. Curry, agent of Peabody and Slater Funds, are expected to visit Millsaps College and deliver addresses on their Southern tour in March.

Mr. George T. Heagland, of St. Joseph, Mo., celebrated his eighty-first birthday a few days since by donating twenty thousand dollars to Central College, the money to be paid within a year. A sensible way to celebrate a birthday! "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through or steal."

Rev. Dr. R. H. Mahon, Rev. Dr. Anson West and Hon. Edward Mayes, the committee appointed by authority of the last General Conference on revision of chapters vii. and viii. of the Discipline, had their final meeting in Jackson, Miss., last week. Their report will be printed and ready to be laid before the General Conference at the beginning of the session.

Bishop Galloway left home Monday for a short trip to New England. He will stop for a day or two in Nashville. He will preach next Sunday, Feb. 25, at Wesley College. The next day he will lecture before Boston University. On Thursday of the same week he is to lecture in New Haven, Conn. Thence he hurries home to meet engagements in Alabama and Texas.

As will be seen from Bro. Lagrone's notice, Rev. J. W. Honnoll has been appointed to fill out the unexpired term of Rev. E. H. Moon, recently deceased. We learn that Bro. Moon's family will occupy the parsonage the remainder of the year, and that half the salary assessed him will be paid to the family, although a new pastor is to be provided for. A handsome thing to do.

The Rev. Dr. Geo. Douglass, of Montreal, Canada, the eloquent fraternal messenger to our General Conference at Atlanta in 1878, is dead. For years he has been almost totally blind, and nearly helpless from rheumatism, but never lost the power of thrilling and majestic speech. Canada Methodism has lost her greatest pulpit orator and the college at Montreal its distinguished president.

Notice.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The preachers of the Sardis district will please send reports to me on or before March 1, as per published order in column 3, page 2, NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, of Feb. 8, 1894. Please state fully what has been done the present quarter on your charge for the cause of missions.

District Secretary.

Parsonage and Home Mission Society.

Inquiry having been made concerning membership dues of the Parsonage and Home Mission Society, I considered it very important to request the publication of the following instructions from Miss Helm in Our Homes, January, 1892:

"Who should organize?"

"You, if you can. The officers appointed for that purpose will be grateful for your help. Write to your Conference secretary for the Constitution.

"How to organize.

"First of all, make a special prayer in your closet that God will aid you in organizing at that particular place an auxiliary that will work faithfully for the advancement of his cause. Continually praying that God's Spirit may be with you, canvass the congregation, publicly or privately, for members, telling them the object of the society and the great need of it. Call a meeting of those who have given their names. After devotional exercises read the Constitution and By-laws for auxiliaries and the General By-laws of auxiliaries preceding them. Elect your officers and give pledges to each other that you will work faithfully for the cause, doing all 'in his name,' for whose glory you should labor. Report to your Conference secretary at once and ask for the printed matter due your auxiliary.

"How may a local society become a connectional auxiliary?

"If some of the members will agree to pay the connectional dues of one dollar each per year, and our Constitution be adopted, the society may report to the Conference secretary as an auxiliary.

"What of those members of the society not able or willing to contribute to anything but the local interests?

"As much of the work of our auxiliaries is local, and reported under that head, these members may work with it in that portion of its work, that the work of the women of each congregation may be more united, and may be termed 'local members.' Note that By-law 15, in regard to auxiliaries, says: 'Any rules relating to local affairs or to persons working with the society in the local work only may be adopted by the auxiliaries.' The dues of those who have agreed to pay the membership fees to the general work should be forwarded to the Conference treasurer. All contributed, paid, or raised in any way by the society for local work should be used by the auxiliary, and the amount reported to the Conference secretary under the head of 'Special Donations for Local Work.'

"If there is a regular auxiliary and a pastor's aid, composed principally of the same women, as is often the case, and the aid does not wish to abandon its organization, how can the work be thrown together?

"The aid may report to the Connectional Society as a committee or branch. Other local women's societies may do the same. They are all often composed of the same women. The strongest general societies—the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, for example—have many branches. This arrangement concentrates the work of our women so that they may know what they are doing at home, and be encouraged. Said one Methodist lady to another: 'Mrs. C. is so busy with undenominational missions that she does no church work.' Yet Mrs. C. is a most consecrated woman, giving her whole time to Christ. Why this distinction between church work and Christian work? Because her relation to the church was not acknowledged as it would be were she, as a member of one of our auxiliaries, which appoints committees to cooperate with the various institutions and missions common to the community, to come to the meeting, as a member of the family coming home, and give an interesting report of the work she is engaged in, thus acknowledging her allegiance to her church in all she does. She would in this way interest others who may be idle. If the members of one of our auxiliaries are interested in any special charitable institution or mission in the community, they should be appointed a committee to visit and report on that work. This is commonly done in other churches.

"Sisters, sinners are dying in our midst ignorant of the gospel, while we hide the truth in our hearts and our Bibles lie unopened."

Small beginnings are recognized. A society of one member reported in the Kentucky Conference.

Mrs. S. S. Cope, Paulding, Miss., reported Jan. 16: "Our Woman's Missionary Society is in active work. I got up the program, 'Reign (rain) of the Mites,' for the children, and they collected $16.66. We sent on $5 (or more) toward Miss L. McNemar's education. We hope to raise more on that."

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

BY REV. HENRY H. AHRENS.

Theme for Prayer Meeting.

JUSTIFICATION BY FAITH.
Romans v, 1-10.

1. The end sought: Justification.
2. The means used: Faith.
3. The happy result: Peace with God, etc.

1. The end sought. (1) Justification includes, but is more than pardon. A pardoned convict, an ex-convict still. In justification our sins are blotted out of the book of God's remembrance. (2) Justification is identical with regeneration. The two are one and inseparable, differing only in the order of thought. Justification is what God does for us; regeneration, what he does in us. Justification means: rendered guiltless. Pure as Naaman after cure from leprosy.

2. The means used. Justified by faith. Wonderful leverage, removing such vast loads of sin! Miraculous alchemy, converting sinners into children of God, darkness into light! Rescue from wreckage. Deliverance from bondage, from prison. (1) Faith is reliance on God's promises. (2) Acceptance of God's mercy. (3) Faith is, in its culmination, a supernatural illumination. At this stage faith is closely akin to knowledge, enabling us to say: "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

3. The happy result. (1) Have peace with God. Estrangement removed. Are friends. (2) "Rejoice in the hope of the glory of God." "We know, when it does appear, we shall be like unto him." (3) "The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost given unto us." (4) We are enabled to rejoice even in tribulation. Patience and experience prove life-buoys. (5) Are enabled to go on to perfection. "For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his son; much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life." Christ, our exemplar. We follow his footsteps, emulate his virtues.

League Dots.

A writer in an exchange desires that our approaching General Conference add to the existing legislation in regard to Epworth Leagues by making it obligatory on our pastors to organize Leagues in their several congregations where as many as ten young people can be collected for that purpose.

The New Orleans Preachers' Meeting discussed on last Monday (Feb. 19) the following subject: "What additional legislation is necessary to make the Epworth League a more pronounced success."

Many of our preachers heed the advice of Bishop Key, given during the last session of the Louisiana Conference, and are taking steps to organize Epworth Leagues in their several congregations.

A Suggestion.

"Topics for League Prayer Meetings from Jan. 1 to June 30, 1894," are taken from various portions of the Bible, in both the Old and New Testament, and embrace well-chosen and important subjects. These are printed in a neat booklet, in calendar order, by our Publishing House, and sold for only 25 cents per hundred. They are also published in our church papers weekly with helpful notes and suggestions. The design of all this is to secure concert of thought upon important subjects for the devotional meetings of the Epworth League. This method is calculated to intensify interest in the exercises, and thereby make them the more profitable to the worshipers.

Now, if such a plan is good for some, why may it not be good for all? Even where it is not practicable to organize an Epworth League, these wisely chosen topics might be used advantageously in our prayer meetings. Each pastor or leader could procure a sufficiency of the topic leaflets to distribute once in six months among his congregation, giving to each one a copy, calling attention from time to time to the subject for the next week and request the study of it. One or two persons might be designated at each service to prepare a five-minutes' talk on the subject for the next. Also appoint some one at each meeting to select from the church hymn book two or three songs appropriate to the subject.

It seems to me that such a method would enlist more interest in our prayer meetings and make them occasions of great spiritual good.

I have suggested this plan to several preachers, who have given it their assent and signified their willingness to try it.

Brethren of the North Mississippi Conference, and elsewhere in the Lord's vineyard, let us try this plan for this year and see if much good will not come of it in increased attendance on the prayer meeting services, more study of God's Word and more concern for the church and souls.

Everyone that will accept the proposition, please write me at once and order Topic Calendars needed, at the rate of twenty-five cents per hundred.

Brother, think on these things and let us hear from you.

G. W. BACHMAN.

Kosciusko, Miss.

Annual Meeting of the General Board of Church Extension.

The Board of Church Extension of the M. E. Church, South, will hold its regular annual meeting at its office, 705 West Chestnut St., in the city of Louisville, Ky., beginning at 9 A. M., Thursday, April 26, 1894.

Those who intend to apply for aid are hereby advised that under a rule of the Board all applications must be on file in this office on or before March 26, 1894. This is required because the Committee on Applications meets and considers them and prepares its report before the meeting of the Board. The secretary is also required to print a list of all applications filed, and this list is sent to the printer as soon as it can be made up after March 26.

A very large number and amount of appropriations heretofore made have not been paid and can not now be paid in view of heavy diminution of receipts. They must therefore go over for another year. Entering upon a new year thus burdened with past unpaid grants, the amount at the disposal of the Board for new appropriations will be very much restricted. We trust our friends will bear this in mind and not burden the Board with the consideration of applications for aid to any enterprise except those in the most urgent and necessitous circumstances. Brethren are specially and earnestly warned not to incur debts or involve themselves in embarrassing contracts relying upon help from this Board to relieve them. Even if aid is promised it will probably not be forthcoming until next Winter and not certainly then unless there is a decided improvement in collections on loans and assessments.

Blank applications can be obtained upon request at this office. Please send two-cent stamp to pay postage, etc. DAVID MORTON, Cor. Sec.

JOINT BOARD OF FINANCE.

Officers elected for the current year, 1894, are: John W. Chambers, chairman; W. A. Gunning, secretary; W. M. Thornton, treasurer. Let all members take due notice. Send all moneys to W. M. Thornton, Lake, Miss. If you send postal money orders, send them on Jackson, Miss.

Veterans' Day claims your attention. Please send us something from every mission, circuit and station in the Conference. It will gladden all hearts and save printer's ink if you give $2,500 by April 1. JOHN W. CHAMBERS,
Chair'n Joint Board.

The Earlier symptoms of dyspepsia, such as distress after eating, heartburn, and occasional headaches, should not be neglected. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla if you wish to be cured.

Hood's Pills cure all Liver Ills, Biliousness, Jaundice, Indigestion, Sick Headache.

Rev. Geo. W. Huff.

MR. EDITOR: Please say to the members of the Mississippi Conference and members of the church, that my husband, Rev. Geo. W. Huff, is confined to our home in Vancleave, Miss. The cause of his sickness and confinement is a stroke of apoplexy. We ask the prayers of the preachers and the church for his recovery.

Miss Louisa E. Roidan.

Many readers of the ADVOCATE and friends of the Mission School in Mexico will be pained to hear of the death of Miss Louisa E. Roidan announced to the Carondelet Street Woman's Missionary Society through the enclosed letter.

Miss Roidan, a native Mexican and former pupil, was the associate of Mrs. Weems in the conduct of the school. Since Dr. Weems' return to the States, Miss Roidan has been in charge to the perfect satisfaction of the society which employed her, the preachers in the field and of our senior Bishop, who organized and has a special interest in the Mission School.

Mrs. Weems in writing of this event says: "Oh! it is such a calamity to our mission. I don't know another woman who could fill the place as she has done. I feel so heart-sick over this great affliction, that for a moment I forget that God is able to raise up others quite as efficient."

CAST OUT, the disorders, diseases, and weaknesses peculiar to women—by the prompt action of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. A woman's beauty depends on her health—beauty in this case can be purchased. A bad complexion, a muddy skin, a wrinkled face and sunken eyes, follow the disorders of the womanly functions. Cupid is in demand for healthy woman — not for sick and ailing ones.

The "Favorite Prescription" is a powerful, invigorating tonic, and a strengthening nervine to be used in all those distressing troubles which make woman's life miserable. You'll find relief from sleeplessness, backache and bearing-down sensations. It's a medicine prescribed by an eminent physician for those nervous conditions brought on by functional disorders—such as Nervous Prostration, Excitability, Fainting Spells, Dizziness, and St. Vitus's Dance. In every case of "female complaint" if it doesn't benefit or cure, you have your money back.

TRIFLES.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Sometimes I am tempted to murmur
That life is flitting away,
With only a round of trifles
Filling each busy day;
Dusting nooks and corners,
Making the house look fair,
And patiently taking on me
The burden of woman's care.

Comforting childish sorrows,
And charming the childish heart
With the simple song and story,
Told with a mother's art;
Setting the dear home table,
And clearing the meal away,
And going on little errands
In the twilight of the day.

One day is just like another!
Sewing and piecing well
Little jackets and trousers
So neatly that none can tell
Where are the seams and joinings.
Ah! the seamy side of life
Is kept out of sight by the magic
Of many a mother and wife.

And oft when ready to murmur
That life is flitting away,
With the self-same round of duties
Filling each busy day,
It comes to my spirit sweetly,
With the grace of a thought divine:
"You are living, toiling for love's sake,
And the loving should never repine."

"You are guiding the little footsteps
In the way they ought to walk,"
You are dropping a word for Jesus
In the midst of your household talk;
Living your life for love's sake,
Till the homely cares grow sweet,
And sacred the self-denial
That is laid at the Master's feet.

Happy Homes.

Why are there so few homes where there is complete harmony and constant sunshine? Why is it so rare a thing to find families where hearts are at rest, brows unclouded, and tongues oiled with gentleness and joy as the merry months glide by? Why has the lamp of love gone out on so many family altars? Why has the reality of wedded life fallen so far below what was expected and pictured? How has it come about that so many married people are in what is not too harshly designated as a chronic state of dissatisfaction with each other?

We speak not now of those sad, sad places where the drink-fiend has stolen in to ravage or destroy, or where some other form of open sin readily accounts for the lack of peace. In very many Christian homes, where the heads of the household maintain a fairly consistent outward walk, there is not the settled habitual happiness that might be expected, and is certainly to be desired. Why is it?

Selfishness and thoughtlessness are the two words that destroy the beauty and vitality of the house-tree. Perhaps more than anything else it is just lack of thought and considerateness, lack of little courtesies and manifestations of affection. Happiness is a mosaic made up of little stones. Trifles constitute it, and trifles can destroy it. The delicate plant of household harmony and love can be broken by much smaller matters than blows and oaths. It is not enough that the husband is a good provider, and furnishes the family enough of the necessities of physical life. It is not enough that the wife is reasonably economical and indefatigable in toil. Much more than this on both sides is needed. Love seeks ever to express itself, and longs for a similar return of expression. This is perfectly understood and acted upon in the days of courtship. Why should it not be in the days that follow? Is it not of quite as much importance to retain as to obtain? Should there not be an increase rather than a diminution of attention and care after those solemn vows are said which never can be unsaid, but are too often forgotten?

It is undoubtedly true that in a multitude of cases home happiness is wrecked by mere heedlessness. How richly it pays to take pains in these small matters that make up the sum of daily intercourse and common life! We make no question but that most people are much too sparing of commendation and encouragement. All of us need such pleasant words of cheer. It will not spoil the wife if she be praised occasionally, and told what a prize she has proved to be; it will fill her soul with song and sunshine and lighten all her labors. Nor will it hurt the husband at all if he is made to understand that he is the very best husband in all the wide world. It will make him ashamed not to live up to so inspiring an ideal. What a mistake it is to wait until our dear ones are dead before we seem to find out what they are worth to us, and to tell everybody else their good qualities sooner than we tell them! It is a mistake, also, to presume too much upon affection, as if it were an exhaustless reservoir. It requires perpetual renewal, and by the same means as those which were used to fill it in the beginning. It is of primary importance, for the constituting or the continuing of a happy home that there be a multiplicity of those little delicate attentions which spring so naturally from a "thoughtful love by constant watching wise."

Have we uttered truisms? Perhaps so. Yet who of us does not need some gentle reminder along these lines? And young couples especially, just setting out together on the journey of life, might save themselves much misery and a thousand unavailing regrets would they but lay to heart these hints. They can thus keep the cold chill of indifference from creeping over their heartstone. Even they who have already made the mistake here mentioned may surely turn over a new leaf, have an earnest season of prayer together, and resolve that a different order of things shall henceforth rule in their home.—Rev. James Mudge, D. D., in Zion's Herald.

A Father's Lesson.

"If more fathers would take a course with their sons similar to the one my father took with me," observed one of the leading business men of Boston, "the boys might think it hard at the time, but they'd thank them in after life."

"What sort of a course?" we asked.

"Well, I was a young fellow of twenty-two just out of college, and I felt myself of considerable importance. I knew my father was well off, and my head was full of foolish notions of having a pleasant time and spending lots of money. Later on I expected father to start me in business, after I'd 'swelled' around awhile at the clubs and with fine horseflesh. Like a wise man, father at once saw through my folly and resolved to prevent my self-destruction if possible.

" 'If the boy's got the right stuff in him, let him prove it,' I heard him say to mother one day. 'I worked hard for money. I don't intend to let Ned squander it and ruin himself besides.'

"That very day father came along and handed me fifty dollars, remarking, 'Ned, take that money, spend it as you choose, but understand this—it's the last dollar of my money you can have till you prove yourself capable of earning money and taking care of it on your own account.'

"I took the money in a sort of dazed manner and stammered out: 'I—why—I—I want to go into business.'

" 'Business!' exclaimed father, contemptuously. 'What do you know about managing the mercantile business? Get a clerkship and learn the alphabet before you talk to me of business.' And father let me to ponder on his words. And that fifty dollars was the last money my father ever gave me till, at his death, I received my part of the property.

"I became hard and bitter then, thought my father was a stingy old fogy, and resolved to prove to him that I could live without his money. He had roused my pride—just what he intended, I suppose.

"For three days I looked about for a place to make lots of money. I found no such chance, and at length I accepted a clerkship in a large retail store at $400 a year.

"Another bit of father's stinginess at this time was demanding two dollars a week board through that first year.

"At the end of my first year I had laid aside $200, and the next year, my salary being raised a hundred, I had $500 laid by. One hundred cents meant more to me in those days than $100 had previously.

"At the end of four years' clerking, I went to my father with $1,500 of my own and asked him if he was willing to help me enter business. Even then he would only let me hire the money—$2,000 at 6 per cent. interest.

"To-day I am called a successful business man. And I have father to thank for it. Those lessons in self-denial, self-respect and independence which he gave me put the manhood into me.

"Years afterward father told me it cost him the hardest struggle in his life to be so hard with his boy. But he felt it was the only course to make a man of me. Many a time we've laughed over that two-dollar board bill."—Youth's Companion.

THE LITTLE GIRL WITH A COMPANY FACE.

Once on a time, in a far-away place,
Lived a queer little girl with a company face,
And no one outside the family knew
Of her every-day face, or supposed she had two.
The change she could make with wondrous celerity,
For practice had lent her surprising dexterity,
But at last it chanced on an unlucky day
(Or lucky, perhaps, I would much better say),
To her dismal dismay and complete consternation,
She failed to effect the desired transformation;
And her caller, a teacher, Miss Agatha Mason,
Surprised her with half of her company face on,
And half of her every-day face peeping out,
Showing one grimy tear-track and half of a pout,
Contrasting amazingly with the sweet smile
That shone on her "company" side all the while.
The caller no sooner had hurried away
Than up to her room the girl flew with dismay;
And, after a night spent in solemn reflection
On the folly of features that can't bear inspection,
She came down to breakfast, and walked to her place,
Calm, sweet and serene, whilst her company face.
Thence forward she wore it, day out and day in,
Till you really might think 'twould be worn very thin;
But, strange to relate, it grew more bright and gay,
And her relatives think 'twas a red-letter day
When the greatly astonished Miss Agatha Mason
Surprised her with half of her company face on.

Making Odd Moments Pay.

A boy was employed to mind a lawyer's office, and he had a daily paper to amuse himself with. He began to study French, and at the little desk became a fluent reader and writer of the French language. He accomplished this by laying aside the newspaper, and taking up something not so amusing, but far more profitable. A coachman was often obliged to wait long hours while his mistress made calls. He determined to improve the time. He found a small volume containing the "Eclogues" of Virgil, but could not read it; so he purchased a Latin grammar. Day by day he studied this, and finally mastered its intricacies. His mistress came behind him one day, as he stood by the horses waiting for her, and asked him what he was so intently reading.

"Only a bit of Virgil, my lady?"

"What! do you read Latin?"

"A little, my lady."

She mentioned this to her husband, who insisted that David should have a teacher to instruct him. In a few years David became a learned man, and was for many years a useful and beloved minister of Scotland.—Nashville Advocate.

Building.

A young artist who was apt to be more enthusiastic in his talk than in his work, was, it is said, once introduced to Mr. Ruskin in a gallery of paintings, and called his attention to one of great beauty.

"Ah, if I could thus put a dream on canvas!" he sighed.

"Dream on canvas!" growled the critic. "It is the ten thousand touches with a brush you must learn to put on canvas that make your dream."

A story with a similar meaning is told of the French Abbe Roussard when he first saw the Cathedral of Cologne, which has been six centuries in building. His companion exclaimed, "If old Konrad, who designed it, can look down upon the finished work, it must be a joy to him even in heaven!"

"It is not of the one man who planned it that I think," said Roussard, "but of the thousands of men who have patiently carried out the plan, day after day, century after century, a little mortar here, a chip in the stone there."

More strength is required patiently and faithfully to carry out a plan than to conceive one, however great it may be. Every boy and girl who reads these lines has laid plans for life, great and beautiful, sometimes, as ever architect or artist dreamed. But when it comes to the ten thousand touches, to the stroke here and the bit of mortar there, day after day, year after year, they fail.

Don't persuade yourself that you are a noble, lovable woman, because your heart throbs and your eyes fill at a great thought in poetry or a great deed done by another. Don't believe yourself deserving of fame and honor because, on your graduation day, you plan a great book or a successful professional or business career. Your hope and intention are as far removed from the reality, as was the old archbishop's design of a church of God from the completed temple.

On the other hand, remember, for your encouragement, that your every honest word and deed is a stone laid on the temple you are building, even though no man's ear hears it, and no man's eye sees it.—Exchange.

Disposition.

"Why did X. never succeed in trade?" asked an American who returned to New York after many years' absence in Europe. "He had sufficient capital, a thorough knowledge of his business, and exceptional shrewdness and sagacity."

"He was sour and morose," was the reply. "He always suspected his employees of cheating him, and was discourteous and gruff to his customers. Hence no man ever put good-will or energy into work done for him, and his patrons went to shops where they were sure of civility."

One of the ablest strategists among American generals in the Civil War was held back from promotion, because, as was stated, his doubting, despondent temper discouraged his staff and his men.

Haydon, the historical painter, was possessed of undoubted genius, but he lived in misery and died by his own hand. "Poor Ben!" wrote one of his friends, the day after his death, "he had all the good gifts of life but hope and humility."

Of Leigh Hunt, on the contrary, it was said that as fast as his talent and kindly heart won him friends, his frivolous insincerity drove them away.

A wealthy manufacturer in one of our Middle States, who had had for many years control of thousands of men, said lately, "Nothing influences a man's career in life so much as his disposition. He may have capacity, knowledge, social position or money to back him at the start; but it is his disposition that will decide his place in the world at the end. Show me a man who is, according to popular prejudice, a victim to bad luck, and I will show you one who has some unfortunate, crooked twist of temperament that invites disaster. He is ill-tempered, or conceited, or trifling, or lacks enthusiasm."—Youth's Companion.

"He Didn't Laugh at Me."

"Mama," said Edith the other day, "I don't like boys. I'm glad I haven't a little brother."

"Why, Edith?"

"Because they always tease little girls so, and make them cry, and then they laugh at them."

"Do all the little boys laugh at you when you cry?"

"Yes, all but Robbie Shiver. I fell down at school the other day, and hurt my head, and they just laughed at me—all but Robbie, and he came and helped me up, and said he was very sorry I was hurt; and he didn't laugh a bit."

"That certainly was very nice of Robbie," said mama, as she gave Edith's cheek a kiss.

"Yes, mama, Robbie Shiver is the only boy that I really like, because he never laughs at me."

That was a great compliment to Robbie.

It shows that he is a gentle boy, and when he grows up he will be a gentle man, or gentleman. Little boys who are rude to their sisters or to other little girls, and who love to tease them and laugh at them, ought to think of this, and if they want to be gentlemen when they grow up, they ought to begin now by being gentle boys.—Selected.

OUR

Grand Combination Offer.

King's Improved Cotton.

Extra Early, Prolific, Long Limbs, 36 to 40 per cent. Lint.

This cotton gave the heaviest yield (1,370 pounds seed cotton) per acre in competition with 36 other varieties at the Mississippi Agricultural Experiment Station in 1890, and its good record has been fully maintained in all subsequent experiments.

This trial was absolutely impartial. Each cotton had exactly the same chances in every way. The result shows that, under similar conditions, with exactly the same treatment in every way, King's Improved Cotton will produce from 20 to 100 per cent. more cotton than the most noted varieties in the South.

Price: 25 CENTS PER PACKAGE.

SEEDS.

World's Fair Medal & Diploma

King's exhibit of Seeds and Garden Vegetables was awarded several premiums and a special diploma by Piedmont Exposition judges in 1891. It was also awarded a medal at the World's Fair, as being the best on exhibition there. The collection is a choice selection of garden vegetable seeds.

The collection contains twenty papers of seed.

25 CENTS PER PACKAGE.

KING'S IMPROVED CORN.

At the Georgia State Experiment Station this corn was tested with 15 kinds. The purpose of the trial was to find out which variety would make the largest quantity per acre, under same conditions.

Result: King's beat 15 other kinds, producing, with same chances identically, 50 per cent. more than some of the improved varieties.

This corn is a large white kind—makes excellent bread. Produces well on poor land.

Price: 25 CENTS PER PACKAGE.

Grand Combination Offer

1 package of King's Improved Cotton, 1 package of King's Improved Corn, and 20 papers of best Garden Seed, described above—all for 25 cents.

GRAVES—Died at his home, near Ringgold, in Bienville parish, La., on Jan. 25, 1894, B. B. GRAVES, aged seventy-two years eight months and twenty-five days.

The subject of this sketch was born in Copiah county, Miss., on April 30, 1821. At an early age he joined the Methodist Church, and remained a true and consistent member until death severed his connection with the church on earth. He loved to testify of the grace of God, and loved his Savior supremely. His constant care was to faithfully serve him. A faithful and devoted husband, a kind and indulgent father has been called to reap the promised reward, and many are left to mourn their loss. A true patron of Masonry, he practiced in his daily walks the grand principles of virtue taught by that ancient order, and ever endeavored to fully discharge all the duties he owed his God and his fellow-man. All who knew him respected and loved him, and when he was called away there was no one to speak him ill.

His illness was of six months' duration, but he bore all his sufferings without murmur or complaint, and patiently awaited the summons to depart. Medical skill and the kind ministrations of family and friends were of no avail; his work on earth was done, and the reward of heaven awaited him. He was conscious to the last, and calmly said good-by to family and friends, and without the fear of death "sank to sleep." His life was a long and useful one, and his death was an exemplification of the transition of a Christian's spirit from the "shades of mortal existence" to the "glorious sunlight of immortal day."

The "grace of God was sufficient for him," and may it enable us all to feel assured that

"When we leave this world of changes,
When we leave this world of care,
We may meet with missing loved ones,
In our Father's mansions fair."

W. W. McCOY.

CROOK—In memory of little MABEL CROOK, daughter of Dr. H. L. and Rosa Crook. She was born March 17, 1893, and died Aug. 9, 1893. The first-born, the joy of the hearts of the young father and mother, is taken away by the ruthless hand of death, and a vacancy is left in hearts and home that earthly joys can never fill.

Little Mabel left no character nor reputation behind her—only the sweet memory that for a short while she visited and blest the family with her presence. Many have lived and passed through the world as bright and shining lights, leaving behind them the precious memory of noble deeds done in the service of God and the interests of their race. Others have lived and passed through the world leading lives of infamy and shame, rendering themselves a disgrace to the mother that gave them birth, and a curse to the generation in which they lived. Others have pursued a more even course, leading lives of virtue and honor, making themselves a blessing to their families and friends, neither aspiring to greatness nor stooping to acts of infamy. But none of these things can be said of little Mabel. The angel of God came softly in, and his hand gently plucked the bud and carried it away before it had time to unfold its leaves and impart its fragrance to the breezes of the world.

"I take these little lambs," said he,
"And lay them in my breast;
Protection they shall find in me,
In me be ever blest."

Blessed child!

While no precious memory of noble deeds done is left behind, no trail of infamy and shame follows her to the grave, and, safe in the arms of Jesus, the tongue of the slanderer can never approach near enough to wipe its slime on her white robes of purity. Though we would have much preferred her remaining with us, believing that the Judge of all the earth must do right, and that what he does is for the best, with sad, yet trusting hearts, we resign her to the care of him who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Trusting in his promises, we believe that we shall find her again in the sweet by-and-by. LOUIS KENDALL.

YEATES—JOSEPH YEATES was born in Hertford, N. C., in September, 1815. When about twenty-one years of age he left his native place and came to Starkville, Miss. Here and in the vicinity he passed the greater part of his after life, and here, in the midst of family and friends, he died on Oct. 30, 1893.

Bro. Yeates had been a consistent member of the Methodist Church for many years. His religion was a matter of deeply grounded principle and of steady purpose. His outward life was in accord with his religious principles. Though quiet and undemonstrative in manner, he was yet loyal and firm in his devotion to his church, responding liberally to its demands as he was able, and serving it faithfully as a steward for a number of years. He was an appreciative hearer of the Word. He loved the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and had been a subscriber almost or quite from its first publication.

He was a good neighbor, a devoted husband, a kind father and a man faithful and true in all the relations of life. The law of kindness was in his heart and on his lips. Greatly esteemed, and beloved as one of the fathers of the community, there are many to sympathize with the wife and companion of his youth and his two sons, who in sorrow mourn his death. For a year or two past he seemed to consider himself as one whose life-work was about finished, and that there was little for him to do but patiently to await the end. To his pastor, Rev. J. W. Dorman, who visited him frequently during his last illness, he expressed himself as abiding in the principles of our holy religion, which he had so long professed. His hope was in God. There were no fears. He was ready.

The soft light of the Indian Summer rested upon the face of nature, and the crimson and gold of the Autumn time adorned the forest and the fields on that beautiful afternoon when we laid him to rest quietly in the Odd Fellows' Cemetery at Starkville. T. C. WIER.

JONES—Mr. R. H. JONES, Sr., was born in Campbell county, Va., March 4, 1817; came to Morehouse parish, La., in 1838, and has lived within its bounds until his death, Jan. 26, 1894. Bro. Jones was married three times, and was the father of thirteen children, all by his second wife. He leaves a wife, five sons and three daughters to mourn his loss. Also a number of friends and great-grandchildren. His name goes down to posterity without a stain. Having "learned of Jesus," and being of strong individuality, he was able to bar out the influences to which most of us are susceptible. His home was, in an eminent sense, hospitable. No one was ever turned away from his door. It was the preacher's home. How dear such a place is to the itinerant! No stiffness, but a quiet atmosphere of congeniality, where he could feel at home.

The last few years of his life were spent in almost constant pain; but these dreary days were lightened by glimpses of the "gleaming jasper walls of his eternal home," where the "weary are at rest." To one who was battling for so long with suffering, what indescribable sweetness there must be in rest—"sweet rest at home!"

He was buried with Masonic honors, as was his request. A good man has gone, and "his works do follow him." May God comfort the bereaved family, and bless this affliction to their eternal good! HIS PASTOR.

ALLEN—WILLIAM ALLEN was born in Louisiana, Sept. 12, 1821; moved to Hinds county, Miss., when quite young; was educated in Knoxville, Tenn. He was happily married to Mrs. Louisa Riley, Jan. 17, 1861. To them were born three children, all of whom died quite young. Bro. Allen died in great peace, Jan. 7, 1894.

I was his pastor four years and knew him intimately. I think he was one of the purest men I ever knew—refined, intelligent and unassuming. He lived religion. He loved the church and heartily supported her institutions. He loved his pastor, and with his excellent wife knew how to make him feel at home in their house. His death was a very triumphant one. He praised God and sent messages of love to friends and loved ones far and near, and to the members of the church to which he belonged. He said: "I am going to my Father's house, where there are many mansions." "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord!"

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

The important thing, if you would lead others, is to go that way yourself.

I, A. O. Hafflefinger, do say consumption can be cured by Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. My mother, years ago, contracting a terrible cough soon became unable to attend to her household duties. Prominent physicians pronounced it incurable consumption. We knew of Dr. Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and commenced giving it to her. Before two bottles had been taken an improvement was noticed, and by the time one dozen bottles had been consumed she was well, and has never been troubled since. We have recommended it to many and always have it in the house. For coughs, colds, croup, whooping-cough, asthma, bronchitis, it is without a rival. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as 50c. bottles.

No mineral water will produce the beneficial results that follow taking ONE or more of "BEECHAM'S PILLS" with a glass of water immediately upon arising in the morning.

Painless. Effectual. Covered with a tasteless, soluble coating.

Seeds! World's Fair Medal & Diploma.
My exhibit of Seeds and Garden Vegetables was awarded several Premiums and a Special Diploma by Piedmont Exposition Judges in 1891. Encouraged by this success, I sent a collection of seeds to the World's Fair, and was awarded Medal and Diploma for best collection there. This is high endorsement, for the seed met in competition those great seed houses of this country, but mine got there beautifully. I have had experience with the various seeds offered the farmers, and my judgment says the collection below is the best. The collection is a choice selection of Garden Vegetable Seeds, and is gotten up with the idea of establishing a seed business; 28 papers (extra large) of choice Vegetable Seed; 1 package containing 200 Annuals (Flower); 1 package of my Cotton, "King's Improved;" 1 package of my Corn, "King's Improved"—all postpaid for $1. ABSOLUTELY PURE

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

For nearly two weeks past the Senate has been busy considering Hawaiian affairs.

An important meeting of the Fifth District Levee Board will be held at Vicksburg, March 5.

Dr. F. I. Paradise preached his first sermon as the regular installed dean of Christ Church Cathedral, in this city, on Feb. 18

A cyclone struck Claiborne parish, La., on Feb. 17, traveling in a northeast direction, laying waste everything in its path. Two persons are said to have been killed.

The Rev. N. Keff Smith was formally installed as pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church, in this city, on Feb. 18. The services were opened by a hymn written by the new minister.

Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, in spite of her years, is said to be busy organizing a grand rally in favor of a woman's suffrage, which is to be held simultaneously all over the country.

A Southern Pacific train was derailed at Roscoe Station, Cal., on Feb. 16. Access was gained to the express car with dynamite, and all the available cash was taken from the safes by robbers.

Senator E. D. White, of Louisiana, was nominated by the President, on Feb. 19, to be associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. The Senate honored him with the distinction of instant confirmation without reference to the Judiciary Committee.

Bay St. Louis, Miss., was swept by a disastrous fire on Feb. 17, which demolished an entire square in the business portion. Twenty-four houses were burned down and the stocks were consumed. The loss exceeds one hundred thousand dollars. The insurance was one-third of that amount.

The Trans-Mississippi Convention, which met in San Francisco, passed a resolution memorializing Congress to enact legislation donating to the various States and Territories all arid lands within the boundaries susceptible to irrigation, prescribing such conditions as will secure the lands to actual settlers through purchase from the State.

The Tariff bill will have to pass through several dangerous stages before it can be adopted by the Senate. One of the first moves against it will no doubt be a motion to recommit, and unless concessions should be made to the Democratic senators who are dissatisfied with the Wilson bill, they are disposed to support the motion to send the bill back to the committee.

Upon receiving the memorial of the New Orleans Board of Trade, asking to have New Orleans included in the list of large cities to receive special and specific appropriations for their postoffices, the Louisiana representatives indorsed the same favorably and gave a copy to Mr. Henderson, chairman of the postoffice committee, and sent another copy to the Postmaster General.

The Shiloh Battle Field Association has prepared a memorial to Congress urging the purchase by the government of the battle field and its conversion into a national park. The memorial states that the association was organized April 10, 1893, on the occasion of the visit of the survivors of that battle to the field where the thirty-first anniversary exercises were celebrated. Its object is the preservation of the graves of thousands of heroes who died there.

Senators Daniel, Caffery, and White, of California, have given notice of speeches on the Hawaiian resolution for this week, and it is probable that other senators will speak upon the subject before next Saturday. There will be an effort to have the resolution disposed of during the week, as there will also be to get Senator Stewart's bond resolution off the calendar. There will probably be some speeches on this question also. Indeed the Senate will make the week as far as possible a cleaning-up week, so as to make way for the tariff debate, which will necessarily prevent the consideration of less important subjects when it shall once be begun.

FOREIGN.

Emperor William visited Prince Bismarck on last Monday, and was cordially received.

The German Reichstag has decided by a large majority in favor of the Australian ballot.

Yellow fever is on the increase at Rio de Janeiro. There were sixty deaths from that disease on Feb. 15.

The German ironclad Brandenburg, while undergoing a trial at Kiel, exploded a steam pipe. Forty-six men were killed and many were scalded.

The steamer Alert, while on a voyage from Port Albert to Melbourne, recently sank during a terrible gale, and of the fifteen men aboard only one reached land.

The cruiser San Francisco is the only ship left to protect American interests in the harbor of Rio de Janeiro. Admiral Benham has sent all the other ships away for fear of their being infected with yellow fever.

Dandruff is due to an enfeebled state of the skin. Hall's Hair Renewer quickens the nutritive functions of the skin, healing and preventing the formation of dandruff.

Slow Work.

Slow work. Yes, but not discouraging work. The grandest results are often achieved through slow and small beginnings. The revival seems to lag? Only a little boy or girl converted? Be not cast down. These may be the first little drops before the refreshing and abundant shower. Hope for the larger result. Carey's motto was a good one: "Expect great things of God; achieve great things for God." God never discredits the faithful work of his children. A gentleman once said to Mr. Moody when he was holding meetings in a little mission chapel, with scant results: "Rather slow work this, Mr. Moody." "So it is," he replied. "But if you want to kindle a fire, you must put together a few splinters, blow them into a blaze, and then you may pile on wood afterwards."

The work goes slowly? But it is going. God is in it. Only let the Holy Spirit enter the hearts of the people, and then the little flame will be kindled into a great blaze.—Selected.

PERIODICALS.

What is believed to be the last letter written by Lord Byron is published in Harper's Magazine, for February, in connection with the sketch of "Lord Byron and the Greek Patriots," by Rev. Dr. Henry Hayman, late headmaster of Rugby.

Table Talk, for February, caters in its menus, recipes and hints on all household topics to all tastes, and in the pages devoted to the 'Housekeeper's Inquiries" can be seen how this is appreciated, as the letters come from all parts of the country, asking help from this department, which is now edited by Helen Louise Johnson, director of the National Cooking School at Washington, D. C. Upon application to the Philadelphia office, a sample copy will be sent you, free.

Among the illustrated articles in The Popular Science Monthly, for February, will be one entitled, Notes from a Marine Biological Laboratory, by Prof. William S. Windle. It describes the laboratory of Johns Hopkins University, now located in Jamaica, with characteristic views of its surroundings. In another illustrated paper Dr. Sidney J. Hickson describes the Physical Conditions of the Deep Sea; and in still another James E. Humphrey tells Where Bananas Grow, showing by the pictures how the fruit is gathered and shipped.

The vast importance which the electrical interests of the present day have assumed may be inferred from the fact that a recent issue of The Electrical World, the leading weekly journal devoted to electricity, contains no less than 100 pages, and over 300 business announcements in its advertising colums, an amount of matter only exceeded by that of one other industrial or technical paper in the United States—the journal representing the iron interests. The Electrical World, which is an enterprising and handsomely illustrated weekly, is called "the most popular technical journal," and is said to have more subscribers among the general reading public than any other technical periodical. Subscription price, $3 a year; publication office, 41 Park Row, New York.

The Review of Missions, for February, comes out in good time with a rich table of contents. The leading article is a sketch of the Rev. J. H. Neesima, of Japan—an exceedingly interesting paper. Dr. W. R. Lambuth renders the church a real service in "Medical Missions in China." Other articles are as follows: "Has Progress Been Made in China?" by D. F. Kung; "One Great Need of the Church To-Day," by "Gilderoy;" "Miyoshi Taizo, Japan's Chief-Justice," by W. E. Towson; "American Bible Society in the South," by G. S. Savage; "The Work of the American Board in Africa," by Judson Smith. Besides these articles there are more than thirty pages of editorial and miscellaneous matter of great interest to those who are interested in missionary matters. All who desire to keep posted on the great subject of missions should subscribe for this excellent magazine.

The "American Sabbath," for February, the organ of the American Sabbath Union, Rev. Geo. S. Mott, D. D., pres.; Rev. J. H. Knowles, D. D., general secretary, is a valuable number. It contains the proceedings of the late anniversary of the union held in New York City, together with the addresses on various aspects of the Sabbath question, especially on the "Sunday Secular Newspaper," by Drs. C. L. Thompson, T. L. Cuyler, C. H. Payne, A. H. Plumb, D. J. Burrell, J. M. King, T. A. Fernley, and others. The American Sabbath Union, 203 Broadway, New York, will send a copy to any address on receipt of ten cents in stamps. A special price will be made to pastors, churches, and Sabbath associations desiring literature for distribution against the Sunday secular newspaper.

The Preacher's Magazine, for February, is on our table. The leading sermon of this number is by Dr. Joseph Parker, and he entitles it "Sons of Eli, Yet Sons of Belial." The Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, who so ably edits the magazine, contributes another chapter on "Moses: His Life and Its Lessons," and takes up "From Sinai to the Waters of Meribah." Dr. Robt. A. Watson concludes in this number his papers on "The Apostolic Churches: Their Doctrine and Fellowship." Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler furnishes his address on "The Sunday Secular Newspaper," and Dr. D. A. Long, a funeral address which he recently delivered. The Homilетics are most excellent. Among the contributors we notice Dr. Alexander Maclaren, Revs. J. Reid Howatt, Arthur E. Gregory, John Edwards, and several other distinguished divines. Rev. A. F. W. Ingraham furnished a most readable paper entitled "Why Do We Call the Bible Inspired?" Among the other departments of this magazine are "Notes on the International Sunday-school Lessons," "Outline Addresses on the Golden Texts," and notes and illustrations. The magazine is published at $1.50 per year, single copies 15 cts., and Wilbur B. Ketcham, 2 Cooper Union, New York, is the publisher.

China and the Chinese form the subjects of several interesting and able articles in the Missionary Review of the World, for February. The origin, philosophy, and practices of their "Ancestral Worship" is discussed by Rev. P. W. Pitcher, of Amoy, China. Dr. A. P. Happer gives an account of the worship of Heaven by the Chinese Emperor at the time of the winter solstice. It is a ceremony to which foreigners are not admitted. The editor-in-chief tells in his characteristically forcible and striking way of the country, customs, religions, and missionary work of China. There are also articles on the "Ainos," and on Bible translation in that country. An able paper on the "Caste Women of India" comes from the pen of Mrs. Armstrong, of Burmah. She discusses the position of woman in that country, and the mighty influence she has over the men in spite of her despised position. Rev. Joslah Tyler, of South Africa, tells the story of "Rhoma, the Enlightened African Chief," of whom every traveler speaks in terms of greatest admiration. "Christian Work in Polynesia," is fully narrated by the late Robt. Steel, D. D., of Australia. In the International Department, "Some Missionary Treaty Rights" are discussed by Dr. Gracey, in reference to the relation of missionaries to the governments of China, Japan, Turkey, and other countries, and F. D. Phinney, of Burmah, takes up the problem of "Education and Missions," strongly advocating schools where the Bible is daily taught. Published monthly by Funk & Wagnalls Company, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York, at $2 a year.

The Week of Prayer, Feb. 6-11, as appointed by the Central Committee, was held in Rayne Memorial Church, in this city, at 1:30 P. M. each day. The program as published was carried out, and papers read on the several topics named by members of each auxiliary. All of the pastors of the Methodist Churches attended the meetings and gave us hearty co-operation. Mrs. E. E. Wiley, president of the General Society, was with us, whose earnest talks will long be remembered.

Mrs. C. W. Carter,
Recording Secretary.

Correction.

Mr. Editor: Please allow me to correct the caption of my article published in the Advocate of Feb. 15. I really did not intend to call attention to omissions in the Minutes of the North Mississippi Conference, for I have not seen a copy of the Minutes of that Conference. I do not know how the word "North" slipped in, whether by my mistake or by the mistake of some one else; but it is a mistake that needs correction. I meant to call attention to important omissions in the Minutes of the Mississippi Conference. D. G. W. Ellis.

An Appeal to the Young People of Mississippi.

Dear Young Friends: Millsaps College needs a large hall for young men of limited means. We must build it. The hall is a necessity. Would it not be a handsome work for the young Mississippians to furnish the agent with money to build this hall? If we can get it the work right, we can do it. I want the young Methodists of Mississippi to send me five thousand dollars. Let us go to work in earnest. Let the young people from five to twenty-one years of age send me from fifty cents to one dollar each. Let every church and community be represented. The name and amount will appear in the New Orleans Christian Advocate. May our Father inspire your hearts, dear young friends, to help us build this hall! Let me hear at once from you. Your friend,

I. W. Cooper.

A LITTLE WHILE.

BY REV. H. B. WARDWELL.

A little while, and then the still night cometh—
The voiceless night that comes alike to all,
When we arrive where death's swift river runneth,
To bear us onward through the Lethean thrall.

A little while, and then the last fond token
Of love's devotion, with the parting breath.
Pass a few days, and then the farewell spoken,
And silence seals the pallid lips of death.

A little while, and Winter's stormy pinion
Above our snow-wrapped graves shall wildly beat;
Of Summer roses spring from death's dominion,
And leaf-robed branches guard our calm retreat.

A little while, and then we leave forever
The joys of earth, its sorrows and its tears,
The friends that wait this side the silent river,
Until we meet them in the eternal years.

A little while, and then the journey endeth;
Life's evening shadows gather round our way,
While the day lasts, ere night with darkness blendeth,
O let us work, the Savior's voice obey!

A little while, and then the morning breaketh;
Celestial splendors on our vision rise,
Where the "new song" with angel anthem waketh,
Where we may join the triumphs of the skies.

The Sunday Secular Newspaper.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D. D.

The whole question of Sabbath observance in our beloved country is one that ought to command crowded audiences and the attention of God's people over the entire land—ought, ought to command the attention of the friends of the Sabbath, those who believe in its authority and the priceless benefits it affords; and to make a stand against the Sunday secular press is their solemn and imperative duty.

Now, this is not a topic for rhetorical effervescence or violent utterances; it is a question to be looked upon calmly and soberly in view of every side of it.

I am not an enemy of the daily press. On the contrary, I yield to no man in gratitude for the services rendered to the cause of enlightenment and morality—by the best public journals in our land. But, as a friend of our press, I protest against Sabbath issues; and, as a friend of our national welfare, I protest against Sabbath issues. I hold that the publication of Sunday morning newspapers is a desecration of the Sabbath, God's Sabbath, the people's Sabbath. I know the taunt is thrown into the face of the Sabbatarians all the time: "You refuse to buy a Sunday morning newspaper, and you buy a Monday's issue. One is made up for the Sunday, and one is made up on the Sunday, and you are really sustaining Sabbath labor," and to all that sophistry I have this answer to make. I answer in the words of the greatest editor this country ever produced, Horace Greeley. Said he: "Six newspapers every week require six days of labor; seven newspapers every week require seven days of labor." That is a sufficient answer. His custom was—or the custom of the Tribune when he made that remark—to work up to midnight on Saturday, and to begin work the next night at midnight, and Monday morning there came out a fully equipped paper, generally the most effective of all six issues of the week; and at that time that was the general custom. It ought to be the custom now; and there is no reason why it should have ever been changed. Now the custom prevails of making up a paper for Sunday morning, an enormous blanket sheet; and the Monday morning paper requires an immense amount of labor on Sunday by the employees, by the editors and type-setters. And Sunday morning we have the excursion trains bearing the sheets over all the land, and the vendors of these sheets going through all the streets of all our large towns and selling their papers, and it involves desecration of the Sabbath in that direction for money purposes. Suppose one of the managers of one of our New York dailies comes to me and says, "You are ruining my business and seeking to curtail my profits, and opposing my method of making money." I would say: "Your neighbors, the hatters, the saddlers, the boot-makers, the merchant—all those men earn their daily bread in six days of the week, and God's law and the law of the land require their closing on the Sabbath day. Why should you do differently? You begin every Sabbath morning with the carrying on of your business in the streets and all the land over."

Daniel Webster said in a murder trial once, "It was a cool, calculating, money-making murder; the weighing out of so many pieces of silver against so many ounces of gold." And to editors I should say, "Your Sabbath morning press is a cool, calculating, money-making scheme; the weighing out of so many pieces of silver against the great moral interests of the public."

In the next place, there is no need of it. When I came to New York, forty years ago, there were weekly and Sunday newspapers hawked about the streets, made up of sporting news, and hawked sometimes during the church hour near the church doors. No respectable person would be seen with one of those papers in his hands. They were not newspapers. This city got on perfectly well without the issue of a journal on the Lord's day. Go to London, the business centre of the civilized world. Do the London dailies issue a Sunday morning edition? No. They don't need it. And I believe an attempt was made by one of our countrymen, an attempt to issue there a Sunday morning paper, and it was a failure. Press and pulpit thundered it out of existence. Dailies are not issued Sunday morning in London. They don't need them. What do we need of them? There is no necessity for it, and no legitimate reason can be given for it, and as a proof that such issues are not needed, I could point—since these dear brothers from Philadelphia have just preceded me—to their own city. I can show you there a great daily journal conducted on two principles: First. "Not a single line of impure matter or sensationalism shall desecrate these columns." Second. "This paper shall never be issued on God's holy day through the year." What is the result? Do those who read six days of the week George W. Childs' Daily Ledger ask for a Sunday issue? No. Do those who take that glorious, clean, honest paper (that is met with the heartiest applause among the people), do they need it financially? Ask George W. Childs.

It is to-day the most profitable paper published on this continent. I would rather, as a pecuniary speculation, have 100 shares in the Philadelphia Ledger than in any other journal published in the United States of America. Ah, fellow-Christians, it does pay to serve Him who is the best paymaster in the universe! And when I think of the career of the Ledger, and its cleanliness and its Sabbath observance, and when I think of the most crowded hotel in the country, that never allows a bottle of wine on its table, or a horse to be harnessed on Sunday, or a boat to be launched on Lake Mohonk in the Summer, I say there are object-lessons to you, and I couple the two together.

Now, then, there is another thing to it—a reason, that it should not be, and that is stronger yet. We not only don't want it, but there is a good reason why we should be delivered from it. You know perfectly well that a number of Sabbath morning papers do make many of their columns mere sewers for scandal and social filth, and rely for their circulation, to a considerable degree, in circulating through the community what of necessity is most vile in its social and moral influence. Examination into some of the Sunday morning papers will prove that they are public demoralizers in themselves on every day. How much more so on Sundays! I don't say that all are; but take the very best, cleanest Sabbath morning papers. Every Sunday they have sporting news and speculating affairs of various kinds—granting there may be no impurities. Such topics are the very thing we should not have on the Sabbath. It is pretended that those papers that are issued only six days in the week would not get support. Those who bake their daily bread in such a hot oven should have one day's rest, and the papers that contain articles in regard to commerce and sporting and politics ought to be looked out on Sunday. It is that one blessed day that God ordained when men can turn away from business and throw off all care and sit down and think and worship and let the great thoughts of eternity come in for a time into the soul.

The last time I visited the greatest man on the globe now living (for no one disputes he is the most extraordinary man of this age), the last time I visited Gladstone at his house, he told me the secret of his long life. He said to me that he got sound sleep every night, and he added, "Amid all the pressure of public cares, I thank God for the Sabbath, with its rest for the body and the soul." These golden words should be written up in every school-house and place of business, and in every legislative chamber. There is the testimony of a man who is a power, and who confesses that God's Sabbath has enabled him to weather out eighty-four years. When Lord Castlereagh committed suicide, Wilberforce said: "Poor Castlereagh broken down! He never had any Sabbath!" There is a contrast in these two cases of men under the same pressure. This world does not need its secular press every Lord's day morning. It needs to be delivered from it. I hardly know one agent that militates so much against worship, when God's house is open, as the Sunday secular press. I don't think Bro. Moody is very far out of the way when he says, "The single influence that tends most against evangelical religion is the Sabbath morning secular press." Think of it! Only a little time to throw off the harness—only a little time at best to give to preparations, not only for life's best duties, but for another world, and then to have a Sunday morning snowed under—yes, snowed under—with twenty-four, thirty, forty pages of secularity, even if it is not indecent secularity! Sometimes I think some of our ministers have to go to work and shovel out—yes, shovel out—too many members of their churches from under that avalanche of Sunday morning secularity; and when I see the lads going through the streets selling these papers, I say, 'Every one of those papers will monopolize many hours for their perusal." They are absolute barriers against the attendance in God's house for worship.

When I was up at Richfield Springs, just as the church bells began to ring, the locomotive bell began to ring. That meant that the newspapers were coming in. In less than ten minutes the streets were filled with boys throwing out right and left these immense blanket sheets from New York. It was a most terrible interruption or desecration coming just at that hour. People waited on the piazzas of the hotel to look over the papers, largely to spend the day over them. The Sabbath breakers would come in on that day with their merchandise, disturbing the sanctity of God's day and the quiet of the people. That is what is being repeated all over the land.

I believe the Sabbath issues of the secular press have lowered the tone of American journalism. You can not pursue mammon in defiance of God's holy law without its deteriorating influence. I believe that the best that could happen to-morrow for the greatest daily would be to have Sunday laws or influence get hold of it and put a stop to Sunday issues, and so give the people their Sabbath, give God his Sabbath, give people their own rest, and to desist from this desecration of the Sabbath. I believe it would elevate the tone of journalism, and I don't believe any money made in defiance of God's law makes the richer any paper, people, or any community.

The greatest reason of all why these Sunday editions should not be issued is that the life of this nation depends upon the public conscience. The only hope for our republic is in a Bible conscience. I don't care who sits in the White House in Washington in comparison with who sits at the fireside and behind the ballot-box and in the public schools. It is not going to be in the power of any political party which ever existed, or any demagogue, however dangerous, to disturb this nation's peace and prosperity. What a terrible sacrifice it is that a nation makes when it begins to calculate how far it can trample down God's law, his authority, his work, and his words, for the furtherance of making money, or of any worldly affairs! The nations that have lived the longest have observed the Sabbath.—Exchange.

Denominational Journalism.

Multitudes neither know nor feel their obligations to those religious papers which all through the life of the church, through self-denial and the expenditure of intellectual force and money, have carried her through all her trials, directed her in danger, have been eyes in darkness, strength in weakness, and a defense when assailed. They have stood sentinels, warning of danger, and when she has been defeated, have been the first to gather her shattered forces together for future contests. The fact is indisputable that the wisdom of the church becomes practical through these mediums. These papers go on week by week in their duties, have no vacations, not much appreciation, and often an unreasonable amount of fault-finding. Their conductors have no opportunities of getting better salaries; they are missionaries desiring to be fed by the crumbs that fall from the hands of the thoughtful and appreciative. They often lose money by the thousands, but no cries go up in behalf of the newspaper sufferers. No special collections are made for them; no famine among them ever drew a tear. They are the burden-bearers, ecclesiastical asses with panniers across their backs, into which the churches put their loads. Meetings of assemblies, Conferences, classes and convocations are advertised gratis, and special meetings which often concern but a few, and about which multitudes of paying subscribers rave, calling it "dead wood," "dull trash," etc.

This has been the habit, and to break the habit of overloading newspaper editors with lumber which costs the publisher a good round sum a thousand cents to set up, besides paper, ink, press work, postage, all for nothing, would be regarded a sin. But this might be endured if the church, demanding so much, felt any sense of obligation to return these favors in seeing that papers which exist alone for the church are circulated. But churches expect these favors all the time from their own paper, when the members oftentimes take another paper into the family. They would quite as soon take one of some independent order which has never spent a farthing to sustain the church in her perils, or to help her in her denominational enterprises. The editors and publishers of the denominational journals, they think, ought to continue to do this because they always have done so. We are not objecting to independent or undenominational papers; they may be taken with profit when the obligation to those on which the church is dependent is sustained. But how many notices of the meetings of ecclesiastical bodies do they publish for nothing? How many columns of Minutes do they carry for nothing? Nor do we blame them for this; they have no special obligations to do the work of any particular church.

Some of the older papers have carried the burdens of the church in her poverty. They have shared their profits with her all along; they have grown in years, but not in wealth. The same amount in capital and brain in other spheres would have brought large profits in the same time. But the church is losing by weakening or neglecting her forts. It may do in prosperity; adversity will come again, and then she will need defense, but she will lose if her fortresses are neglected: The secular papers are constantly crowding the religious journals of the church for place, and granting that they may be as good for the families who read them—which is not true—how much defense has the church received in her perils from the secular papers? In the contests between sound doctrine and heresy they have been almost universally against orthodox teachings and practices. In the contests concerning church order and discipline, the secular papers have universally been with the offenders in their efforts to destroy the church.

Then, again, where do the attacks on Christianity come from? Through the secular press. Where the sneers and assaults at the ministry? Where the constant assailment that the church is effete or dying? Where the laudations of infidelity and atheism and attacks on the Word of Life? But for the neglected, half-supported church papers, compelled often to make bricks without straw, where would the defense of Christian principles and hopes of eternal life come from? No policy is so suicidal.

The churches of the land need, before all things, to build up their broken fortifications, their dismantled fortresses. They need to increase the influences of the organs of their communication at home, and then they can command the resources of knowledge, money and men. We are not attacking secular papers in their place and time, nor are we regretting or undervaluing any improvement in their moral or religious tone, but calling attention of the church people of every kind to the amazing folly and short-sightedness of not supporting first their means of defense, their means of diffusion of Christian principle, their means of knowledge of Christian necessities and from Christian standpoints. If the religious papers of the church at large perish, how long will the secular papers serve or even respect the Lazarus that lies at their doors desiring to be fed as beggars where they might have reigned as princes? This article is a plea for a support to religious journalism, which will keep the church of Christ in this stand, independent, progressive, defensive, educational, and aggressive. "If the foundations be removed, what can the righteous do?"—Presbyterian.

The Blight of Pessimism.

A minister of this city, in a conversation quite recently, confessed to a personal experience which may be of value to others to relate. He had thought upon certain unsatisfactory features of his environment, especially upon the conviction that his financial support was not what it should be, until it preyed upon his mind night and day. Finally he awoke to the realization that long brooding upon this subject had given such pessimistic turn to his thinking and his feeling that he was becoming unfitted for successful work. He resolved to overcome this misanthropic tendency which was growing into a habit. He started in with the determination that instead of brooding on the discouraging features of his work, he would follow Paul's advice, "Whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." He did so. To his surprise the things that had discouraged him began to disappear. His people began to show an increased interest in church work, and supported him more heartily in every church enterprise. Accessions to the church ranks were increased. His own salary was advanced, and an aggressive and progressive spirit took possession of his church.

This experience emphasizes a truth that not only pastors, but everyone should keep in mind. The man who yields to the disposition to dwell on discouraging phases of things, who gives way to hopeless despondency, is assisting to propagate the very condition of things that he deplores.

There is no intellectual vice more destructive than this tendency to pessimistic view. There is a subtle danger in it, because it appeals to the innate vanity of human nature. It indirectly flatters the one who yields himself to it with the thought that he is better than his environment, and superior to his associates. The ability, as he thinks, to point out the defects of the system that he criticises, or the shortcomings of his associates, covertly suggests his own personal superiority. The one who indulges habitually in it is lulled into a sense of self-satisfaction that is likely to stupefy him to the discernment of those deficiencies in which he himself is most needful of self-examination and improvement.

But the worst effect of pessimism is the deadening power that it exerts on high endeavor. It cuts the nerve of noble effort. It disqualifies for constructive work and enthusiastic achievement. It relaxes the tension of high and hopeful purpose. The victim of it sinks into cynical indifference to the aims that inspire others. Nil Admirari becomes his watchword. The only part which he takes in the united efforts which men about him make for the redemption of society and of men is the part of the critic and the cynic. He has an eye alert only for small things and mean motives. He is blind to the greater purposes which inspire most of the combined efforts of men, and consequently is not qualified to assist in their attainment. He is a negative quantity in all social endeavor.

An unfortunate feature of it, too, is that it is a vice to which fine intellects are unusually open. The mind in which the perceptive and reflective powers overbalance the active and emotional faculties is especially liable to this danger. It is easy for such a mind to discern defects. The ability to discover defects, as we have shown, ministers in a way to its vanity. The preponderance of the reflective over the active powers predisposes it to inaction and inertia. Thus the very superiority of the intellectual furniture of such a mind causes it to become an easy victim to this soul-destroying vice.

Of course, we do not intend to underestimate the value of legitimate criticism. There is such a thing as a healthy, proper, and normal discernment of defects. Such a discernment must always be the true basis for improvement and progress. Without such a criticism to guide, all effort at advancement is futile, and enthusiasm becomes a will-o'-the-wisp.

But this spirit of proper criticism always works subordinately to a higher purpose. It is only a means to a nobler end. It is clear perception working under the lead of enthusiastic hope. Such a criticism destroys only that it may build anew on truer and broader foundations. Faith, hope and love are always in the ascendant in a rightly ordered mind. If it prunes away excrescences, it is in order that growth may be more healthful and perfect. It never indulges in cynicism or pessimistic views simply from the pleasure it gets in the exercise. It never allows the delight of looking for defects to eclipse the joy of laboring for hopeful constructive purpose. Its criticisms only feed enthusiasm instead of deadening effort and destroying hope. It labors in an atmosphere of love and joy, and not in a miasma of cynical despair.

Such being the true view of a rightly ordered mind, it follows that there is but one excuse for dwelling upon defects and upon depressing views of our environment, and that is that these defects are real, and that we are prompted to consider them because of the stronger desire to lead to better things. Any man who yields to the desire to take dark and despondent views of his surroundings without being conscious of a nobler purpose for which he works, and of the actual correspondence of his views to realities, is simply working to his own spiritual suicide. Not only so, but he is unfitting himself to be of any service to his fellow-men. Like the Upas tree, his deadly influence extends to all within his reach. The fountains of spiritual life are dried up wherever his influence reaches.—Methodist Recorder.

Scarritt Bible and Training-School.

A CARD FROM THE BOARD OF MANAGERS.

In appreciation of the fact that straitened finances are troubling Church and Sects so that but few are exempt from their pressure, the Board of Managers of the Scarritt Bible and Training-school, although authorized by the Woman's Board of Missions last June, have, by unanimous vote, decided not to ask for a general observance of Easter Sunday this year, as has been our custom for several successive years.

This must not be taken as an indication that the school does not stand in need of aid. On the contrary, the financial stringency has lessened its income without reducing its expenses. But gratefully recognizing our indebtedness to our church for phenomenal liberality in the past, and being in touch with her present depleted condition, we wish to relieve burdened societies and churches from obligation to observe the day in our interest, remembering, as we do, the great need of our General Board, the claims of our Parsonage and Home Mission workers, the anxieties of our pastors and those in authority in the church, and the distressing decrease in the collections of our Woman's Missionary Society. In view of their great demands, we waive our claim on Easter Sunday, and will not publish Easter programs for distribution, that we may leave the church and the friends of the school free to follow their individual promptings. Some societies have already made arrangement for completing at that time their lectureship and scholarship funds, and hastening the endowment of the Belle Bennett chair, for which they have long been planning.

Our action imposes no restraint whatever on any society or church that desires or has planned to hold a service. Offerings thus gathered from societies and individuals will be the more highly prized, inasmuch as they will, indeed, be "free-will offerings."

CONSECRATION.

Take my life, and let it be
Consecrated, Lord, to thee;
Take my moments and my days,
Let them flow in endless praise.

Take my hands, and let them move
At the impulse of thy love;
Take my feet, and let them be
Swift and beautiful for thee.

Take my voice, and let me sing
Always, only for my King;
Take my lips, and let them be
Filled with messages for thee.

Take my silver and my gold,
Not a mite would I withhold;
Take my intellect, and use
Every power as thou shalt choose.

Take my will, and make it thine,
It shall be no longer mine;
Take my heart, it is thine own,
It shall be thy royal throne.

Take my love; my Lord, I pour
At thy feet its treasure store;
Take myself, and I will be,
Ever, only, all for thee.

APPROPRIATIONS AND PAYMENTS TO MISSIONS OF MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE FOR 1893.

Since the annual outcry for correction of our printed Minutes has already set up, I will subjoin the figures which were submitted in open Conference by our statistical secretary and laid on the table of the Conference secretary with other reports of the Board for publication in the Minutes. Bro. Andrews assures me that the omission was not intentional. He thought as these figures almost all appeared elsewhere it were useless and contrary to custom to print them. I submit only those figures which do not appear in the printed Minutes, remarking in passing that taking all our missions together the per cent. of increase in membership and finances is larger than the average of the whole Conference. The charge which made the finest exhibit of proportionate increase was a mission (Springfield cir.) with a very small appropriation. This refutes oft-repeated criticism that our weak men are put on missions, and also that which claims that nothing but strongly aided missions can accomplish much good. The Board is trying to do the best it knows how with the advice of the presiding elders and Bishops, and is not ashamed of the results. We want all the light to be had on this important question. Only, brethren, please give it kindly, not critically. A private letter to one of the officers would sometimes secure the end desired without the publication of imaginary grievances.

Of this we were able to pay just seventy cents on each, though all had been well earned.

PRACTICAL APPLICATION.

Let all the brethren proceed to collect, at least, half of their assessments for domestic missions and forward immediately to the treasurer, Dr. T. S. West, at Jackson, Miss. He is authorized to pay quarterly half of what has been earned on the presentation of a report of faithful work being done by the missionary, and the certificate thereto of his presiding elder. No other payment will be considered at our next Conference. The balance of assessment ought to be secured at once in subscriptions more than covering the sum asked. These brethren deserve every cent appropriated this year.

Respectfully submitted,

J. P. DRAKE,
Secretary.

Financial Report of the Columbus District, North Mississippi Conference.

I feel that it is due the Columbus district to call attention to the following mistake of our Minutes in the "Financial Report" of the district. Our secretary has it: "Assessed for the preachers in charge, $8,730; paid $6,840.10." When it should be: "Assessed, $8,730; paid, $7,839 90"—a mistake of nearly $1,000. We do not intend this as a reflection upon our faithful and efficient secretary, for mistakes will occur.

The Evolutionist's Creed.

I believe in the chaotic nebula, self-existent evolver of heaven and earth, and in the differentiation of its original homogeneous mass, its first begotten product, which was self-formed into separate worlds, divided into land and water, self-organized into plants and animals, reproduced in like species, further developed into higher orders, and finally refined, rationalized and perfected in man. He descended from the monkey, ascended to the philosopher, and sitteth down in rites and customs of civilization under the laws of a developing sociology. From thence he shall come again, by the disintegration of the culminated heterogeneousness, back to the original homogeneousness of chaos. I believe in the wholly unknowable absolute, the wholly unorthodox church, the disunion of saints, the survival of the fittest, the persistence of force, the dispersion of the body, and in death everlasting.

ANON.

Letter from British Honduras.

MR. EDITOR: Good morning, sir. I come to salute you as the new editor, and, though late, it is better than never. Perhaps I may get into the waste-basket. If so, I do not doubt that I would be in good company. What a host of good-meaning people are to be met there! And how charitable they are to each other! Not a murmur, not a word of complaint one of another! Silence supreme! Nothing to do but to lie there and gaze at the editor's big feet! If your orders were not so strict, we might get up a conversation similar to this:

"Good brother, how did you get here?"

"Well, I am not a grammarian, and the editor is."

"And you, my brother?"

"Oh, I used some personalities, and that appears to be against the rules!"

"And you, my good sister?"

"Why, my postscript was too long."

"And you, brother, just over there?"

"Well, when I shot, I aimed a little too low."

Mr. Editor, if I should try to claim kin to you, would you be offended? I think you loomed up some years ago somewhere about Natchez, Miss. If you are a Mississippian, so am I. This would make us sons of that grand old State, and in that sense we would be brothers. My father was a member of that noble body of men, the Mississippi Conference, and I have always considered it as my Conference. In this sense we are brothers. I have always been pained to see the venerable old soldiers of that noble army lay down their armor and fall asleep, and, on the other hand, have watched with pleasure and pride the young men, who are strong, come forth and buckle on the helmet and shield, ready for the fight. And they have, no doubt, been formidable foes to Satan in his walks to and fro in the earth.

Now, Mr. Editor, I once read somewhere that the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE office was a regular Bishop factory. So, perhaps, when a man gets into the ADVOCATE sanctum, it is well for him to become familiar with the presiding business. And, by the way, Bishop-making time is soon coming around. Do you think if they should put you up for a target next May, you could dodge the load, as the young Nimrod said about the squirrel he shot at? [Like Nehemiah, we are "doing a great work, and can not come down."—EDITOR.]

I was just trying to think how many visits the old ADVOCATE has made to our house since I can remember. It is something like thirteen hundred. I remember one time when our senior Bishop was editor, and I was just beginning to take an interest in reading the ADVOCATE, that we missed getting a number, and I felt the loss very much. Soon afterward I saw a letter from my father in the paper, stating that from pressing need he could not spare so much as a dollar to renew his subscription. This seemed to touch the heart of the good editor, who, in a foot note, stated that as long as he was able he would send the ADVOCATE to as worthy a brother.

After we came to this country the old ADVOCATE did not cease to visit us, and it was this faithful messenger that brought the sad news, as my father lay on his death-bed and was scarcely able to understand what I was reading to him, of the death of his faithful, true, and long-tried friend and brother, H. H. Montgomery, of the Mississippi Conference. It reminded me of David's beautiful description of the life and death of Saul and Jonathan.

We have a small church in this neighborhood, with a comfortable parsonage on the same lot, but no preacher. Last July our pastor had to leave here to take charge of the Wesleyan High School in Belize, and the appointment has been without a preacher since. As there are several places in the district without preachers, we can not expect to be supplied in preference to the rest.

The district meeting for this year was to take place a week or so ago, but we haven't heard whether we are to have a preacher or not for this year.

The Wesleyan Church of England supplies missionaries to this country, but several ministers have died lately, and others have returned home, which leaves the district short of men.

JAY B. COPELAND.

Toledo, British Honduras, Feb. 12, 1894.

Quite Warm.

"Yes, too hot to go to church," was the decided exclamation of Mrs. Doolittle the other Sunday. Oh, but she went up town on Monday to attend a fire sale of goods, and, indeed, the crowd was so great and the weather so hot that several ladies well-nigh died before they could get relief; but Mrs. Doolittle crowded in and stood for two hours, waiting to get a chance to buy two smoked-up, soiled handkerchiefs for five cents apiece, which formerly were sold for fifteen cents, and, indeed, she came home and made three calls among her neighbors, to tell them how cheap things are selling up at the fire sale.—Christian World.

The New Orleans Seamen's Bethel.

The New Orleans Seamen's Bethel is an institution in which all Christian people are interested. It is the only place in the greatest Southern seaport where the sailors of all nations and creeds may find a hearty Christian welcome. If it were to be abandoned or weakened in its great work, it would be a sad blow to the cause of Christ among the seamen. Thank God! there is no immediate prospect of its wide-open doors being closed, but, like all similar, unendowed institutions depending on the voluntary gifts of charitable people for their support, it has felt the depressing effects of the financial stringency of the times. The subscription list has fallen off alarmingly, and we are forced to appeal to those outside of our city who are interested in the souls of seafaring men for assistance to tide over our present difficulties. We have retrenched in every possible way; but still there is a prospect of a deficit. Our property is all free of debt, and we are thoroughly equipped for the work. Can we not count on the aid of our friends in this crisis? All gifts, however small, which may be sent to the undersigned, will be gratefully acknowledged. To those who may be desirous of investigating our work before contributing we will gladly mail reports, etc. Address

A Filthy Mess

The following from the Wesleyan Christian Advocate is timely, and ought to be read by every Christian parent in this country:

On the first page of a leading Georgia daily the bill of fare for the families who take it is:

1. "Mob violence in Kansas"—three men, among them father and son, hanged for murder by a mob.

2. "A white Northern lady stuck on a Memphis coon preacher."

3. "A young wife arrested, charged with murdering her husband."

4. "Several men quarrel in a Texas bagnio, which ended in a tragedy"—two men shot by a prominent young man (he was in the bagnio), who belonged to one of the oldest families in Texas, and a merchant.

5. "A husband shot his wife dead, and then himself."

6. "Jealous of his wife—a farmer took his own life to end his earthly career."

7. "Negro shot, and then burned."

8. "Held up by robbers."

9. And lastly, a chapter on "Corbett and Mitchell."

This is only the first page, and yet a Methodist writes: "The Wesleyan costs too much. I can get a large weekly paper for one dollar per year, and can select from it much good reading matter." Does this old gentleman not know that from the same paper his boys and girls are reading the sensational accounts of all these things, and worse? The society columns, the manner of dressing, the theaters, the elaborate history of distinguished liquor sellers, and a hundred other things will, when read by the children of the old fellow, develop such tastes and passions as will cost him 100 per cent. more than his own church paper, for which he pays the enormous price of four cents a week, or two dollars a year! He ought to go out and kick himself. We have given the news of one day in this daily paper. What will the weekly be when all such news, the accumulation of a week, are thrown into it? But it is one dollar a year! And their church organ, with its original matter, fighting against sins of every kind, bravely standing in defense of the families of our land, is laid aside by so-called Methodists because it costs two dollars a year!

Shingling His Own Roof.

Chaplain McCabe tells the story of a drinking man who, being in a saloon late at night, heard the wife of the saloon keeper say to her husband, "Send that fellow home; it is late." "No, never mind," replied her husband, "he is shingling our house for us." This idea lodged in the mind of the drunkard, and he did not return to the saloon for six months. When passing the saloon keeper in the street, the latter said, "Why don't you come around to my place any more?" "Thank you for your kind hospitality," replied the former victim, "I have been shingling my own roof lately." The industrial aspect of the temperance reform is embodied in this illustration.—Temperance Advocate.

Work is the best cure for worry. The busy soul does not whine and pine. The water of the running brook does not become putrid. Find something useful to do, and do it if you would be cheerful and happy. One of the useful and beneficial things to do is to work up subscribers for your church paper.—Central Methodist.

Public Worship.

Lack of preparation for the service of God's house is a common evil. How many make any preparation by prayer and meditation for the reception of the truths that will be brought to their attention in the services of the church! How many seated in comfortable pews confronted by the embassador of Christ, hearing the heavenly message, make no effort to expel from their hearts worldly thoughts, anxieties and desires! Yet such preparation is absolutely necessary to obtain the greatest good from these services. Does not the continuance in this evil way increase indifference and neglect? If the goddess of human knowledge is represented as seated on a hill, and the seekers toiling up it, can we think of divine knowledge as occupying a lower place, or requiring less of effort or perseverance to obtain?

Irregular attendance at the services of God's house is destructive to piety. How many excuse themselves from the services when slightly indisposed! Their indisposition is not such as to hinder them from writing a letter to a friend, reading some book or performing ordinary household duties. It is only such as to keep them away from the preaching services. God's house may properly be called a sanitarium, a place for securing health. Here should come those who are weary in body and heavy in soul. They will find rest for the one and comfort for the other. Those who in their indisposition can serve themselves or others, can serve God. A headache or heartache can be borne with in God's house as well as out of it, with the possibility of finding something that will alleviate. Alas! how many have found that this has brought coldness and indifference to God's truth, and hence to godliness! Such a result must be considered as suicidal, for it could have been avoided.

The ease with which one may climb a ladder depends in a great measure on how far apart the rungs are placed. It certainly would require more skill and strength when they were placed three feet apart than when six inches apart. The services of God's house are steps to help us ascend to heavenly things. Let us understand that the better use we make of them, the easier and sooner can we reach the heavenly heights.—Mid-Continent

A Chance Word.

The Philadelphia Sunday-School Times gives a very interesting anecdote about a chance word, which does good to consider. But if our chance words are to do good, they can only be because our ordinary and every-day conversation are words of wisdom and kindness. The remark made is helpful. We want to live for a purpose? Then we must contribute to the good of others; if not of many others, then, at least, of one. But here is a little homely story:

Upon the silence occasioned by the sudden stopping of a street car there fell these words: "So long as you can contribute to the pleasure, happiness or comfort of any human being you are of importance in the world, and no longer." Whatever may have been the object of these words, the thought reached the hearts of a dozen or more passengers, and it was interesting to note the changed expression on some listless faces. In utter unconsciousness of any effect of her words, the lady from whose lips they fell passed out into the street. Perhaps in the great day it may be her happiness to know that the Lord then used her tongue for a blessing to some heart which had as yet failed to comprehend the meaning of its life struggle; for the truth she emphasized was a truth which all of us need to realize. Not our personal enjoyment, nor yet our seeming success in life, but our part in God's plan for others, is the measure of our importance in the world.—Southern Churchman.

Have no controversy with God. It will not pay to measure weapons with him. If he says "Go," go at once. Wait not to be spoken to the second time. If the word is, "Stand," let there be no flinching. Rock-like remain, however the billows roar. Leave off the pet indulgence which you feel he is not pleased with. Give up that doubtful habit which impedes your communion with him and makes you uneasy in your most serious, thoughtful moments. Go, and sin no more. Surrender yourself absolutely, unconditionally, irreversibly to him! Be wholly the Lord's. It is beautiful. It is the only way to really live. It is glory all along, and victory, and song. —Zion's Herald.

Somebody says: "When a simpleton wants to get well, he buys something to 'take;' a philosopher gets something to 'do.'" The principle here enunciated applies to spiritually sick or languid Christians. The best cure is to find something to do first for Christ. You can never preach your people into a better state of spiritual health unless you so preach as to put them to work. Doing is the cure of doubt.—Cumberland Presbyterian.

How Much Did You Take?

"Haven't we had a fine sermon?" said one lady to another, while passing out with the congregation at the close of a Sunday service.

"Yes," replied the other, "I think we have—how much of it did you take?"

The sermon was really a good one, upon "Charity," which "suffereth long, and is kind, envieth not, vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil." The diction of the sermon was almost unexceptionable. The lady who so warmly praised it was fashionably dressed, accustomed to live quite at her ease, and so far as we could learn, not particularly given to sacrificing her substance or convenience for the benefit of anybody else, and was often heard making very uncharitable remarks about others; yet she was captivated with the sermon; it was a fine one, she thought; she had been interested and entertained. While we remained within hearing, she had not framed a reply to the question, "How much of it did you take?"

This is the test question as to the true appreciation of a sermon. What avails it that we praise the sermon, while never taking it to the heart or the home for practice? How often is the sermon eulogized and the preacher complimented with no manner of profit to the hearer! So it was in Ezekiel's day, and so it will continue to be: "Lo, thou art unto me as a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument; for they hear thy words, but they do them not."

"How much of it did you take?" is the question which remains after all the pleasant compliment.—Mid-Continent.

The Rounded Life.

It is well to remember that the most beautiful and helpful lives are those which are most fully rounded, most completely developed on every side. Look at the men and women who come nearest to you in the way of influence and sympathy. Are they not almost invariably persons of full-orbed character; persons no part of whose better nature is altogether repressed? Do they not appeal to you because they are so large-minded, so catholic in their sympathies, so fundamental in their conception of life? The large, breezy, hopeful outlook is theirs; and it is theirs because they live on a higher and broader plane than the men and women who are tied down to prescriptive notions and special graces.

The time has come for young Christians to appropriate the truth that the gospel which they profess is good for all of life. It is just as good for a picnic as it is for a funeral. It is just as good for the shop or the school as it is for the meeting house. It is good to make rounded lives and characters. There is nothing in it inimical to anything which is good, true, innocent and helpful. Narrowness in theology makes bigots, and narrowness in practical religion makes canters and lifeless literalists. What the church wants to-day are fresh young lives, round as the full circle of our multiform human existence, and full to the circumference with the vital truth of the gospel. Religion is not simply for our Sunday souls. It is for the whole annular man.—Zion's Herald.

A Pious Wish.

Henry Ward Beecher once, when about to take a ride, said to the man who brought the horse: "That is a fine-looking animal; is he as good as he looks?" The man replied: "Mr. Beecher, that is the best horse in our stable; he will work in any place you put him, and he can do anything any horse can." The great preacher eyed him for a moment with increased admiration, and then humorously remarked: "I wish to goodness he was a member of my church."

Growing old gracefully taxes the inner forces and resources of us all; and, somehow, it seems to be that it is the few only who so take the changes and experiences of life as to be not merely chastened, but sweetened by them; not merely disciplined, but mellowed. We need always to guard against a certain tendency to deterioration, and I am quite sure that one secret of youth is to keep up with determined and steady hand one's own tone, to avoid rut and narrowing circles.—J. F. W. Ware.

HYGIENE.

Managing a Cold.

A cold usually comes upon us unawares. It is ushered in with a slight chill, accompanied by a sense of dryness in the throat and nose, with perhaps a headache and muscular lameness. Not unfrequently the chest feels as if it was sore inside, and we may or may not have a cough and slight fever. This state of things goes on for a day or two, and our general comfort is impaired. Unless these symptoms and the few others not mentioned which are dependent upon them, increase in severity, there is little occasion to do anything, only that we should be careful to avoid exposure to sudden atmospheric changes. See to it that you are warmly clothed and that your lungs receive a sufficient supply of wholesome air.

The most successful physicians of the present day are those who are sparing in the application of remedies, and who learn at the outset of their professional career that medical knowledge, unless combined with a full mind of wisdom, is worse than valueless. True, there are some colds which need attention, and they are those where the symptoms get worse from day to day. When a cold lasts over a week, something is wrong, and it is advisable to come to the assistance of nature.

Cancel your engagements if you can and remain at home for an evening or two; or if that can not be done without serious loss to business, at least get in early, if possible before midnight, when the air is raw and biting. You need restrict yourself in nothing, and as long as your stomach retains its integrity cater to it. If you need a remedy I know of none more efficient to loosen the bonds of a cold than quinine in a dose of ten grains, to which is added a pellet containing five grains of Dover's powder. Both are simple drugs and the pharmacist always has them on hand at a trifling cost. Quinine, within proper limits and sensibly administered, still holds its own against the other remedies that within the past twenty years have been recommended in its place. Be careful to get a soluble pill; if you object to its bitterness, your druggist will give it to you in the form of a chocolate pellet, which is as palatable as a caramel.

About an hour or so before you retire, take a mild laxative. Next prepare a hot foot bath into which a tablespoonful of mustard has been stirred, and immerse your feet about five minutes. As you emerge from this, swallow your quinine and Dover's powder and go directly to bed, which should be warm and equipped with sufficient blankets, and in a well-ventilated room. If you have any preconceived notions about quinine and Dover's powders, you may leave them off and only avail yourself of the hot foot bath, the laxative, and the hot drink. They will often be all that is required, and if you can get along without them it is an additional advantage. In small children such colds generally respond to a dose of castor oil. Unfortunately, some colds that are trifling at first will develop into bronchitis and not unfrequently pneumonia, in spite of the most careful treatment. This is the case in those who are not over robust and whose lungs are materially weak and sensible to climatic changes. Here we have a condition which needs the care of the physician, and his advice should be sought early.—Manley Tempest, M. D., in Providence Journal.

Influenza, or "Grip."

It becomes the duty of everyone (and of housekeepers in particular) to prevent the spread of the disease. In the first place, every part of the house must be in perfect sanitary condition. Let every drain be thoroughly examined, and inaugurate a frequent use of disinfectants. It is needless to say that the cleaner a house is kept, and the freer from all accumulations of refuse of all kinds, the better. If any member of the family is attacked by the grip, separate him at once from the rest of the household, and be careful that nothing that he uses or touches comes in contact with the others. Books and papers especially should not be used after a sojourn in the sick-room, unless thoroughly disinfected; a little precaution in this way may entirely prevent the spread of the trouble. Now that we recognize the terribly exhaustive nature of the disease, we are much better able than formerly to cope with the severe after effects which have in so many cases proved far worse than the illness itself. One great preventive of the after trouble is to take extra food between regular meal-times, a glass of warm milk, for example, or a fresh egg beaten up in a cup of tea. It will be found that nourishing and simple remedies of this kind are far better than alcoholic stimulants. At bed-time, too, some strong broth should be taken, and it is a good plan to have a glass of milk and a biscuit at hand if the patient should wake in the night. Meanwhile there should be, if possible for several weeks after an attack of the grip, complete rest of the mind and body.—Good Housekeeping.

Sins of the Tongue.

BY REV. HENRY M. MOREY.

Sins of the tongue are not so easily recognized by us as some others, and yet may do more mischief. The church is not often endangered by murder and dishonesty and drunkenness; but the sins of the tongue introduce strife into the very bosom of the church.

The Bible puts its condemnation upon these sins in the strongest terms. A thoughtful writer says: "Many a sin with their tongues that in eternity they will wish that they had never been born, or that they had been born dumb."

What does Christ think of the gossip which comes from the lips of his professed followers? Much of this is only the manifestation of a friendly interest in our neighbors, and is, therefore, harmless. But if an evil report comes to us about some brother or sister, what shall we do about it? Shall we believe it at once? Shall we put on our overcoat and go about to retail the unsavory gossip? That is not the best way for ourselves. It leaves a bad taste in the mouth. Besides, it contradicts the old law of the Bible: "Thou shalt not go up and down a tale-bearer among my people."

The tale-bearer may do wrong that he can never undo. The reputation of a minister should be sacredly guarded by his church, and he in turn should guard their reputations as he would that of members of his own family. What would he thought of a man who should allow himself to speak of his wife as having a temper, as giving him only sour looks and sour bread? Everybody would despise him, and say that he got just what he deserved. The reputation of ministers is their capital. It may be easily dissipated by thoughtless or by spiteful tongues. Churches ought to be proud of the reputation of their pastors, which reflects honor on themselves. The greater his reputation for scholarship and piety and clear thinking and faithfulness and manliness, the better is it for the church and the community. Thoughtless criticism, even when deserved, may do irreparable harm. But most criticism has not even that excuse; it is harsh and unjust.

Many years ago a Scotchman, going out to Van Dieman's Land, took with him a bit of thistle seed. He sowed it, and other Scotchmen from far and near came to look at their national emblem and to weep over the dear associations, and some begged seed and scattered it widely, until at length the thistle has become a nuisance that, perhaps, can never be eradicated. So tales that are started thoughtlessly get beyond control, and the evils multiply and can never be overtaken. There is such a thing as lying by proxy. A man who tells a lie, knowing it to be a lie, lies every time that lie is repeated by others, and is justly chargeable with all the damage that ensues.

What will the Master think of these sins in the use of the tongue, especially if he sees that the motive behind the sin was not merely thoughtlessness, but envy or spite, or a determination to destroy another's reputation? What will Christ think if the attack is made, not directly, in manly fashion, but by indirection, by question and insinuations; sometimes a nod, a shrug of the shoulders, for even a statement that may be true, but which needs explanation, told without such qualification, does all the work of a lie or slander. What will Christ think of those ebullitions of temper which often break up ties of friendliness in the church, and hurt after the tongue itself is mouldered to dust and nothingness?

The sins of the tongue may be the most cruel sins in the world. A man was murdered, and the whole city was stirred. It was a brutal deed; but a sharp tongue is worse than an Italian stiletto, it strikes in the dark, behind a man's back, inways that he can not see, and from which he can not defend himself. This lying in wait for a man in ambush, shooting at him from under cover, is as cowardly as it is cruel. The mischief it does, the torment it inflicts, is beyond computation. McDuff, speaking of the sin of detraction, says: "There is a persecution sharper than the axe. There is an iron that goes deeper into the heart than a knife. Cruel sneers and sarcasms and pitiless and unjust judgments and cold-hearted calumnies."

The great Dr. Barrow, in a sermon on the sins of the tongue, traces them to their causes, of which he enumerated several: 1, ill-nature; 2, pride, ambition and self-love; 3, envy; 4, malicious revenge and spite; 5, cowardice; 6, evil conscience; 7, selfish design.

How shall we guard ourselves against the temptation to this thoughtless and wicked disparagement of others?

1. Think how unmanly and cowardly it is; how low and base and mean. Resolve as David did, "I will take heed to my ways; that I sin not with my tongue."

2. Cultivate a sense of honor in dealing with the reputation of others, so that harmless gossip may never pass over into harmful detraction.

3. Do not encourage tale-bearers by even listening to their gossip.

4. Defend the absent. Guard the reputation of the pastor and officers and members of the church.

5. Cultivate the spirit of Christian charity that suffereth long and is kind, that envieth not and thinketh no evil.

6. Practice the Golden Rule.

7. Practice also the Silver Rule, not to speak of others except to speak good of them unless there be some flagrant wickedness that has to be exposed to prevent injury, but in all ordinary cases, "do unto others as you would that they should do unto you."—Exchange.

THE CUISINE.

CONDUCTED BY L. A. B.

CHOCOLATE CARAMELS.—One cup of chocolate, one cup each of milk, molasses, and sugar, butter the size of an egg. Boil till it drops hard. Pour into buttered pan, and before it is cool mark off in squares.

CREAM BISCUIT.—Two eggs beaten very light, half a pint of sweet cream, one quart of flour, one teaspoonful of salt. To mix them, beat in a little flour and cream alternately. Work them ten minutes, roll very thin, and cut with a glass.

WHITE PUDDING SAUCE.—Moisten one tablespoonful of cornstarch with a little cold water, pour over it half a pint of boiling water; have ready the well-beaten whites of two eggs; add to the corn starch a half cupful of powdered sugar. Pour this gradually over the whites, beating all the time; when cold, add the vanilla. This makes a light and very palatable sauce

TOMATO SOUP.—One quart can of tomatoes, two heaping tablespoonfuls of flour, one of butter, one teaspoonful of salt, one of sugar, a pint of hot water. Let tomatoes and water come to a boil. Rub flour, butter and a tablespoonful of tomatoes together. Stir into boiling mixture, add seasoning, boil all together fifteen minutes, rub through a sieve and serve with toasted bread.

APPLE FLOAT.—Take four large, tart apples, stew them in very little water, just enough to keep them from burning. They should be very dry when done. Press through a colander and beat with a fork until smooth, adding half a cupful of sugar. When entirely cold stir in the whites of two eggs beaten to a stiff froth; flavor with lemon or vanilla. Send to the table in a glass dish and serve with cream.

SUGAR CAKES.—Half a pound of dried flour, one-fourth pound of fresh butter, one-fourth pound of fine white sugar; mix the flour and sugar together, then rub in the butter and yolk of an egg beaten with a tablespoonful of cream or new milk; make it into a paste, roll and cut into small cakes; bake upon a floured tin, or shallow tin baking pan. A little grated nutmeg improves these cakes; a cake expressly for the wee folks.

GREEN TOMATO PICKLE.—One peck of green tomatoes, one dozen onions, slice both very thin—sprinkle well with salt, let stand twenty-four hours, drain well; put into a kettle a sufficient quantity of vinegar to cover them; one-half ounce each of cloves, mace, cinnamon and allspice, three nutmegs, one-half cupful of black and white mustard seed, and two tablespoonfuls of celery seed; boil altogether ten minutes, and just before taking from the fire add two cupfuls of sugar.

That Tired Feeling

The great benefit which people overcome by That Tired Feeling derive from Hood's Sarsaparilla proves that this medicine "makes the weak strong." J. B. Emerton, a well known merchant of Auburn, Me., says: "About 5 years ago I began to suffer with very severe pain in my Stomach, gradually growing worse. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, being convinced that I was troubled with Dyspepsia and Liver and Kidney troubles. I improved at once and am very much better and feel more like working.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL

"When my adopted son was seven years of age, he had as severe a cough as I ever knew anyone to suffer from. He coughed incessantly, and spit up blood. I tried everything I could think of, but he constantly grew worse, and I feared the poor little fellow would surely die. At last, I gave him Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, being recommended to do so by the physician. This medicine gave the child speedy relief and effected a permanent cure."—Mrs. M. E. DEBAT, Liberty, Texas.

A Special Day for Millsaps College.

I most heartily approve the suggestion of our agent that Sunday, the twenty-fifth of March, be observed in the interest of Millsaps College. That there are other important claims demanding the attention of our pastors I well know, and would not undervalue any of our church enterprises. But just now it seems to me our college interests are paramount. Another such opportunity to serve the cause of Christian education may not come in a century. May we not expect the earnest co-operation of all the pastors in the two Mississippi Conferences? Of course, we do not insist on any special observance of Easter. So far as that is concerned, "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind."

If any have scruples about Easter, they can simply observe the twenty-fifth of March. It is hoped, however, that all will observe the same day. There is something inspiring in a universal thought. No one can measure the moral effect of presenting the subject of Christian education to all our people on the same day. Let a great volume of prayer go up to God; let stirring appeals be made, and let our people have an opportunity to respond to the generous proposition of Maj. Millsaps.

W. B. MURRAH.

[We heartily endorse the suggestion of Dr. Murrah. No brother needs to make an Easter affair of this collection, unless he chooses. The fact that some people designate a certain Sabbath in the year as Easter Sabbath does not keep any preacher from preaching on that day. Why should it keep him from taking a collection for any good cause? If our preachers generally will take the collection as requested by Dr. Cooper on the twenty fifth of March, a handsome sum will be realized for the college.—EDITOR]

Death of Dr. Anderson.

We are pained exceedingly to learn of the death of Dr. W. D. Anderson, of the North Georgia Conference. Dr. Anderson was a man of mark. He was a man of strong intellect and earnest piety. He was a well-rounded character—a man who was more and more respected and beloved the longer he was known. He was a lawyer of note before he became a preacher. He was a member of the General Conferences of '86 and '90, and was elected at the head of the delegation for 1894. We feel a sense of personal loss in his death.

Are you a friend to the ADVOCATE? If so, then call the attention of some person who is not a subscriber to the magnificent premiums we are offering. Be quick about it, too, as these offers may not last long. By doing this you can help the ADVOCATE, and at the same time confer a favor upon a friend.

MAJOR R. W. MILLSAPS.

Maj. R. W. Millsaps.

For the above likeness of Major R. W. Millsaps we are indebted to that enterprising journal, the New Orleans Picayune. Although much has been said in the ADVOCATE from time to time about Major Millsaps, we believe nothing like a full sketch of his life has been given in its columns. Believing that our readers will greatly appreciate it, we present the following account of his remarkable career:

R. W. Millsaps was born in Copiah county, Miss., May 30, 1833. Until his seventeeth year, he remained under the parental roof, dividing his time between farm work and attending a country school in the neighborhood. For some years before this time he had been longing for an opportunity to go to college and take a regular course, but no opportunity had presented itself. His father being a man of limited means, with a large family dependent upon him, was unable to foot the bills required for a collegiate education.

Just at this crisis an itinerant Methodist preacher in one of his rounds paid a pastoral visit to the family. In conversation with the youth he learned of his educational aspirations, and told him that he must not despair, that there were schools at which even a poor boy could get an education. He spoke particularly of Hanover College, in Indiana, as a place where a boy of limited means could work his way through.

This was the turning-point in the boy's history. He at once resolved that he would go to that college. Keeping his resolution to himself for a time, he went to work to raise the small sum that would be required to make a start. After a time he made known to his father his wish. The father replied that he was unable to send him even to a cheap college. The boy replied that he did not wish his father to pay his way. All he wanted was permission to go. He then made known the fact that he had made $50 by picking cotton, $7.50 by picking peas, and $1 by the sale of his pet puppy, making an aggregate of $58.50. With this he would take a four years' course in college if his father would only give his consent. The father still hesitated; but just at this juncture the mother came to her son's rescue, and, of course, the father yielded. A few days later the ambitious youth was at Hanover College, not idling away his time, but applying himself with the utmost diligence to his studies.

He boarded at first at $1 per week, but finding this too high for his purse, he procured cheaper board. During his whole four years he paid his way by working at any kind of work that offered itself. At the end of the four years, graduation day found him on the rostrum wearing the first honors of the senior class. He now had his diploma in his pocket, but no money. So he worked his way on a flat-boat down the Mississippi river to a point not more than fifty miles—a short walk—from his father's residence.

Soon after his return he secured a position as tutor in the family of Col. Glass—a wealthy planter of Warren county, Miss. This position he filled so entirely to the satisfaction of his employer that his salary was raised without his asking after two months. While teaching he practiced the most rigid economy in order to lay up money enough to take a law course at Harvard. Col. Glass, having ascertained his purpose, proposed to defray the expenses of his law course. This liberal offer was kindly, but firmly declined.

After a time he went to Harvard, and, finding his funds running short, he again fell back upon his resources of muscle, and worked his way through by sawing wood and doing other muscular work. He graduated with distinction in 1858. Just as he was leaving the rostrum with his diploma, some one handed him a sealed envelope. Opening it, he found in it a check for $600. At first he could not imagine whence the check came. At length, however, he felt sure that his friend, Col. Glass, must be the perpetrator of this act of generosity. Returning to Mississippi, he managed by diligent and persistent effort to ascertain that his surmise was right. He at once went to Col. Glass and insisted on his taking back the money. This Col. Glass firmly refused to do, but finally agreed to take the young man's note for the amount with interest at eight per cent., stating at the same time that he would never present the note for payment.

The young attorney hung out his shingle at Pine Bluff, Ark., using a part of Col. Glass' loan in the purchase of a library. The war coming on soon after this, he enlisted in the Confederate service. He rose from one position to another until he attained the rank of major. He will carry to his grave scars from wounds received in battling for "the lost cause." The war being ended, he decided to abandon the law for a time, at least, and engage in mercantile pursuits. He began business on a small scale at Brookhaven, Miss., and was eminently successful from the start. He was soon able to branch out in different directions. At present he is at the head of one of the largest banking institutions in Mississippi, and has money invested in a great variety of enterprises. He is reputed to be worth a million of dollars or more.

Maj. Millsaps has always manifested an interest in the cause of education. At one time, when the public schools of Brookhaven were about to close for want of funds, he advanced the money and kept the schools going. He has been a trustee of Whitworth College for twenty-five years, and by his liberality and wise counsel has contributed largely to make it what it is—one of the largest female colleges in the South. For several years he has been president of the Monteagle Assembly, and has done much towards placing it in the front rank of the numerous Summer assemblies of the country. One incident in his life we can not forbear to relate. This incident we give in the language of the New Orleans Picayune:

"On returning home after the close of the war his first thought was of the note for $600, which he had given Col. Glass in recognition of the sum placed in his hand on his graduating day. Upon inquiry he found that his old friend was dead. He, therefore, wrote to the lawyer in charge of the succession to look over the papers of the deceased and see if there were not a note of $600 to the account of R. W. Millsaps. The lawyer did so, and answered that he had found the note, but it had long since run out, and Col. Glass had stipulated in writing that the holder was never to be troubled for the amount. Still, the lawyer wrote, that if it were in the power of Major Millsaps it would be a noble act to take up the bill, as Col. Glass' estates were all swept away by the war and his widow and children were destitute. Major Millsaps wrote back immediately to the lawyer to compute the interest and compound it, and his first act was to lay aside money to take up the note, which he did in less than six months to the amount of over $1,200. He could not bear to think of the widow and children of his friend wanting for aught, and has always been a trusted and sincere confidant of the children of his early benefactor."

Concerning his recent princely donation to the cause of Christian education our readers are already informed. He has given to Millsaps College $50,000 as an endowment fund, besides $15,000 towards the purchase of the grounds and the erection of the buildings. In addition to this he has submitted to the Methodists of Mississippi a proposition to duplicate annually any amount less than $25,000 which they will raise for Millsaps College. His purpose to found an institution of learning was not born at the time when his proposition was submitted to the public. From the time when he was making his heroic struggle with poverty and hardship in order to obtain an education he has cherished a purpose that if he was ever able to do so, he would provide better facilities for the education of the poor in Mississippi than were offered in his boyhood days.

If the Methodists of Mississippi will respond to his proposition by raising $25,000 annually as long as he lives, they will have an institution of learning that will be the peer of any in the land—an institution, too, whose portals will be open for the sons of the toiling masses, as well as for those of the rich. Having been a trustee of Millsaps College from the beginning, and having been Maj. Millsaps' pastor for four years, we know something of his animus in this matter; and we wish to say that while education is already cheap at Millsaps College, the time is coming when it will be much cheaper, if the people of Mississippi respond to his appeals, and thus provide the needed facilities. This is one educational institution to which the poor as well as the rich should feel under obligations to contribute. Maj. Millsaps' own career is an illustration of what an education is worth to a poor boy. Is it not a noble work to help to found an institution which shall turn out educated Christian young men year after year for centuries—yea, for millenniums to come? This is the work in which the Methodists of Mississippi are invited to join.

Judge L. Q. C. Lamar.

The life of Judge L. Q. C. Lamar has been written by his son-in-law and former law-partner, Hon. Edward Mayes, ex-chancellor of the University of Mississippi, and will soon be in print. It contains a chapter on the religious life of Judge Lamar from the pen of Bishop Galloway. Few public men have left a larger mass of written material suitable to be utilized in the preparation of a biography. Chancellor Mayes is a man of prodigious industry and a vigorous writer. We have no doubt, therefore, that he has prepared a biography which is a fitting memorial of the distinguished statesman and jurist.

We regard Judge Lamar as one of the greatest men the South has ever produced. His greatness was many-sided. Many men are great in one direction. He was great in many directions. In the army he displayed the very noblest qualities of soldierhood. Although his career as a teacher was short, it was sufficiently long to demonstrate the fact that had he made this his life-work, he would have taken a conspicuous place in the very front rank of this noble profession. As an attorney his career was equally short, and yet during that brief period he showed himself the peer of the master minds of the great profession. As a legislator he evinced statesmanship of the very highest order. As an orator he had few equals and no superior in all the broad domain of this "land of the free." Although he had worn the judicial ermine but a very short time before his death, he had already taken honorable rank in the annals of American jurisprudence. Had Providence spared his life a few years longer, there is no doubt that he would have occupied the same commanding position on the Supreme Bench which he had occupied in the halls of both houses of Congress.

His probity of character was never questioned. No suspicion of political dishonesty was ever uttered against him. For the arts of the demagogne he had a supreme contempt. If he won in a political contest, it was always by methods fair and honorable. In political as well as in private life he displayed that type of moral courage which is synonymous with true heroism. An instance of this is furnished in his disregard of the instructions of the Mississippi Legislature on a great political question. At the time all the probabilities were that this act would amount to political suicide so far as he was concerned. It mattered not: he would be true to his convictions, let the consequences be what they might.

He possessed that magnanimity of character which enabled him to discern the good qualities of a political foe in a time of great political animosity. He was the one man of his day who could vindicate the honor of Jefferson Davis, and at the same time pronounce a lofty eulogy upon the character of Charles Sumner. His religious career was a checkered one. In early life while a pupil at Emory College he professed religion and joined the Methodist Church. A few years afterwards he grew lukewarm and withdrew from the church. A few years before his death he reunited with the church, and from that time on he was a faithful, consistent, devout Christian.

It was our privilege to see several private letters written by his pastor in Washington to his excellent Christian wife just after his death, which, as our readers will remember, occurred in Macon, Ga., during the time of our pastorate there. These letters spoke of him as a man of more than usual devoutness.

When he expressed a wish to unite with the church the second time, the pastor, supposing that he would prefer being received privately, proposed to receive him at home. This proposition he declined, saying that he felt it a duty to take the vows of church membership publicly.

During the years when he was out of the church he never lost faith in the eternal verities of God's Word, or regard for the church of his choice. He would never allow the Christian religion or the Methodist Church to be assailed in his presence. We are glad that his life is to be published, and that the preparation of it has fallen into such competent hands.

The memory of such a man ought to be cherished. We predict for the book an extensive sale.

New Light.

An organized effort is being made to procure a pardon for Col. W. L. Hemingway, ex-treasurer of Mississippi. Petitions are to be circulated for signatures in every county in the State. The petition is accompanied by a document signed by every member of the Hinds county Grand Jury for the July term of 1893, certifying that indubitable evidence was presented to them that the money which Hemingway failed to turn over to his successor was stolen from the treasury by some representatives of a safe company, who in doing some repairing upon the treasury vaults procured the combination and thus were able soon afterwards to get into the vaults. This evidence was not attainable at the time of Hemingway's trial.

Two other documents accompany the petition—one from the jury that convicted him, another from the judge who sentenced him—both showing that there was no evidence at the time of his trial of his having feloniously appropriated a cent of the State's money. The evidence simply showed that the money was missing; that was all. It is also shown that Hemingway turned over all his property to make good the loss as far as possible. With this sort of a showing his pardon would be an act of sheer justice—not executive clemency.

Col. Hemingway has already served more than three years of his five years' sentence.

NOTES.

A large number of revival services have been held recently within the bounds of the Virginia Conference with most gratifying results. Over two hundred conversions are reported from one meeting in Lynchburg.

The Northern Methodist Church owns a large and well-equipped hospital in Philadelphia, founded through the munificence of Dr. Scott Stewart, who gave $250,000 for the purpose. Other donations have come in until it now has sufficient funds to keep it in successful operation. It is doing a vast amount of good, and is making its impress for Methodism.

***

The severe weather of the past few days has been exceedingly disastrous in some sections. Even as far south as San Antonio, Texas, cattle have perished by thousands from the combined effects of cold and hunger. It is said that fifteen thousand hides of cattle that had perished in that way were shipped from one station not far from San Antonio.

***

We invite attention to the communication in another column with reference to the Kansas City Training-school. This is an institution which merits a much larger share of public attention than it has hitherto received. We know of no institution of our church which in our judgment gives promise of a richer harvest by and by. We shall have more to say on this subject at another time.

Bishop Haygood has gotten out a new edition of "Our Children." This work was first published about fifteen years ago, and has had a sale of fifteen thousand. The new edition omits what was said in the old edition about Sunday-schools. It is a book which ought to be in every family. The publisher's price is 80 cents. It can be had as a premium for one new subscriber. See premium offer in another column.

A Thesaurus of Priceless Value as a Treasury of Knowledge

For the people, that world-renowned, most popular of all Encyclopædias, in the English Language,

Chambers' Encyclopædia,

Complete in 30 Handy Volumes. Over 12,000 Pages.

Being a beautiful, clear reprint of the Edinburgh and London edition of Chambers' Encyclopædia, a library of universal knowledge for the people, with very large additions upon topics of special interest to American readers, and giving American statistics of population down to, and including the census of 1890.

Remember, this great Encyclopædia contains thousands of upon thousands of articles, embracing all subjects within the limits of human knowledge; yet, in its more than 27 000 specially prepared articles, while giving pointed, practical, explicit and most interesting and instructive information both for the student and the general reader, are free from ambiguous technicalities and comparatively void of the mass of scientific signs, symbols and foreign nomenclature which crowd the pages of most other cyclopedias prepared for scientific and professional use alone. The Philadelphia Press well says:

"The particular and unique value of this Encyclopædia is its happy solution of the problem of fullness and convenience. It is neither bulky nor superficial. It is the book of reference for the million."

Chambers' Encyclopædia has always occupied a front place among the cyclopedic works to be coveted.

Do you ever want to post yourself easily and speedily, on some facts or matters belonging to the domain of Biography, Chemistry, Religion, Geography, Medicines, Health and Disease, Physical or Mental Recreation in Popular Games, etc.; Literature, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Agriculture, Mathematics, or any of the Arts and Sciences? If you do, avail yourself of this opportunity to secure a set of this great Encyclopædia.

Do you enjoy an occasional leisure hour of delightfully interesting, entertaining and instructive reading, and do you desire to supply yourself with a vast library of such matter, full of variety in all its departments? If you do, avail yourself of this opportunity to provide yourself with this invaluable and popular Encyclopædia.

Do you seek a suitable gift, one having intrinsic value, to present to your relative, or friend, or to your own library, or for the edification of the folks of your own household? If you do, here is your exceptional opportunity.

Do you appreciate occasions for securing extraordinary bargains, and would you secure a set of this Encyclopædia free? Now is your opportunity. See full particulars in our special offers, given below.

Our Unprecedented Offer.

The regular retail price of the imported edition of this immense reference library is $30 00. The cost to you for a full set, complete, printed on good paper, in beautiful, clear type, and durably bound in inflexible covers, delivered, free of cost to you, together with one year's subscription for this paper, will be only $2 50.

BOOKS AS PREMIUMS
TO AGENTS.

How to Get $1.50 Books for $1.00.

To any preacher, Sunday-school teacher or other person who desires to procure the following work we make a liberal offer. Read the description of the book, and then read our offer given below.

The Sermon Bible

Embracing the Whole of the Sacred Scriptures.

THE OLD TESTAMENT IN FOUR VOLUMES, NAMELY.

Vol. I. Genesis to II. Samuel.
Vol. II. I Kings to Psalm lxxvi.
Vol. III. Psalm lxxvii to Song of Solomon.
Vol. IV. Isaiah to Malachi.

THE NEW TESTAMENT, IN EIGHT VOLUMES, VIZ:

Vol. V. Matthew i to xxi.
Vol. VI. Matthew xxii to Mark xvi
Vol. VII. Luke i to John iii.
Vol. VIII. John iv to Acts vi.
Vol. IX. Acts vii to I. Corinthians.
Vol. X. II. Corinthians to Philippians.
Vol. XI. Colossians to James.
Vol. XII. I. Peter to Revelation.

This series of volumes gives in convenient form the essence of the best homiletic literature of this generation. It takes account of the best and greatest preachers, and has been compiled from manuscript reports and fugitive periodical sources as well as from books. Many of the best sermons preached by eminent men are never printed in book form. It thus contains much that will be new to its readers.

UNDER EVERY TEXT IS GIVEN:

1. Outlines of important sermons by eminent preachers existing only in manuscript or periodical, and thus inaccessible.

2 Less full outlines of sermons which have appeared in volumes which are not well known or easily obtained.

3. References to or very brief outlines of sermons which appear in popular volumes such as are likely to be in a preacher's library.

4. Full references to theological treatises, commentaries, etc., where any help is given to the elucidation of the text.

Thus the preacher, having chosen his text, has only to refer to the Sermon Bible, to find some of the best outlines and suggestions on it and full references to all the helps available.

It extends to 12 volumes, of about 400 pages each, with 24 blank pages for memorandum notes at the end of each volume. Price, $1.50. Each volume complete in itself.

Great care has been taken to observe due proportion in the volumes—the space given to each book of the Bible depending on the number of sermons that have been preached from it.

As the volumes will be indispensable to every preacher, and as they will be in constant use, they will be issued well bound, and at an exceedingly moderate price when the amount of matter is considered.

PRESS NOTICES.

We do not hesitate to pronounce this the most practically useful work of its kind extant. It is not a Commentary, but a Thesaurus of sermons on texts, arranged consecutively chapter after chapter, and book after book. It contains the essence of the best homiletic literature of this generation.—London Literary Churchman.

Full notes of one sermon are given and a cloud of references to others, so that one has a general index to modern sermon literature. We can conceive nothing better in the way of aids to sermon writing than this Sermon Bible.—British Weekly.

The work is very full, complete, and valuable, and is especially rich in the homiletical material of the present generation.—New York Evangelist.

No English or American preacher of note has been omitted, and the lists of works referred to are world wide.—New York Christian Intelligencer.

OUR OFFER.

The publisher's catalogue price of the above work is $1.50 per volume.

We will send any volume, postpaid, as a premium for two new subscribers, accompanied by the cash—$4. If you want the whole set of twelve volumes, send us twenty-three new subscribers with the cash—$46—and we will send the set, postpaid. Remember that this is not an antiquated work thrown on the market at a low rate because there is no demand for it. It is a recent publication which is having quite a run throughout the North.

A $1 Book for 35c.

Always on the lookout for something that will benefit our subscribers as well as ourselves, we have perfected arrangements by which we are able to make the following very remarkable offer:

To any new subscriber, or to any old subscriber, who will pay his subscription to June, 1895, we will send for thirty-five cents a copy of

THE WHITE RIBBON COOK BOOK.

The publisher's price of which is $1.

What is the White Ribbon Cook Book?

A Collection of One Thousand Original and Revised Recipes and Suggestions. Edited by Kathryn Armstrong. A handsome, compact volume of 320 pages, including 40 blank pages for additional recipes.

It is a first-class book of Cookery and Housekeeping, prepared by a practical housekeeper. It is entirely new; copyrighted 1894. While it is not claimed that it is in all respects superior to all other books, we do claim that any housekeeper, even if she have a dozen other cook books, will find this one worth to her more than the full retail price, and that the author has fully carried out her purpose, "To prove that wine, brandy and spirituous liquors of any kind may be dispensed with, and that no culinary requirement necessitates the introduction of these poisons into any household."

The White Ribbon Cook Book is durably bound in the best quality of cloth (not in paper covers). It is printed on an excellent quality of cream laid book paper. It is cheap only in price. It is one of the neatest and handsomest cook books ever issued, the cover design, in grained and embossed silver, being a specially unique feature.

HOW TO GET THE BOOK.

If you are not a subscriber, send us $2.35, and we will send you the Advocate one year and a copy of the book. If you are already a subscriber, but have not paid up to the time designated (June, '95), send the requisite amount at the rate of $2 a year, or $1 for six months, and send thirty-five cents additional for the book.

The label on your paper will show the time to which you have paid.

Orders will be filled in turn as received and as quickly as possible. Subscribers should wait two weeks before making complaint of non-receipt of the book. As this offer may not last long, it would be wise to send at once.

Here is Your Chance.

During the next sixty days we make the following offer:

For $2.50 we will send the Advocate one year and a copy of Christian Womanhood. The price of the Advocate is $2; the price of the book, $1. This book has had an extensive sale, the sixth thousand being now on the market. This offer applies to renewals as well as new subscriptions, provided the renewal extends the subscription to January, '95.

The following notices, selected from a vast number that have appeared in the church papers, will give some idea of the character of the work:

The best thesaurus of facts concerning womanhood with which we are acquainted.—Dr. C. F. Deems.

We hope it will be read by every man and woman in the church.—Florida Advocate.

We hope it will be extensively circulated and carefully read.—New Orleans Advocate.

Heartily recommended.—Dr. John E. Edwards.

This volume is the result of patient investigation and thoughtful study of the whole question treated. In the formulation of the case and in analyzing the testimony a vigorous, well-poised, legal mind is brought to bear. Dr. Black, moreover, establishes the points of his discussion as a skillful general establishes his lines in the face of an alert enemy. As he begins, so he closes, leaving the impression that a master in Israel has written bravely and tellingly of Christian womanhood, maintaining his position at every turn. The book is needed, and will long be in popular demand.—Sunday-School Magazine.

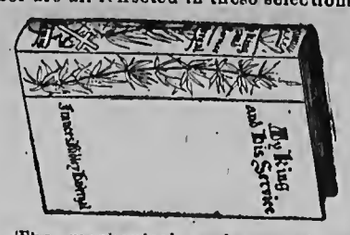
Another Superb Premium Offer.

My King and His Service.

By Frances Ridley Havergal.

A gentle spirit, a temperament alive to all innocent joys, to all the harmonies of life and literature, a deep and earnest faith, a loving self-surrender to the Savior—these are the qualities which make Frances Ridley Havergal a character of exceptional interest to all professing Christians. In the prose writings embraced in "My King and His Service," Miss Havergal has shown us her best and truest self. The author's tenderness, reverence and humanity, her ardent love for her Lord and for her neighbor are all reflected in these selections.



The mechanical make-up of the book is all that could be desired. The paper, typography and binding are superb. We are glad to be able to offer this devotional gem as a premium to our subscribers. If you are not a subscriber, send us $2.25 and we will send you the book and the Advocate one year. If you are a subscriber and are in arrears, pay up your subscription to March, '95, and send us twenty-five cents additional, and we will send you the book postpaid. This is just half what the book would cost you, were you to buy direct from the publisher.

Epworth League.

By Rev. Henry H. Ahrens.

Theme for Prayer Meeting.

CHRIST FEEDING THE MULTITUDE.

(Mark vi, 30-44.)

Preceding this miracle, it is said that Christ taught the multitude "many things." He was no specialist, no monomaniac.

1. Compassion with the people led Christ to perform this miracle. His mercy knows no bounds.

(1) Compassion led to his incarnation.

(2) Upheld him during his wearisome mission on earth.

(3) Nailed him to the cross.

To the successful workers for our Master compassion with the people must be the impellant.

2. Now witness the astounding miracle.

(1) The hungry masses were not in a proper mood to listen to a sermon. Christ gave them fish and bread.

(2) Christ made use of the food on hand. He increased it miraculously. It is true, "He that hath, to him shall be given." God blesses our labor; but we must labor.

(3) Previous to distributing the food, "Christ looked up to heaven and blessed and brake the loaves." You are about to enter on an errand of mercy? First look up to heaven. Attending prayer meeting, preaching, look up to heaven. Of course, a Christian does not sit down at meals without looking up to heaven.

(4) Christ employed his disciples in distributing the food among the multitude. Thus we assist him in evangelizing the world. Are co-workers with the apostles and the angels.

(5) More remained in fragments than had been originally on hand. All doubt as to the genuineness of the miracle removed. As Christ said to doubting Thomas, he tells us: "Be not faithless, but believing." The witness of the Spirit dispels all doubt.

In conclusion: Christ is the bread of life. Eat and live. Enough for each, enough for all, enough for evermore.

Good News from Jackson, La.

As secretary of the Epworth League of the Methodist Church at this place, I take pleasure in reporting to your paper that the young people of our church met in a mass meeting on Sunday, Feb. 4, and organized an Epworth League. Thirty-four names were signed as charter members. The organization was heartily endorsed by all present, and we look forward to the time when our League will be the strongest in the Mississippi Conference. The following is a list of the officers:

President, H. R. Singleton, Jr.; first vice-president, Prof. W. H. Carter; second vice-president, Miss E. G. Brown; third vice-president, Miss Lillian Wall; treasurer, Miss Emma Norsworthy; secretary, Geo. D. Parker.

Let the cry be, "Organize, organize," and ere long we trust that we will have State organizations in Louisiana and Mississippi.

Greetings to all leaguers.

Geo. D. Parker.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Rev. W. W. Drake, of the Louisiana Conference, is making a brief sojourn in the city.

Last Sabbath night, at Rayne Memorial, we had the pleasure of hearing a clear, strong, spiritual sermon by the pastor, Rev. F. N. Parker.

We are delighted to learn that Bishop Granbery's health is very much improved, so that he is able to preach regularly and do much other work.

Our sanctum was honored recently with a call from Dr. Church, of the N. E. Southern Conference. Dr. Church was for two years pastor in San Jose, Costa Rica.

The motion for a new trial in the case of Prendergast, the murderer of Mayor Harrison, of Chicago, has been overruled, and the assassin has been sentenced to hang on the twenty-third of March.

The First Methodist Church in Dallas, Texas, has completed and paid for its new and handsome house of worship. The dedicatory sermon will be preached by Bishop Galloway on Easter Sunday.

Rev. M. R Sharbrough, of the Pacific Conference, formerly of the Mississippi Conference, was married on the twentieth ultimo to Miss Martin, daughter of Rev. A. Martin, of San Benito County, Cal. We extend our heartiest congratulations.

Bishop Haygood's "Man of Galilee" had a sale of ten thousand during the first year after its publication. The publisher's price is 80 cents. It can be had as a premium for one subscriber to the New Orleans Christian Advocate. See premium offer.

Scriptural Baptism.

The above work is by Rev. J. J. Lovett, of the Indian Mission Conference, M. E. Church, South. The above-named work presents in a clear and concise way the leading scriptural arguments as to the subjects and the mode of baptism, not omitting the argument from Christian antiquity. The author is evidently well posted on the subject of which he writes. The work is well written and well arranged. The price is ten cents. The author will be recognized by many of our readers as a former member of the Mississippi Conference. Indian Methodist Publishing Co., Muscogee, I. T.

Winona District Conference.

The District Conference for the Winona district, North Mississippi Conference, will be held at Indianola, April 9, 1894. Bishop Hargrove will preside. S. M. Thames, P. E.

Books as Premiums.

To any preacher or other person who wishes to procure good books cheap we make the following offer:

We will send a copy of Bishop Haygood's "Man of Galilee" to any person who sends us one new subscriber with the cash, $2. That is, the book costs you nothing except the labor of getting the subscription. If the subscription is your own, it will make no difference.

We make the same offer with Bishop Haygood's "Our Children," a new edition of which is just from the press.

What Others Say of Us.

"There is no Seedsman in America that enjoys a sounder reputation for square dealing and conscientious claims for the seed he offers. His Catalogue makes no pretense of captivating by tawdry colored pictures, or inflated windy phraseology. It aims to guide, not to bewilder, its readers."—(From Editorial in Rural New Yorker.)

To all in search of this kind of a Vegetable and Flower Seed Catalogue, we shall be happy to send it free. You will find in it, probably, a larger variety of some kinds of Vegetable Seed than is in any Catalogue published in this country or Europe, many of the more costly we raise on our four seed farms. There are pages of Novelties, from which the humbug has been winnowed out.

IT TAKES YOUR MONEY—only 25 cents to buy a glass vial of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets—but then you get a lasting benefit and a permanent cure of your Bilious or Sick Headache, Constipation or Indigestion, loss of appetite, and all those troubles which follow a disordered liver.

The time to treat an inactive liver is before it becomes a disease. If these tiny Pellets were in every day use people would be germ-proof. The germs of disease make their entrance to the system through the liver—your health and well-being depends on the liver.

If you suffer from wind and pain in the stomach, giddiness, costiveness, disturbed sleep, you get immediate relief from the use of "Pleasant Pellets."

They're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or money returned.

Think of the thousands of hopeless cases which must have been cured by Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, before its proprietors could be willing to say, as they do: "For any case of Catarrh, no matter how bad, which we cannot cure, we'll pay $500 cash."

HOME CIRCLE.

THE BABY'S THINGS.

BY ADELAIDE PRESTON.

Just as he left it—softly pressed—
We'll put the little crib away;
The pillow needs no smoothing now—
The baby went from home to-day.
We may not watch his sleep to-night;
O loving angels, guard his bed,
And stars, look down with kindly eyes,
Where rests the downy baby head!

Take, tender hands, and fold from sight
The little garments love has wrought
And fashioned with such dainty care
And skill, the baby's coming brought,
Will wear them now, ah, nevermore!
Death clothed him in such pure array,
We cast aside the garb of earth
When he went home to-day.

His carriage! It is useless, too—
He needs it not where he is gone,
For God's own hand will lead him safe,
And angel's pinions bear him on.
And yet, because it held him once,
And soothed him in his earthly stay,
We'll keep it, for the baby's sake,
Whose going broke our hearts to-day.

The scattered playthings gather up;
The little rattle where it fell
From out his hand; the headless horse;
The woolly dog he loved so well—
The baby's things—such trifles once!
Ah! could I see, asleep, at play,
The little one how fair would seem
The dreary home he left to-day!

The Power of Smiles.

A child is lying in a dreary room, sick, alone. Suddenly there enters a tired woman with a thin shawl and faded dress, but with a tender, loving smile. Quickly the moanings cease, and a rested, happy expression is seen on the pale little face.

A hospital ward with its row of cots, each occupied with its special sufferer. "Here comes our sunshine," is passed from bed to bed, and the stranger looking up, sees a fair-faced woman in a striped gingham dress, with white apron and cap. The stoop of the shoulders shows weariness, but oh, that radiant smile and cheery word, as she moves slowly down the ward with her tray and little medicine cups!

A crowded class-room in an old down-town school-house, stifling under a hot June sun. The sixty or seventy children are restless and cross; the young teacher is discouraged and also cross. The door suddenly opens, and a smile comes in as part of the person of the gray-haired principal. Now faces brighten, and the little figures straighten as the words come: "Good afternoon, children! We are all tired, but we must not give up, but try again. Now let us have some fun in seeing who can spell best!" Heat, restlessness, crossness, are soon forgotten under the magic of that smile and those cheery words.

A large store in the Christmas season with its rush. "Cash! cash!" Hurry! hurry! It is three o'clock and behind the counter the saleswomen begin to wonder if the day will ever end, all are so overdone. One, specially weary, is lifting a box to its place, when a voice strikes her ear with these words: "I am sorry to give you trouble, but could you show me some blue ribbon?" Turning, she meets a sympathetic smile which cheers her more than she would have thought she could be cheered half an hour before.

It is the first day of a young girl in Mrs. T——'s dressmaking establishment; she enters the work-room bashful and frightened and hesitates at the door, not knowing where to sit. A bright-eyed woman in a corner behind a machine, catching sight of the stranger, turns to her with a smile and the words: "Come and sit by me, I am an old stager, having been here seventeen years—I will soon introduce you to the others." Many happy things had come to this girl, but never can she remember a happier one than that smile.

A factory floor noisy with the din of machinery. How hard it is to be always at the loom, and how should the one hundred girls exist, if the forewoman had not a smile! It is always there, and the comfort and cheer it brings to the tired workers no words can describe.

What a eulogy that found on an old tomb of a young girl—the words being simply: "She was so pleasant!" We in our busy days hardly have time for the pleasant things of life, nor do we accustom ourselves to look for them. It is easier to say a disagreeable thing about a companion than an agreeable; to think of the disadvantages of a position rather than the advantages; to look forward with dread to the dark things of life, rather than to the brighter prospects. There are, however, agreeable traits in everyone, and with thought they can be found out. No work but has some cheerful possibilities, and the future has its brightness.

The little courtesies of life, the "thank yons," the "pleases" tell in brightening it, as do the small considerations shown in everyday affairs. How true it is that virtues can be cultivated by perseverance, courage and the Higher Strength! Pleasantness, namely, the power of smiling and saying bright, cheery things, is a virtue. It can be further helped in its growth by the following four lines of wisdom, taken from a recent journal, which can be practically carried out:

"For every evil under the sun
There is a remedy, or there is none.
If there is a remedy, try to find it;
If no remedy, try not to mind it."
—Grace H. Dodge, in Far and Near.

Making Trouble and Work for Others.

Little selfishnesses are the dead flies that Solomon says spoil the apothecary's ointment. They are like harsh notes which make discord in the sweet melody. Usually these little selfishnesses come from thoughtlessness.

When Frank comes in from school he flings his books on the sitting-room table, because he is in such a hurry to get his lunch before going out with the boys.

Mary plays tennis all the afternoon, and stays on the grounds so late that she only reaches the porch steps when the tea bell rings. She leaves her racket on the porch chair for some one else to put away while she hurries in to the table.

Dick's muddy overshoes are left at the door, Florence's best gloves are tossed on the mantle and forgotten, and even grave and dignified father sometimes drops his paper on the floor when he leaves the breakfast table.

They all go their separate ways, forgetting, meanwhile, that some one else, some one whose back is just as easily tired as theirs—and what a pity it's almost always the mother's—must trot around after them and put these things in place.

These careless folks do not realize how much trouble and work they give to other people. It would seem that their main maxim in life is to "take care of number one." Certainly many of their actions could not be sustained by the Golden Rule.—Churchman.

A Drop of Ink.

"I don't see why you won't let me play with Robert Scott," pouted Walter Brown. "I know he does not always mind his mother, and smokes cigars, and sometimes swears. But I have been brought up better than that. He won't hurt me, and I should think you would trust me. Perhaps I can do him good."

"Walter," said his mother, "take this glass of pure water, and put just one drop of ink into it." He did so.

"O mother, who would have thought one drop would blacken a whole glass so?"

"Yes; it has changed the color of the whole, has it not? It is a shame to do that. Just put one drop of clear water in it and restore its purity," said his mother.

"Why, mother, you are laughing at me. One drop, nor a dozen, nor fifty won't do that."

"No, my son; and therefore I can not allow one drop of Robert Scott's evil nature to mingle with your careful training, many drops of which will make no impression on him."—Herald Presbyter.

BE HONEST AND TRUE.

Be honest and true,
O eyes that are blue!
In all that you say
And all that you do,
If evil you'd shun,
And good you'd pursue,
If friends you'd have many,
And foes you'd have few—
Be honest and true
In all that you say
And all that you do,
O eyes that are blue!

Be honest and true,
O eyes that are gray!
In all that you do
And all that you say
At home or abroad,
At work or at play,
As you laugh with your friend,
Or run by the way,
Be honest and true,
By night and by day,
In all that you do
And all that you say,
O eyes that are gray!

Be honest and true,
O eyes that are brown!
On sincerity smile;
On falsity frown;
All goodness exalt,
All meanness put down.
As you muse by the fire,
Or roam through the town,
Remember that honor
Is womanhood's chief crown,
And wear it as yours,
O eyes that are brown!

Be honest and true,
O eyes of each hue!—
Brown, black, gray and blue,
In all that you say
And all that you do,
O eyes in which mothers
Look down with delight,
That sparkle with joy
At things good and bright,
Do never a thing
You would hide from their sight!
Stand up for the right
Like a chivalrous knight;
For the conqueror still,
When the battle is through,
Is he who has ever
Been loyal and true.
Make the victory sure,
O eyes of each hue!

Three Pairs of Shoes.

There they are, in a neat little row under the mantle in the children's bed-room. A pair of twelves, a pair of nines, and a tiny pair of fives, belonging to the baby. They are all more or less wrinkled and worn, and the pair of twelves have holes in the toes, which caused me to say a little while ago to the sturdy wearer of them, that there was "no sense in his kicking out shoes like that," and if he was not more careful he would just have to go barefooted. He heard me with the utmost indifference as I know from the fact that the threat was hardly out of my mouth when he asked me if I knew whose little boy he would have been if I had never been born.

"You might have been the little boy of some papa who couldn't have bought any shoes at all," I said reproachfully.

"Oh, well," he said calmly, in the fullness and beauty of his childish faith, "God has millions and millions of shoes, and I could just ask him for a pair whenever I wanted them. Don't you see, papa?"

Three pairs of shoes! Three pairs of tender little feet upon the untried border of life's mysterious land. I sit and look at the little shoes, wondering where the feet that wear them will be led in the time to come—the little feet that

Through long years
Must wander on 'mid hopes and fears.

How much would I give to know the future that I might stand between them and the temptations so sure to assail them, that I might guide them from pain and sorrow, if I could! There is something strangely appealing and half-pathetic to every father and mother in the sight of a row of little shoes I see before me now. They arouse the tenderest instincts of one's nature. I don't know why.

The wearers of the little shoes may have been very fretful or mischievous or trying all day. You may have been "all out of patience" with them. You may have whipped the little hands, or put the rebellious little ones to bed, declaring that they were "worrying the life out of you;" but they are not worrying you now, and you are going about picking up a little stocking here and a little skirt there, with nothing but tenderness in your heart toward them. You think only of how precious the wearers of the little clothes are, and there is no melody on earth one-half so sweet to you as the music of the baby voices when they knelt around you a little while ago, saying: "God bless mama and papa, and keep us all safely through the night." You will hear no sweeter music than that this side of paradise.

You reproach yourself for lack of tenderness and patience as you look at that little row of shoes, and sometimes you fall to thinking if the wearer of any one pair of the little shoes would wear them no more—if you should awaken some morning, as heartbroken fathers and mothers have sometimes awakened, and find that the wearer of the little shoes had gone from you in the night—to wear the garments that wax not old.

Three pairs of little shoes! There are tears in your eyes as you look at them now, and perhaps you steal softly to the bedsides of the little sleepers to make sure that they are sleeping sweetly and safely, and to touch their little hands or their cool, moist brows with your lips, your heart filled will tender memories, with hopes and fears, with unspoken prayers. Three pairs of little shoes. Three little pilgrims just setting out on a voyage of life, their frail barks as yet untouched and unharmed by adverse winds and waves, God bring them all to port.—Detroit Free Press.

Good Workers.

There are a great many "half-way workers" in the world, and it is a fact that they are always found at the "foot of the ladder" in their mental, social and financial condition. There are boys employed in various occupations who go through their duties heedlessly, and care little for the niceties or perfection of their work. "Anything will do, so that it will pass the eyes of the master for the time being," seems to be their motto. They care nothing for the looks of their work when finished, or the little details which are necessary for the making of a nice job. In every possible way they slight their work, if by so doing they can save themselves a little trouble. Boys who work on this principle never make good and faithful mechanics or workmen. When they grow up with such habits it is easy to predict what their future will be. They become "sloughs," "botches," "blacksmiths," in their trade, and are never able to secure and hold a good and profitable situation. Employers use them only when they are "rushed" for help, and dispense with their services as soon as the emergency is over. They receive the lowest wages of their craft, and remain idle half and more of their time, because employers do not want to be bothered with them. Good workmen are always in demand, receive fair wages, and the more skilled they are the higher wages they receive far their labor, and the greater their chances for promotion and permanent occupation. Boys should remember these facts, and at all times do the very best they know how in any work they may be engaged at and be not afraid of any extra work no matter how common the job upon which they be employed. This pays every time.—The Advance.

The True Test of Strength.

The every-day detail inseparable from the administration of a household, large or small, makes the sum total of its mistress' happiness. To neglect or overlook the smallest detail for one day means double care or increase of friction for the days that follow. It is the omission of the pinch of salt that spoils the dinner. It is care of trifling things, the small essentials, that marks the difference between a well-organized and a disorganized home.

Women frequently rebel at this, and feel that their lives are limited by the petty and insignificant details to which the mind of the housekeeper, though she be a college graduate, must give attention. Yet it is the care and nicety of attention with which details are met that makes the difference between well-applied intelligence and ignorance, or its equivalent, indifference, in any home. It is difficult for a woman whose knowledge of the countless details in a business office is limited, to realize that the same pettiness of detail is part of the daily life of every business man; and his ability to attend to the details perfectly—which means in order and without producing friction—or to train others to attend to them in the same spirit, marks the difference between the successful and the unsuccessful man. There is no petty annoyance in housekeeping which does not have its counterpart in any business, and it has the same nerve-racking power.

Strength is shown in our ability to meet, not the great trials of life, but the petty annoyances which make up each day's experience.—Christian Union.

Grand Combination Offer.

King's Improved Cotton.

Extra Early, Prolific, Long Limbs, 36 to 40 per cent. Lint.

This cotton gave the heaviest yield (1,370 pounds seed cotton) per acre in competition with 36 other varieties at the Mississippi Agricultural Experiment Station in 1890, and its good record has been fully maintained in all subsequent experiments.

This trial was absolutely impartial. Each cotton had exactly the same chances in every way. The result shows that, under similar conditions, with exactly the same treatment in every way, King's Improved Cotton will produce from 20 to 100 per cent. more cotton than the most noted varieties in the South.

Price: 25 CENTS PER PACKAGE.

SEEDS.

World's Fair Medal & Diploma

King's exhibit of Seeds and Garden Vegetables was awarded several premiums and a special diploma by Piedmont Exposition judges in 1891. It was also awarded a medal at the World's Fair, as being the best on exhibition there. The collection is a choice selection of garden vegetable seeds.

The collection contains twenty papers of seed.

25 CENTS PER PACKAGE.

KING'S IMPROVED CORN.

At the Georgia State Experiment Station this corn was tested with 15 kinds. The purpose of the trial was to find out which variety would make the largest quantity per acre, under same conditions.

Result: King's beat 15 other kinds, producing, with same chances identically, 50 per cent. more than some of the improved varieties.

This corn is a large white kind—makes excellent bread. Produces well on poor land.

Price: 25 CENTS PER PACKAGE.

Grand Combination Offer

1 package of King's Improved Cotton, 1 package of King's Improved Corn, and 20 papers of best Garden Seed, described above—all for 25 cents.

HILLEY—ELANOR E. KINNAAW was born in Yazoo county, Miss., March 9, 1843. Very early in life she professed religion and joined the M. E. Church, South. In 1870 she married J. E. Ferguson, whose death a few years after left her with a daughter, who has been her comfort in her widowhood. In 1883 she married a second time, choosing as her life companion F. A. Hilley, whom she had known for many years. Her death occurred Jan. 8, 1894, at her home, at Homer, La.

It was the privilege of the writer and family to make their last dining at her hospitable board before leaving Homer for their new field to which they had been assigned. She was at that time confined to her bed with grip, the apparent mildness of which gave her friends no great solicitude. The conversation about soul-saving was entered into by herself, and the greatest desire for the promotion of the Master's cause was expressed by her.

Having known Sister Hilley for near twenty years, I speak not by hearsay when I express the belief that she was one of God's consecrated few. There was never a work of mercy, never a labor of love, but she was ready with her heart, her head, and her hands. She was "fervent in spirit," and though feeble—for many years almost an invalid—she wrought much for God and humanity. Modest, almost to a fault, she never obtruded herself into any place, but when taken in, was never excelled by the most active one. Such a life as hers needs no testimony. She died well because she lived well.

May God make her children such as she, and keep them through this sore trial!

J. A. PARKER.

Lake Charles, La.

ROBINSON—Sister SALLIE D. ROBINSON (nee Baskerville) was born of a good old Virginia parentage in that State, May 18, 1858. She removed in early life with her parents to the State of Mississippi, where she finished her happy pilgrimage, having sweetly fallen asleep Jan. 4, 1894.

Sister Robinson had been a consistent member of the M. E. Church, South, for several years, and together with her devoted husband, Bro. H. A. Robinson—to whom she was married at Winona, Miss., April 2, 1879—enjoyed all the sweets of a happy Christian wedlock and consecrated home life. To this union were born five bright and promising children, all of them and their father surviving to mourn the loss of their departed loved one. The children have all been taught by their godly parents to love the Savior, and all who are old enough are happy and consistent members of the church of their mother's choice.

Weep not, lond husband and loving children, as those who have no hope, for your angel wife and mother only occupies a higher department of God's holy church and awaits your coming. Well do you know how that she triumphed in Jesus' name while lingering between glory and glory.

W. L. ANDERSON.

BOWMAN—Mrs. MARY BOWMAN (nee Cox) departed this life Dec. 30, 1893, after an illness of six days' duration, and was buried at Fletcher Chapel, Dec. 31, 1893.

Sister Bowman was an earnest Christian woman, especially in her home life. She was born in St. Louis, Mo., June 27, 1841; was educated by her mother, Mrs. H. Cox, finishing her education in Philadelphia, Pa.; was married to John W. Bowman, Nov. 5, 1860. She has been a close Bible reader for thirty-three years. She accepted the Bible literally. To her it was the sword of the Spirit. She joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1870. Since then it has been her custom to read a chapter in her Bible and pray with her family daily. She had charity for all and ill will for no one. She could never bear to hear sacred matters made light of, and was a devout Christian, her Bible being marked throughout.

She was an invalid for over one year, but never complained; was always patient in her suffering, saying it was God's will. She leaves a devoted husband and four children to mourn their irreparable loss. Her funeral was preached at Fletcher Chapel to a large concourse of friends and relatives.

McCANLESS—It is indeed a melancholy duty to contemplate the death of the young, the gay, the beautiful. When we see the aged, the infirm stricken and die, we feel melancholy, but it is a sadness which can be comforted, as it is meet and proper that the weary pilgrim should cease to dwell in a world that has lost all its charms. But to see a young girl in the midst of life and health cut down is indeed a mournful spectacle, and causes us to question, Why were the angels sent so soon to bear her away? Yes, MAUD MCCANLESS has gone from us; "but we do not call that dying when we mark the virgin blossom of the bursting spring drop from the tree." 'Tis but an upward step in nature. So when the lives of promise fall 'tis the precursor of immortal growth. Gone are the blossoms, but the fruit remains.

"The casket breaks, the jewel still survives." O, think to what a blissful land we have consigned the loved one! The gathered flower is often the exotic, more at home transferred from earth, to bloom in genial climes, where tempest is unknown. It is useless to dwell upon the many excellencies of Maud. Her sweetness of temper, her gentleness of manner, her purity of mind, her nobility of soul made her a favorite with all, and those who knew her best loved her most. Her pathway to the tomb was cheered by the blessed consolation of religion.

To her loved ones we would say: Why weep for the beautiful flower? Dark though the present be, and the lowering clouds o'er-canopy thy head; yet turn and see the guiden cloud-bar in the gleaming west. Cling to his promise, uttered not in vain: "At even-tide it shall be glorious light."

"In the cold, moist earth they laid her,
Where the frost had cast the leaf,
And wept that one so lovely
Should have a life so brief."

Resolved, That we, as a League, feel our great loss, and, while bowing in humble submission to the Lord's will, we earnestly pray him to help us emulate her noble, Christian example.

Resolved, That we hereby extend to the bereaved family our Christian sympathy and prayers. "There is no key to these dark letterings, we can not read them through our blinding tears. Here we have only partial links, He has the whole chain unbroken in His hands, and this we know—it is enough for us: Nothing comes wrong that comes from God."

Resolved, That a page in our minute book be set apart to her memory, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Tupelo Journal and the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

BIRDSONG—JASEN J. BIRDSONG was born in Sussex county, Va., Nov. 9, 1810, and died at his home in Edwards, Miss., Jan. 3, 1894. In early manhood he came to Hinds county, Miss., and here he spent the remainder of his life. He became a member of the church about forty years ago, and for near that entire period he was a faithful and efficient steward. His pastor always found in him a friend and willing helper.

All the virtues of a good citizen were conspicuous in his character. His house was the home of hospitality; he was kind to the sick and poor, and ready in the discharge of all those offices which make the world better. He had many friends, and his neighbors trusted in him. His life was given to agricultural pursuits, in which, managing his affairs with discretion, he attained much success.

His old age was greatly blessed, for his children were about him, and their children, all striving with one another in kind ministrations to him. The evening of his life was protracted, yet exempt from many of the infirmities of age, and full of peace and sunshine. His faithful wife had preceded him eleven years to the better land, but her beautiful life, which was a benediction to all about her, was still an inspiration to him, and he lived in hope of a reunion above. His last illness was marked by that patience, resignation, gentleness and faith which the grace of God alone can give.

E. H. MOUNGER.

YOUNG—Died, Dec. 3, 1893, in New Orleans, LUCY E. YOUNG. Many hearts were made sad by the death of this young Christian. She was beloved by all for the beauty of her character. A loving daughter and sister and earnest worker for the Master has been taken away, but for a surer heritage, "an heavenly one."

Some time before she died she realized that death had set his seal on her, and talked with sweet resignation of the end. There were no vain wishes that her fair young life might be lengthened to bless her home and friends; but, with a beautiful trust in God, she cheered her loved mother with the hope of a reunion in heaven. She left messages to those she loved, which will be treasured as coming from one who had, by faith, already entered heaven. God comfort the lonely mother, and may "the treasure in heaven" help her to bear the burden of life! A father and brother, too, mourn her loss. God's ways are inscrutable, but "none of them that put their trust in him shall be desolate." In joy or sorrow, pleasure or pain, always "underneath are the everlasting arms."

A FRIEND.

REAGAN—JOHN HENDERSON, only son of Thomas A. and Eliza E. Reagan, died at Union, Newton county, Miss., Dec. 24, 1893, aged eight years and four months.

Again has the death angel visited this home. Only about one year ago he came and claimed a loving daughter just blooming into womanhood. Weep not for little Johnnie, my dear parents, for his is only one more happy, glorified spirit that you have at the "beautiful gate" "waiting and watching for you." May God bless you and help you to meet him there. "There shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying."

W. M. WILLIAMS.

Decatur, Miss.

WOMBLE—CARY ELLIS, son of H. H. and Nina May Womble, was born March 25, 1891, and died Jan. 30, 1894.

Yes, our darling little Cary is gone to join his angel sister and dwell with our Savior who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

Grieve not, fond parents; your darlings have been borne to their eternal home.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

Asthma can't be cured? Oh! yes it can. Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar will do it. I know it because it gave me relief. Every winter I was troubled with asthma, especially if the weather was damp, suffering severely. I took about six bottles of Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and am completely cured. It is the remedy for asthma.

CHAS. HEINES,
500½ Chippewa Street, New Orleans, La.

Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar is a sure and speedy cure for coughs, colds, catarrh, bronchitis and consumption, and gives immediate relief in cases of croup and whooping-cough. Try it. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

No mineral water will produce the beneficial results that follow taking ONE or more of "BEECHAM'S PILLS" with a glass of water immediately upon arising in the morning.

Painless. Effectual. Covered with a tasteless, soluble coating.

Cotton At 16 cts. Per Lb.
SEED FOR TRIAL PURPOSES ONLY.
WE HAVE EVERY SEED IN EXISTENCE.

There is no Money in Cotton at 8c.
There is an active, strong demand for long staples at 16c. Then why not plant it? Your answer is: Because none of the long staples will make enough to the acre to justify planting them even at 16 cts. per lb.; it is difficult to gin it properly; it is hard to pick out, and lands will not produce staples, and so on.
Inland Sea Island is a long staple cotton in which all objections are removed. It is ENORMOUSLY PRODUCTIVE, easily ginned and no trouble to pick out. You can make it with no extra expense or trouble. See what Mr. Jeff Welborn has to say.

NEW BOSTON, TEX., Dec. 5, 1893.
RICHMOND SEED CO.,
Richmond, Va.:
This is to certify that I had "Inland Sea Island" cotton planted in alternate plots with Sea Island, Allison's Silk, Allen's latest improved long staple, Ozier Silk, Southern Hope, and some other varieties of long lint. The Inland Sea Island was a great deal earlier than any of them, and made one-third more lint per plot (of same size) than any, and double as much as any save one variety (Ozier Silk). While the lint was no longer than the Allen, it was much finer, softer and richer-colored than it or any except Sea Island and Allison's Silk, but it made four times as much per plot as either of these two. * * * I think your Inland Sea Island a big jump forward in the long lint business, because of its Earliness and Prolificness. * * *
Very truly, JEFF WELBORN.

Governor Jackson, of Iowa, says that if the Legislature does not repeal or modify the prohibitory laws of that State, so as to afford relief for the river counties, he will call an extra session. This horrible threat means more money for the legislators and will probably be disregarded.

The official figures of the Pennsylvania election held last week, for Congressman-at-large, show a plurality for Grow, Republican, over Hancock, Democrat, of over 180,000. In 1892 Libby, Republican, was elected Congressman-at-large over Allen, Democrat, by a plurality of about 63,000.

At a recent meeting of the Franklin Institute of Philadelphia Prof. L. M. Hanpt advocated a ship canal from Philadelphia to New York, across New Jersey. He showed the enormous benefits that would accrue to Philadelphia from such an enterprise, and said that it would cost not half as much as the recently opened Manchester Ship Canal.

A Ballot Reform League was formed in this city on Feb. 26. A resolution was adopted reading: "That we favor such reasonable qualification of the suffrage as will exclude those who are not citizens of the United States, paupers, convicted criminals, including those convicted of buying and selling votes, and those too ignorant or thriftless to intelligently exercise the elective franchise, and so govern their fellow-men."

The city council of Atlanta, on Feb. 23, voted aid to the proposed Cotton States and International Exposition, to be held in Atlanta in 1895 to the extent of $75,000. The clearing-house banks of Atlanta have contributed $10 000, and while the directors of the company have not yet made a call for funds, more than $50 000 have already been voluntarily subscribed. A preliminary fund of $200 000 will be asked for from the citizens of Atlanta next week.

The battle over the Bland seignorage bill in the House will go merrily on through this week. Despite the many reverees Mr. Bland has met in his attempts to procure a quorum, he is as determined as ever to fight it out on this line, if it takes all Winter. If he does not succeed, however, in the course of a few days, it is not probable that the speaker and his associates on the Rules Committee will permit his bill to longer block the path of business.

The Central American war seems to be near its end, the capital of Honduras having been captured by the insurgent forces with the aid of Nicaraguan allies. President Vasquez escaped with a handful of followers. Bonilla, the insurgent general, is now the de-facto ruler of Honduras. The termination of this war will be an auspicious event for New Orleans, as she has an immense trade with Central America, which has of course been much interfered with by the war.

Have BEECHAM'S PILLS ready in the household.

AGRICULTURE.

By Rev. J. W. McNeill.

When application was first made to me to fill the position as agricultural editor of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, I hesitated to accept. After, however, canvassing the matter, especially from two points of view, that it might be the cause of increasing the patronage of the paper by having such a department, and again that I might be an instrument of usefulness to the farming constituency of the same; after seeing these matters in the light of duty, I did not feel that I could conscientiously refuse. I want it understood, however, that I use the word "agriculture" in its broadest sense, to include also "horticulture;" for the two are so closely allied that it is not always plain where one begins and the other ends. They are certainly twin sisters, so much alike that they are scarcely distinguishable. I am a farmer; farmers have my sympathies. It will, therefore, be not only a matter of duty, but also a great pleasure, to aid them in any way I can. I shall always be ready to answer, as far as lieth in me, any query propounded to me by them. The farmer has many obstacles in his way to contend with. The better informed he is, the better qualified is he to combat the difficulties in his way. This information he can obtain if he will. The facilities for the same are much in advance of what they were only a few years ago. Agricultural papers are numerous and cheap.

Again, our State experimental stations are furnishing the reports of elaborate experiments, free, to all who apply for them. Farmers are again offered in this paper a chance unusual—a religious and agricultural paper combined. A new departure, yet certainly admissible. In this Dr. Black has shown himself also a friend to the farmer. They certainly have his sympathies. This could well not be otherwise. He was raised on the farm; is a farmer's son. To farmers let me say: Help me to make our agricultural department one of profit and interest. Write for it. Your communications should be short; not of theory so much, but facts and the result of experiments. They shall receive proper consideration according to their merit.

In assuming the editorship of our paper, the question that has puzzled me has been, Where shall I begin? My case is somewhat like that of Dr. C. K. Marshall, who went to a country church to preach to a people to whom he had never preached, and for whom he had a high regard. He began by saying, "Where shall I begin, and when can I stop?" He further said, "I feel like preaching to you a half-dozen sermons in one;" he felt full of preaching. His heart was so full of important matters that he wanted to give that people that he felt like turning loose all he had at once upon them. He only preached two and one-quarter hours on that occasion. It is a question, "Where shall I begin?" The farming season is on us; there are many things crowding the farmer from every direction. Like the old farmer, who had not been to his field for a number of days—a rainy season—on entering it, he found there was not a crop but needed his immediate attention. He says, "Where shall I begin?" He called up his hands, and told them to begin directly in the middle of his farm, and eventually he thought they would find the right place.

Now, some say "a bad beginning makes a good ending"—a proverb for which I have never had much respect; at least, it has not held true in my own experience. There is another exactly almost to the contrary, "A good beginning, the battle is half won." This is what I want—a good beginning.

One promise I make—that is, there shall be an especial effort to make everything I say plain and easily understood. This must suffice for my salutatory.

From Rev. A. D. Miller.

MR. EDITOR: We have been seriously afflicted at our home for the last six weeks. I was sick with grip for some time after my return from Conference; was not able to fill all my appointments, and could visit scarcely any. On Monday after the first Sunday in January, my wife took her bed with grip, which terminated in pneumonia. Then one after another took pneumonia until we had four in bed at one time, and for a long time we had three in bed, and one very severe case of pneumonia. For over six weeks the lights have never gone out, and in the seventh week they are still burning. But, thank God! they are all better now. Though very weak, all are up except our oldest son, who is better and will probably be up soon. He has been hanging between life and death. If it had not been that we have one of the best doctors in the State, who stayed by their beds day and night, and that our kind heavenly Father was so merciful to us, surely some of our loved ones would have died. Dr. J. S. Austin is our family physician and a leading member and steward in our church, and the parsonage is only about forty yards from his home. He can not be excelled in skill and attentiveness. Many preachers and their families will rise up in that day and call him blessed. He has been practicing here at Oak Ridge for about twelve years, and has never lost a case of pneumonia where he was called in time, and has lost only one case I believe at all, and that was one too far gone to take medicine. His good wife also was untiring in her efforts to supply the necessaries for the body. Sister Cameron stayed with us day and night until she was not able longer to wait on us.

Dr. A. K. Barrier, a leading member and steward at Wesley Chapel Church, Phœnix, and a skillful physician, in answer to a call from Dr. Austin, made us a very highly appreciated visit. And then the Grants, Harrises, Hoppers, Alexanders, Rowlands, Stephens, Crouches, Hacklers, Davidsons, Halls, Prof. Foster, James, Harrison, Otho and Felix Austin and Bro. Johnston and others were very kind indeed to us; sending many tokens of their love in the necessaries for the comfort of the body, and also came to wait upon the sick ones.

Rev. F. M. Williams, of Mt. Olivet circuit, made us a short but appreciated visit, and last, but not least, Rev. J. P. Drake, of Edwards, came to us, filling two appointments to the great delight and edification of my people. He made us two visits, helping to wait on the sick ones and encouraging the well. We will not soon forget his sacrifices and his labor of love for us. May God graciously bless all these good people, and may this affliction be a great blessing to us! It is a loving Father's hand that smites, and his smiling will only drive us nearer the cross. A. D. MILLER.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury,

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

PERFECT THROUGH FAITH.

God never would send you the darkness
If he left you could hear the light;
But you would not cling to his guiding hand
If the way were always bright;
And you would not care to walk by faith,
Could you always walk by light.

'Tis true he has many an anguish
For your sorrowful heart to bear,
And many a cruel thorn-crown
For your tired head to wear;
He knows how few would reach heaven at all
If pain did not guide them there.

So he sends you the blinding darkness,
And the furnace of sevenfold heat;
'Tis the only way, believe me,
To keep you close to his feet,
For 'tis always so easy to wander
When our lives are glad and sweet.

Then nestle your hand in our Father's,
And sing, if you can, as you go;
Your song may cheer some one behind you
Whose courage is sinking low;
And, well, if your lips do quiver—
God will love you better so.

The Faculty of Millsaps College.

For the following sketches and the accompanying cuts we are indebted to the New Orleans Picayune:

REV. DR. W. B. MURRAH,

president of Millsaps College, has demonstrated his eminent fitness for the responsible position to which he has been called. Well educated, and for a number of years a college professor, he is ardently devoted to the cause of higher Christian education. His father, the late Dr. William Murrah, long a minister in Alabama, but later in life a member of the North Mississippi Conference, was a man of great intellectuality, and a preacher of remarkable eloquence. The career of his son has been one of growing usefulness and influence. Popular in the pulpit, attractive in the social circle genial in manner, wise in counsel, and always self-contained, he has won wide and well-deserved popularity. His inaugural address, delivered on the occasion of the formal opening of Millsaps College, was exceptionally able and eloquent. In administering the affairs of the institution, he has evinced executive ability of a high order.

ANTHONY MOULTRIE MUCKENFUSS,

professor of natural sciences, was born on Sullivan Island, in Moultrieville, the seaside suburb of Charleston, S. C. He received his school education mostly in that city, but also in Summerville, S. C., and Laurinburg, N. C. After spending four years at Wofford College, Spartanburg, S. C., he received, 1889, the degree of A. B., and the following year the degree of A. M. He was principal of the Dalcho High School, in Marion county, S. C., for years, and resigned that position to pursue advanced work in Johns Hopkins University. Two years were spent in this the intervening Summer being at the University of Virginia. 1893, he was elected to his present position. Besides his specialty, he has pursued post-graduate studies in mineralogy, geology, and German.

WILLIAM LANDER WEBER,

professor of English language and literature, is a son of the Rev. S. A. Weber, D. D., of the South Carolina Conference of the M. E. Church, South. Prof. Weber was graduated from Wofford College, South Carolina, in 1886, with the degree A. B. He spent two years as principal of the Brownsville (Tenn.) District High School, and in 1888 was chosen instructor in the Bingham School, North Carolina, where he taught two years. In 1888, after examination in English and Latin, he received the degree of A. M. from his alma mater. He spent the next year, 1890-91, at Johns Hopkins University, making a special study of English. In 1891 he was called to be acting professor of English in Southwestern University, Texas, whence he was called to his present position in 1892 on the opening of Millsaps College.

GEORGE CRAWFORD SWEARINGEN,

professor of the ancient languages, is a son of the late H. J. Swearingen, of Bainbridge, Ga. Prof. Swearingen received his preparatory training at the Bainbridge Academy, graduated with the A. B. degree at Emory College, Georgia, in 1888, and was engaged the two following years in teaching. In 1890 he was appointed to a fellowship in Vanderbilt University. Here he pursued for two years graduate studies in Latin, Greek and English philology, receiving the A. M. degree in June, 1892. Not long thereafter he was called to a professorship in Millsaps College, and entered upon his duties at the opening of the institution in the following September.

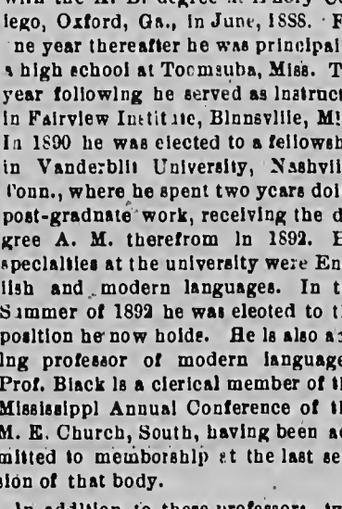
NATHAN ALLEN PATTILLO,

professor of mathematics and astronomy, is a son of the late Rev. N. W. Pattillo, of Alabama. Prof. Pattillo received his primary education in the schools at his home. Before entering college he attended the Lafayette District High School and the Loachapoka High School, both in Alabama. He received his collegiate training at the Southern University, Greensboro, Ala., and was graduated there with the degree of B. S. in 1887. The following session he was principal of the Travis Academy, Havana, Ala. In the Fall of 1888 he returned to the Southern University, where he remained for two years as tutor in mathematics. At the same time he pursued his studies further, and received the degree of A. M. in 1890. During the session of 1890-91 he was principal of Rose Hill Institute, Miss. In October, 1891, he entered the Johns Hopkins University, where for one year he pursued post-graduate courses in mathematics, astronomy and physics. Having been elected professor in Millsaps College, he entered upon his duties there at the opening of the institution in 1892.

REV. MCKENDREE MARVIN BLACK,

principal of the preparatory department, is a son of the Rev. W. C. Black, D. D., editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. He graduated with the A. B. degree at Emory College, Oxford, Ga., in June, 1888. For one year thereafter he was principal of a high school at Toomsuba, Miss. The year following he served as instructor in Fairview Institute, Binnsville, Miss. In 1890 he was elected to a fellowship in Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn., where he spent two years doing post-graduate work, receiving the degree A. M. therefrom in 1892. His specialties at the university were English and modern languages. In the Summer of 1892 he was elected to the position he now holds. He is also acting professor of modern languages. Prof. Black is a clerical member of the Mississippi Annual Conference of the M. E. Church, South, having been admitted to membership at the last session of that body.

In addition to these professors, two assistants have been recently added to the faculty—Messrs. F. M. Austin and J. P. Calhoun. Both gentlemen are close students and eminently qualified for the duties of their positions.



MRS ANNIE DAVIS SMITH,

of Canton, Miss., who gave $2,500 to endow the scholarship to be known as the Jefferson Davis scholarship, was born in West Feliciana, La., and lived in New Orleans until sent to Nazareth, Ky., where she was educated. She married the late Hon. R. C. Smith, of Canton. Mrs. Smith is a grand-niece of the late Jefferson Davis. While this lovely woman has endeavored to avoid all public mention of her personal connection with this benefaction, it is one of those noble acts that excite too much gratification to escape general comment, and it is hoped her delicacy may not be offended by this reference. Those who do good by stealth may blush to find it fame, but can not escape the crowning laurel when discovered, and must take the consequence of their generosity.

COL. W. H. TRIBETTE,

who endowed the W. H. Tribette scholarship in Millsaps College, is a self-made man. He began business in Hinds county as a school teacher prior to the war, served throughout the war, and since the war has been engaged in mercantile business in Terry, and has accumulated quite a handsome fortune. Col. Tribette has lately retired from business. He is a man of noble impulses, has many friends, and enjoys the respect and confidence of the people generally. He is an exceedingly benevolent man, having made contributions to other worthy objects, one of which was the endowment of a scholarship in Mississippi College at Clinton.

Oil the Machinery.

How chary some people are of their words of approval to those who labor or suffer with or for them! We have known children to have their young lives embittered, and the great fountain of their love almost frozen, by the cold, unsympathetic nature of their parents. We have known faithful workers, both in the secular and religious worlds, to almost faint by the way because the meed of praise, which was their due, was withheld.

Most persons are so constituted that sympathy, approval and encouragement are not only pleasant, but absolutely necessary to the fullest development of their powers. There may be a few to whom all this is unnecessary. There may be those who can labor as cheerfully and effectively in the dark as in the light. There may be those who are strong enough to work as diligently when surrounded by icebergs as when basking in the warm sunshine. But such persons are rare. It is perfectly natural that we should crave the sympathy and approval of our fellowmen in all of our righteous undertakings. And very wisely is this so, else, independent of each other, our hearts would very soon be paralyzed by the demon of selfishness.

But how seldom does the hungry soul meet with just that sympathy and approval which is so necessary to its well-being? Two or three striking illustrations of this fact have recently come under our notice. A young person said to us not long ago in a sad, though uncomplaining, tone, 'Mother notices my every failure, but she seldom sees my infrequent successes." Here was a young heart, anxious to do right, striving to excel, but almost crushed because no word of sympathy or approval came to lighten its labors. And yet we can not doubt that mother's love for her child. No doubt she would go to the stake for her offspring. Why, then, does she withhold the word of encouragement that would stimulate the heart of her child more than all else in the world? Does she fail to see its necessity? Or is she afraid her child may become vain?

A young man, who had unfortunately become dissipated, said to us not long ago: "I have made several ineffectual attempts to break this fearful habit of strong drink. I believe I would have succeeded had I received any encouragement. But even my own loved ones, when informed of my purpose of reform, seemed to shrug their shoulders, and say, 'We'll see.' When I had abstained for months, they never spoke one word of approval, and still acted as though they thought each day would be my last sober one." Comment is unnecessary.

One of our most popular and useful preachers once wrote us a very sad letter, of which the following is an extract: "I am very much discouraged about my work. I see very few signs of good accomplished. I fear I am not acceptable to my people, though God knows I have tried hard to do my duty. But I received no words of commendation or approval from them. Perhaps I do not deserve any; but I think I could do better work if I knew that my poor attempts at usefulness were appreciated." Now, in this case we happened to know that his people were delighted with their pastor. They were lavish in their praise of him to another. But, for fear of "spoiling the young preacher," they denied him a great comfort, and one of the strongest incentives to zeal and fidelity.

Dr. Wheeler said in one of his sermons: "I profoundly believe that it is praise deserved and denied that spoils. No doubt there are feeble intellects whom commendation renders feebler. But I should not count it any great loss. But I reckon the chances a million to one that a mind capable of good work will be healthfully stimulated by approval." These are sound words and true.

Let us get over this morbid and senseless fear that we will "spoil somebody" by our words of commendation. If your servant is faithful, speak a word of praise to him. He will be all the better for it. Let not your child be forced to look elsewhere for sympathy and approval when your heart is so full of it for him. If your preacher does you good; if his songs, or prayers, or lectures, or sermons feed your soul, tell him of it. It won't hurt him. He'll sing, and pray, and talk, and preach all the better for it. Let your words of approval be discriminating, honest and hearty, and they will not only bless the recipient, but will leave a benediction on your own heart. In this, as in other cases, "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

The machinery of life would run much longer, and would do better work, if the world was not so sparing in the use of oil.—Southern Advocate.

Warming Up.

BY REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D. D

There are several symptoms of a cold church. One of the most unmistakable symptoms is a frigid prayer meeting. The church thermometer hangs in that room, and when it gets down to zero it makes a Greenland atmosphere. But few attend the service, for a chilly place is never attractive to outsiders. The prayers offered are apt to be languid, formal, without pith or point, and the exhortations are of a stereotyped style that have grown wearisome by long reiteration. The chill of that refrigerator is felt all through the church, even to the Sabbath services; the sermons are turned to icicles, and left lying on the floor. It is no wonder if the pastor's heart grows heavy and his spirit faints. Such prayer meetings are both a cause and an effect of a spiritual declension in any church.

Now, a church is simply a collection of individuals. A declension in spiritual life is an individual's sin, and the only place for repentance and recovery is in the heart of the individual backslider. A church member will often say, "My church is cold," when he would hit the nail on the head by confessing honestly: "My own heart is cold, and my own spiritual life is becoming barren. It is I that need a revival." What is the cause of that brother's low spiritual temperature? Precisely the same reason that the weather is cold on this January morning. Yonder sun is as hot a furnace to-day as it is in the middle of July; but our globe lies at a different angle towards the sun from what it does in midsummer. The change is not in the sun, but in our position towards the sun.

God never changes. The Holy Spirit is promised to-day to those who seek aright as abundantly as he was promised to the apostolic church. The reason why a Christian is cold, or why a church gets frozen up, is that they have swung away from Jesus Christ, and have put themselves into the same position towards him that our globe has towards yonder solar furnace. When a church member becomes worldly and indifferent to his spiritual duties, he throws himself out of the life-giving warmth and out of the sunlight of Christ's countenance. His Winter is of his own making; his sins have sent him down below zero. While in that condition he has no "joy in the Holy Spirit," no power in his prayers, and no influence in drawing sinners to Christ. In fact, he needs to be re-converted himself before he can do anything to convert others.

The first duty of a cold Christian or a cold church is to confess backsliding sincerely and penitently, and to get back to Christ. Let him reopen his closet door and go down before his Savior with Peter's penitential spirit. Let him lay hold of neglected duties. The Master is saying to him: "I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love; repent, therefore, and do thy first works." As soon as any cold church member puts himself into a sincerely humble and penitent attitude towards Christ, and says, "Now, Lord, what will thou have me to do?" the blessing will descend upon him. A fresh inflow of Christ's promised Spirit will rekindle his love, awaken sympathy for perishing souls, inspire his zeal, and bring him up to that steady enthusiasm which is the normal condition of every healthy working Christian. He has been all along quenching the Holy Spirit; and now he is ready to co-operate with the Holy Spirit.

It is a well-attested fact that revivals commonly begin in a few hearts—sometimes in a single heart. Dr. Spencer, in his admirable "Pastor's Sketches," tells us that an excellent old lady in his church once stopped him and said to him, "A revival is coming!" On being questioned as to the reason for her prediction, she replied that every day she overheard the fervent prayers of a lame old deacon who lived just behind her garden. "If he can't leave his house and work," said she, "he can pray, and his prayers will be answered." Dr. Spencer records that a revival did come, and more than a hundred persons in his congregation were "born of the Spirit." The first revival I ever had in my first charge began with the faithful conversation of a young girl with a young man. The godly mother of the youth came to me with her heart full, and I proposed a special prayer service that very evening in her house. She and I went out and invited our people, and it was the most wonderful meeting I had ever attended. The Holy Spirit descended upon us, not in drops, but in a deluge. A few hearts on fire with the love of Christ will kindle a whole church.

Sometimes a pastor's heart gets into such a holy flame that he changes—by God's blessing—the atmosphere of his church. When Dr. Thomas H. Skinner was pastor of the Arch Street Church, Philadelphia, he got his elders together, and they sought a baptism of fire from heaven. It came, and it spread through the whole congregation. Charles G. Finney used to get into a glow himself, and then "the fire burned." I am now reading the lately published "Diary and Letters" of my beloved friend, the late Dr. Andrew A. Bonar, of Glasgow, the biographer of McCheyne. The book shows that he kept up an anthracite heat in his ministry by perpetual prayer. He had an immense power of the knees. On a certain Saturday he writes in his diary, "Desire appeared to me all day to be prayer smoking as incense in my heart." It was the same with McCheyne. The walls of his study were witnesses of his prayers, and he lived before his flock just as he prayed before his God.

Much depends on the kind of fire that is used, if a church is to be warmed up. A lucifer match of mere human effort may start a bonfire of pine shavings; but as in the case of Elijah at Mount Horeb, "the Lord is not in the fire." Don't send first for any man; send for the Holy Spirit. Reliance on the best man or measure is fatal. Religious machinery ends in empty clatter unless the "living Spirit is in the wheels." Jesus Christ promises to his faithful followers the baptism of the Holy Ghost and of fire. The humblest private Christian may have that as truly as the most eloquent pastor or evangelist. God answers honest prayer and hard work. Whenever the Spirit kindles a spark, co-operate with him, and fan it into a flame. Genuine revivals often have small beginnings. Have you a seed of heavenly fire in your soul? Then go out and warm others!—Exchange.

THE PANICKY MAN.

Whenever there's trouble in this thing or that,
No matter how distant the place,
When somebody says that finances are flat,
Or that war signs are easy to trace,
The average person would stick to his task,
Still doing the best that he can
To keep things as well as it's reason to ask—
But along comes the panicky man.

With significant looks and a voice that is low,
He hints at disheartening things;
His "You mightn't have thought it, but now,
don't you know"—
In mournfullest minor he sings.
Though full of good cheer and contentment at morn,
Your task for the day you began,
You'll presently almost regret you were born—
For along comes the panicky man.

Shall people be led by the raven whose note
Is the moaning of idle despair?
Shall mere puny Terror take Thrift by the throat,
And Courage her mission forbear?
Not so; for the public is wiser to-day;
It has hit on a different plan;
For 'tis well understood that the sensible way
Is to avoid the panicky man.

—Washington Star.

"Criticism."

In a recent issue of the Tennessee Methodist, Rev. W. T. Poyntner, of the Kentucky Conference, has a two-column article under the above caption, in which he scores some heavy blows at our Sunday-school periodicals. Referring to the lessons of the present quarter, he says: "Not a word about the controversy as to the authorship of the book—Genesis; no discussion of the modern theory of evolution and its effects on the interpretation of the chapter in hand; . . . no anything. . . . These editors are doing exactly what we charge upon the Romish clergy—keeping the people in ignorance of what is going on in the great world of thought."

Pretty heavy charge, I dare say! The General Conference should put that set of editors out, by all means, if the charge be true. Let it be said that Methodism is following in the tracks of Rome—never! But that it is true is most emphatically denied. Methodism was born in a college. She has always believed in educating the masses, and has done more in that line than any ecclesiastical force the world has ever seen. But all things human must have a limit, the Sunday-school not excepted; and it strikes me that to branch off in the direction the brother suggests is going a little too far. Besides, there is nothing like "sticking to your business," and we have never understood that it was the business of Methodism to teach modern theories, but, to the contrary, "primitive holiness."

Because our Quarterlies do not contain a discussion of evolution, and such like, our critic says they contain nothing. Then evolution is superior to Christianity!

It is to be feared that some of our preachers are thinking so much about the authorship of Genesis and the effect of evolution that they sometimes forget that they were not called to discuss Darwin and his theories, but to preach "Christ and him crucified." It is sad—it is sickening—to see a man, called of God to preach, get up in the pulpit on the Lord's holy day and, instead of pointing men to Christ, harp on modern theories. Such preaching (?) does not satisfy the soul that is hungering and thirsting after righteousness. It is not conducive to edification; it does not strengthen the faith of the believer. If such topics are out of place before adults, how much more before children!

Let us learn a lesson from our blessed Lord. Who ever heard of him, for once, trying to prove the genuineness and authenticity of the Scriptures? Imagine him down before an ordinary Sunday-school of children and half-grown young people discussing "modern evolution." True, he "taught as one having authority," but may we not learn from this to accept the Word of God as truth without so much arguing and proving? Not that I would cut off all studies along these lines—I believe they should be studied—but I maintain that we, as Christian ministers and teachers, can not afford to spend the precious Sabbath hours in this way when men are dying for a want of a saving knowledge of Christ.

Then, there are books and magazines, cheap, and ably edited by Christian men. He that would may study them, but let the pages of our Sunday-school periodicals gleam with divine truth as it came, newly coined, from the mind of the Infinite One.

Let our children be taught that the Bible is the Word of God, pure and undefiled; that its teachings are to be believed, its promises accepted, and that upon it they may base their hopes of heaven and immortal glory.

That our Sunday-school editors should be put down in the same category with the Romish priesthood simply because they do not discuss evolution in the periodicals, is a scandal. They could not give the subject proper treatment in their limited space; and how many Sunday-school teachers are there who are able to give proper teachings along such lines?

Away with such ideas as our severe critic advances. Do not contaminate the minds of the youths by parading before them a lot of trash that Mr. Darwin and some others are disposed to call great ideas. Let the mind be developed, indeed; let it study the mighty problems of life; let it expand and reach out till the borders of immensity are within its grasp; but, with all this getting of knowledge, let it be taught to the generations of the coming ages that the Bible is the embodiment of truth. If it gives evidences that Moses wrote Genesis, then teach that Moses wrote Genesis, and teach it as though there never was a man who would dare dispute it. Teach what the Bible says, offers and promises; not what man says, thinks and supposes.

Church Papers Again.

MR. EDITOR: I am thankful to you for your editorial on "The Church Paper" in the last issue of the ADVOCATE. I am satisfied that it will do good. It is no uncommon thing to hear people—even members of the church and leading ones, too—say our church papers are too high. They are honest in their belief, and, therefore, all the reasons given in favor of the present prices of church papers do not satisfy them. They know that a change is necessary. The age demands that church papers should be cheaper. They must be cheaper in order to compete with secular papers. It is hard for a worldly-minded member of the church to give two dollars for one church paper when he can get two of the best secular weeklies for the same amount. Few of the worldings, indeed, who will take our church papers at their present prices, and consequently the very people who need them worst are the very people that will not give the present prices for them. These people we must reach with our religious papers if it be possible, and one of the likely possible ways that I can see, is to lessen their prices, and this, as you have stated, can not be done very well without a daily. This being true, let us have the daily. The reading people generally, both religious and irreligious, want the news before it is more than a day old, much less a week, and those that can afford it, are going to have it if they have to get it from a secular daily. Now, let us have a religious daily. It is necessary that we should. I want a daily in my family, but I do not want one that I do not wish my family to read every column. I do not want one that is filled up with slander, murder, pugilists, theaters, horse-races, lies, advertisements of quacks, nostrums, etc. I do not want one that dares to insult my Lord by a Sunday issue. Of all the dailies of which I have any knowledge there is not one that I want my children to read. Is this not a sad state of things in this Christian country of ours? It is; and will our church with all her resources remain still? Surely not. Surely the patrons of the ADVOCATE will rise up with a united voice and say, We must, we will, by God's help, have a clean, religious daily put lished every day except Sunday. May the Lord move our church to take immediate steps for a clean, religious daily that will furnish our people, old, young and all, with clean, religious and secular news! Let us have a daily Advocate, and then we can have a cheap weekly Advocate Now, Doctor, please do us the kindness of letting it be known what is necessary for each subscriber to pay yearly and the number of subscribers necessary in order to start a daily Advocate. Put me down as one subscriber to the daily Advocate with the promise of doing my best to secure others.

Children of Mississippi.

The responses to Bro. Cooper's call are coming in, and we are going to build that Hall, and we are not going to be long at it either. So hurry up and send on the money and let us get the work done. That Hall ought to be ready by the first day of next September. Here, read this letter; it is a good one:

Lee P. O., Jefferson Co., Miss., Feb. 19, 1894.
Dr. I. W. Cooper:

I read your call on the children of Mississippi to help build a Hall at Millsaps College for young men. I send one dollar, and hope every Methodist girl and boy in Mississippi will help. I would like it to be called Watkins Hall for our first agent.

Your little friend,
HANSON ROWAN.

Now, that is what I call a good letter. It has the right ring about it. The name suggested is a good one. Bro. Watkins is a fine young man, and his father was a great and good man. He was known, loved and honored by all the Methodist people of this State. Send on the money and suggest names for the Hall. This is a noble work, and God will bless you in it.

Maj. Millsaps will double every dime and dollar you send. Strike now while the iron is hot. Build the Hall, and it will be full by next Christmas. God bless the boys and girls of Mississippi. Your uncle,

GILDEROY.

In Memoriam.

Rev. George Elexis Greene was born in East Feliciana parish, La., Nov. 17, 1862, and died July 27, 1893, at the parsonage in Big Cane, La. He was the youngest son of George E. and Henrietta M. Greene. His father was a Northern man and moved to this State about the year 1853, settling in the town of Jackson, La., where soon after he married Mrs. Henrietta M. Fishburn. Up to the time of the Civil War they were in easy circumstances. The father died during the War, leaving the mother with five little children, the eldest a boy of nine years, the youngest, George, the subject of this sketch, something over a year old. Those were dark days for the widowed mother and orphan children. Within five months after the death of the father two of the little children (girls) also died. Never losing heart, her faith firmly fixed in God, the mother toiled on, trying to make a living, and, at the same time, store the minds of her children with useful knowledge. Little George was kept regularly at his books, the mother insisting on thoroughness in all his studies. The lessons learned from this were apparent in after life. In everything he was thorough, painstaking and exact. His education, begun thus early at home, was continued at Centenary College. He was an A. B. alumnus of the class of 1884. Hard pressed by poverty, but not cast down, thirsting for an education, he worked at the college as janitor, in order to pay his tuition. This, with the assistance of a loan from a kind gentlemen from Texas (himself a graduate of Centenary), enabled him to complete his studies at the college. This loan he afterward repaid with money earned by teaching.

He professed religion at the early age of seven years, but did not formally unite with the church until some time during his attendance at college. He was licensed to preach by the Quarterly Conference of the Bayou Boeuff circuit, Alexandria district, in May, 1888, and was employed by the presiding elder as a supply on the Sugartown circuit for the remainder of that year. He was admitted on trial into the traveling connection in the Louisiana Conference at its session in New Orleans, Dec. 12, 1888, and was appointed to Red River circuit. He served the Vernon circuit in 1890, the Lind Grove circuit, 1891 92.

He was married to Miss Josephine Pickels, of Lamourie, La., July 3, 1889. At the Conference held in Lake Charles, Dec. 14, 1892, he was appointed to the Big Cane and Melville circuit, where he ended his short, but faithful ministerial career, sweetly falling on sleep, July 27, 1893. As a man, he was gentle and unassuming; as a Christian, irreproachable. Above the ordinary in preaching ability, a close student of the Bible, sound in the faith, a model pastor, welcome everywhere. He was universally respected and loved for his uniform Christian bearing and true gentlemanly deportment. Truly a good man has gone to rest.

A Wrongly Named Book.

We observe that a certain book has been recently published under the title, "The Bible of the Coming Century," and is being widely advertised. This book is a history of the Parliament of Religions held at the Columbian Exposition. There is little question that a spirit of comprehension and sympathy between religious sects is a good thing, and, as promoting such wider knowledge and kindlier feeling, the Parliament of Religions was a praiseworthy assemblage. But, to speak of this heterogeneous assembly's theories as constituting "The Bible of the Coming Century" is carrying toleration too far. Toleration must not mean license, and in the eyes of the reverent millions of the Christian world this title must seem a sacrilege. There is but one Bible. Bible, according to philology, may mean "a book" or "the book," but in the acceptance of the absolute custom Bible means nothing except the writings in the two Testaments accepted by Christianity. This is "The Bible" which has been overturned a thousand times, and for which a million substitutes have been offered; and the Bible which still stands as firm and as alone as ever. This Bible and no other will be "The Bible of the Coming Century," and even the most liberal and tolerant must perceive the truth. The Commercial by no means wishes to occupy a narrow position or to express any fanatical or sectarian prejudice, but the one Bible which has been sanctified by the faith of so many millions in the past and in the present, is the one Book to which the name of Bible can be applied without a shock to Christian reverence and an insult to historic fact.—Memphis Commercial.

A Model Quarterly Conference.

The Quarterly Conference of Oxford station was held Feb. 10 and 11, and such a Conference I have seldom had the pleasure to attend. The opening prayer led by Prof. R. W. Jones was a direct appeal to the great Head of the church for aid in all church work and specially for the work that was there before the Conference. We all felt that the Lord was present with us. Then when the pastor made his report on Sunday-schools there was a manifest interest in that great work, such as you rarely ever see. Also when the pastor read the report on the general state of the church, it was evident that the officials had been carefully looking after the whole church thus assisting the pastor in his work. When the sixth question was asked the chairman promptly answered which was evident to an observer that that matter had been carefully studied and that the stewards had made a liberal allowance for the pastor. And in answer to the eighth question more than one-fourth of the allowance was paid, and while the members talked about paying the preachers and the assessments ordered by Conference, the power of the presence of the Spirit was felt, and we felt that it was good to be there. We were not surprised to hear the pastor, in answer to the twelfth question, say that the full assessment for missions had been paid and sent to the treasurer. What a delight to have such men in the church! I believe the church at Oxford is soon to be the model church in the North Mississippi Conference. A fine Sunday-school, good prayer meeting, large congregations, and a very liberal people compose the church at Oxford.

AN OBSERVER.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. W. T. Griffin, P. C., Terry, Miss., Feb. 18: "We are now snugly domiciled in a parsonage built since Conference—the first one ever owned by this circuit—and they have a right to feel proud of it, and are daily showing their appreciation. We have had three deaths in our church within the last month, among them Dr. D. L. Rawls, for many years a prominent physician at Crystal Springs and here. He served a long term as steward, and died in the harness in great peace. Prospects are bright for a great year for the Master. Pray for us."

Rev. B. P. Fullilove, P. C., Mashulaville charge, North Mississippi Conference, Feb. 22: "Our first Quarterly Conference was held on this charge yesterday. Dr. Wier, our presiding elder, was on hand and preached us a fine sermon from Psalms cill, 18. We all enjoyed his sermon very much. Mashulaville charge is moving up. She made the finest financial report of any year in the past. Our parsonage is now undergoing some repairs. We are getting our work very well in hand. The outlook is very fine for a gracious revival throughout the entire circuit, for which we ask the prayers of all the brethren."

Rev. H. Armstrong: "Perhaps it is high time to send you a field note. It seems to us that we never had as many bad Sundays altogether before. Considering the weather, however, the Sunday-school had been well attended, and our congregations at preaching have been very satisfactory. Our church here is a place of resort. The Wednesday night prayer meeting, the ladies' prayer meeting, the parsonage and home mission society, and other things, call our people together often. The men, as a general thing, are not active in church work. The working bees in this hive are the ladies. We have some young men in the church here who promise well. Not many ADVOCATES taken, but we persistently urge the matter upon our people, and expect to succeed."

Rev. J. W. Raper, Nettleton, Miss., Feb. 15: "We are moving on finely on the Nettleton circuit. This is our first year here. We think the outlook is good. We were kindly received, and feel sure that we have a good people to serve, but we know that there is a great deal of work to be done. It seems likely that there will be a wedding soon. The world and the church will marry. The wedding will be a surprise to the world, for the world had never thought that the church would marry him. The devil has good workers in his service. If we, the church, were as energetic as the devil's forces, the world would have had the gospel long ago. If we had more prayer and less complaining of hard times, times would be better and the church more prosperous. We are looking, working and praying for a great revival in the churches on this charge this year. To this end we ask an interest in the prayers of the brethren."

Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, Greenville, Miss., Feb. 28, 1894: "We have had a great revival in Greenville. Between ninety and a hundred conversions and reclamations. There will be thirty-five additions to our church on profession of faith. Twenty had been received before the meeting began, making fifty-five since Conference. The church was divided into factions, but now it is unified. Strife has been overcome by love. We all love God and love each other. We are well organized for work and an aggressive spirit prevails. Bro. W. M. McIntosh was with us ten days. He is a good man and full of the Holy Ghost. He preaches repentance according to the Scriptures; regeneration by the Spirit for the sinner and complete consecration for the Christian. Such a work of grace has never been done in the Greenville Church. We thank God and press forward for still better things. Come to see us."

Rev. Eugene Johnson, Batesville, Miss., Feb. 27: "I commenced a meeting at this place on the eleventh instant that continued to increase in interest and power until the entire town was brought more or less under its influence. Bro. J. A. Whitehurst reached us Monday night and did all the preaching the remainder of the meeting. He declared the whole counsel of God, and his gospel message was in demonstration of the Spirit and of power. Sinners were pricked to the heart and cried for mercy, and worldly church members had their consciences quickened to such an extent that they promised to consecrate themselves unreservedly to the service of God. Nine joined the Methodist Church and some connected themselves with other churches. The devil made a vigorous and persistent fight, mustering all his forces to counteract the good that was being done, but God gave us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ, to whom we give all the glory and praise now and forever. Amen."

Rev. J. H. Foreman, P. C., Coffadelah, Miss., Feb. 24: "We are beginning our second year's labor on Neshoba circuit. We have plenty of work before us, but prospects are encouraging. Our first Quarterly Conference was held at Hester's Chapel, Feb. 10 and 11. Our much beloved presiding elder was present in the spirit of Christ, with that usual smile on his face, and preached two very fine sermons appreciated by all that heard them. We had a very pleasant quarterly meeting occasion. The assessment was made, and raised $25. This is encouraging to the preacher in charge. Bro. Vanhook from the Linwood circuit was present and seemed to enjoy the occasion very much. We commenced last year determined to pay for a parsonage; one had been bought, but not paid for. We were often discouraged, and yet not discouraged; but we took the matter to the Lord in prayer, and we succeeded. We now have a nice little parsonage on Neshoba circuit, located as near the center as it could be put. It has four rooms and two brick chimneys; now the next thing in order is to ceil it and paint it and we will have a good home for the preacher at Neshoba. We contemplate ceiling it this year. We have already added some valuable improvements this year, and expect to continue to improve as long as we stay here. We would like to see everything on the parsonage lot complete before we leave it. We are at work and expecting a great revival on this charge this year. Pray for us."

Rev. H. C. Morehead, Sardis, Miss., Feb. 22: "As we close the first round on this district, and prepare for the second, perhaps a few lines for the ADVOCATE will not be without value. The preachers—a noble, heroic, and self-sacrificing band of men—they come promptly to their fields of labor, and have begun work with such zeal and determination as is prophetic of large and gracious results. There is delightful and inspiring harmony existing all around. While the people of the different charges think they have the 'biggest preacher,' the brethren, in the main, are pleased with their pastors. The quarterly meetings have developed two existing evils: 1. Scarcity of family altars; 2. The failure of our people to take and read our Advocates. We are in imminent danger at these points. One pastor reported eighty-six families visited, and only five taking any of the Advocates and holding family prayers. Doctor, sharpen your quill; 'cry aloud and spare not.' There is an observable and painful difference in the reports of the Official Boards at the Conferences for the support of the ministry. While some have reported in full, others have done less, and still others next to nothing; and all of this with the people very much in the same condition in each and all of the charges. We very much need stewards who feel they are authoritatively called to this important work by the church of God—men who will prepare themselves for their work, just as the preacher must prepare for his work if he succeeds. Wherever our people are faithful to their vows, and loyal alike to God and the church, we are doing well. We think the outlook is good, but we greatly need an increase in the number of thoroughly consecrated, working men and women. To this end we are working and praying."

Rev. J. H. Mitchell: "I have made the first round on the Kosciusko district, and have gotten a considerable taste of presiding elder life. Have traveled eight hundred and fifty-four miles over hills and valleys, mud and swamp, the most of it in my buggy. The preachers are all at their places. I doubt if any district was ever manned with more faithful, painstaking and courageous preachers. They are full of hope and energy, pushing the work the best they can. This is a better district than I thought in many respects. It is capable of being one of the best, and we hope to see it developed to that point. The great need is a genuine revival of religion—a revival that will result in family religion, church building, Sunday-schools, reading of church literature, and a proper support of the institutions of the church. A failure at these points is not for the lack of means (for there is plenty in this country, and they are able to do anything they want to); it comes from a want of disposition. There are many delightful features about the presiding eldership; the association with the brethren and their families every week to me is very pleasant. My happiness is only marred by the meager support that many of them receive from year to year. But they are brave and true, ready for every good word and work, and in some way manage to keep up with their finances. I don't know how Methodist preachers ever happened to be put down as poor financiers—they are the best in the world. We are going to do the best we can to bring up this district on all the lines. We are keeping the ADVOCATE before the people. It is in favor with its readers."

Rev. F. B. Ormond, P. C., North Kemper circuit, Mississippi Conference, Feb. 15: "At the last session of the Mississippi Conference, held in the town of Hazlehurst, Bishop Key saw fit to appoint me to North Kemper charge. I left Hazlehurst for Sumterville, Ala., to visit my parents, where I spent a quiet, but pleasant Christmas. On Monday, Jan. 1, I left Why Not (where I preached the day before) after having said 'good-by' to friends and brethren. I shall always remember the good people of Why Not and their kindnesses to me during the eighteen months of my pastorate on that charge. May God's blessings rest upon them all! Reaching Meridian about ten o'clock Monday morning, I spent the day and night very pleasantly with friends and relatives. Tuesday, Jan. 2, I boarded the M. and O. train at Meridian for Scooba. From the latter place I went to DeKalb via Scooba and DeKalb mail route, reaching DeKalb about 11:30 o'clock on the second day of January. From Tuesday, Jan. 2, to Friday, Jan. 5, I had a fight with the chicken-pox at the home of Rev. R. A. Breland, pastor in charge of DeKalb circuit. During my illness Bro. Breland and wife treated me very kindly, as they always do whenever I visit them, which is very much appreciated by this scribe. But I am digressing somewhat. Although the weather has been inclement (only one pretty Sunday this year), I have failed to meet only one Sunday's appointment. Our first Quarterly Conference was held at Mt. Pleasant Church on Feb. 10 and 11. Bro. Little, our presiding elder, being unavoidably delayed, did not reach us in time to hold the Conference. Arrived just as the twenty-sixth question was called. It fell to my lot to hold it. Bro. Little's sermon on Sunday, Feb. 11, was full of gospel truth, and was enjoyed and appreciated by all the congregation, unless we except a class of young men and ladies who spent the time during the sermon in giggling and laughing at what I know not, and very much doubt their knowing. Over two months of the new Conference year gone, and what have we done? How rapidly time flies! Only a few more years and the places that now know will soon know us no more forever. [illegible] the hand that holds this pen sooner or later, be cold in [illegible] Lord, 'teach us to number our [illegible] that we may apply our heart [illegible] wisdom.' Pray for me, brethren, I may be a blessing to the people of North Kemper circuit and [illegible] blessing to me. My heart's desire for these people is that they may [illegible] wiser and better by my presence, that this part of the world may be made better, spiritually, by [illegible] been sent here by the appointers. O God, may every [illegible] this year be sanctified by the [illegible] I will leave behind me, as [illegible] church on this charge [illegible] afresh 'with the Holy Ghost and fire!' My postoffice is D[illegible]."

Nervousness.

Nervousnoss is a condition not oasy lo define; but tho common use of the lerm in overy-day speeob indioales the commonness of the thing itself. There are few persons, indeed, who have not al some time suffered from irritability ol the nerves and its aocompanying depression.

Il is to bo romembered that this siale always indioales a falling away from the normal standard of health. It should he taken as a dangor-signal, a notice lrom the nervos that something is wrong. The oanse of the trouble is somelimes easily found, as for examplo, lemporary or bahitual loss of sleep; or the difloulty may be more deeply seated and more serious.

Whalever Itl cause, nervousness indioales a lack of nervous force, a lowering of vital energy. Somewhere a tap is loose, and waste is proceeding more rapidly than repair. In such a siate of things, the performanoe of every voluntary action and of every unoonsolous organic function is affeoted unfavorably.

Women suffer from nervonsness mora commonly than men. It is a mistake, however, to think that there is any material difference between lhe nerva struoture of the two sexes. Unfavorable surroundings and occupations acoount for the greater frequency ol nervous diseases among women. Farmers are rarely affected with nervonsness. Farmors' wives aro almost proverbially so affeoted.

Loss of sleep, indigestibn, grief or worry, and many other functional causes may produce nervousness. Doubtless the most frequent oause is lack ol sufficient out-of-door air and di modersle exercise.

It is loo common for nervons people lo think their oomplaint too trivial for a physiolan's notice. Strict inquiry as to the manner of life often reveals errors the oorrection of whioh relieves the condition and averts serious disease.

"Overwork does not kill, hut overworry does," some ono has said, with a measure of exaggeration. Excessive work may no donht shorten life, but constant worry over every-day cares is sure to do so.

Ceaseless cares exhanst the nervous energy. Change of oconpation and of scene allows the nervous forces—the cerebral gray matter—to become reslocked. Nervous matter is actually consumed in performing the details of every-day existence, just as muscular tissne is expended in exercise.

A spring kept at a constant tension surely loses its elasticity, while one which is frequently nnbent does not. The figure is a good one to apply to mental and nervous experience.—Yonth's Companion.

Our Boys and Tobacco.

The boy who starts out in life as a user of tobacco embarks on an nnknown ocean, from which he can never return with the same vigor and strength of body and mind, the same sweet breath and olear eye. He may keep in sight of land for a life-time, and live to be old, bnt il will be only through a oombination of the most favorable circumstances over which he has no control, or oan not foresee. The smoker is likely any time to be wafted ont in the deep waters of serions nervous disease, or injurey his eyes or sense ol taste, or form a love for exciting food, or even drink, or he may go down on tho rocks of some acute disease because he bad wasted his nervous force and bas not vitality enongh lo resisl it. No other known drug except opinm prodnoes suoh pronounoed impression on the nervous system, so concealed as to he nnknown nntil it is too late to repair the injuries. The tobacco user is not so bad as tho inebriate to alcohol, but he comes next lo him, and in many ways he is entilled to more sympathy. The day will oome when there will be as vigorous a crnsade against tobacco as gainsl alcohol—a crusade not for its moderate use, but for its total disuse. It is for women to begin this crusade; few of lhem use the poison, bnl they see their husbands and their children suffer from it, and thoy also suffer from it indirectly. Let ns then nse our influence in every way against it and do all we oan to prevent its use.—Herald of Health.

A Good Bed.

Dr. R. G. Wood, in the Healthy Home, says: The good honsewife will see to it that bedding and olothes have well airing sufficient to abolish entirely the stale, unpleasant odor whioh hangs around a bed, and indicates the presence of an indefinite amount of anlmal effluvia. Clean sheets and sunshine work wonders with beds. If you are compelled to use a modern folding-bed or sofa-bedstead, in order to secure it has ample space for proper airing until sun and air have thoroughly purified it.

Many facts in the above furnish abnndant oause for rejoicing among the preachers and people of our Zion; yet there is one thing that ought to produce humiliation, prayer and amendment. Every enterprise of the church shows a healthy growth during the decade save the average assessment and payment of the faithful pastors, to whose toils and sacrifices this gratifying progress is most largely due. Every interest committed to their hands has been well cared for and developed, and God alone knows how much ont of their slender salaries they have contributed to swell the totals. Ought they not to share proportionately in this general prosperity? Is "not the laborer worthy of his hire"? Have the presiding elders and stewards of the charges done their duty towards these loyal laborers of the Lord? Oh, ye stewards, as ye make the "allowances" for your pastors this year, may God help yon to put yourselves in their places, and do unto them as ye would he done by! There is scarcely a charge in the entire Conference but could pay its pastor from forty to one hundred per cent. more than it assessed for that purpose last year, if the willingness were not lacking. I once asked an assessment of an Official Board of six men. Any one of three of the six could have paid the entire amount without embarrassment—the other three combined could have done so; yet the request caused much grave doubt and discussion. Finally, after weighing carefully the "heavy (?) responsibility," it was agreed that if the pastor would raise the Conference collections, they would "scuffle aronnd" amongst a strong congregation nnmbering one hundred and fifty, and "do the best they could."

As an ardent member of the Mission Board, it is gratifying to note that the largest increase is for our work; yet, when it is remembered that this represents but twenty cents per member for foreign missions, and seven and one-half oents for home missions, there is little room for boasting of increased liberality in this direction.

Our Minutes very much need an Auditing Committee, such as the North Texas has, though it would seem that we elected secretaries enough last session to secure a fairly accurate set of statistics. Under the heading, "Total from All Sources," I notice that many of our preachers failed to render accurate reports. Eucutia charge, for instance, reports $209, when it should be $994. Yazoo City reports $1,745, instead of $3,871. East End, Meridian, shows a total of $1,021, when $2,237 was the amount raised, as I gather from the pastor's stubs before me.

Again, under the heading, "Other Church Property," First Church, Jackson, fails to report Millsaps College, worth about $170,000. Woodville station omits Edward McGehee College, worth $10,000. Biloxi station does not mention the value of the famous camp ground within its bounds, and if Centenary College has a $90,000 endowment, then it ought to be reported at $170,000. There may be other church property unreported that I am not cognizant of, but enough has been given to show that a little more care will make our Minutes much more accurate and satisfactory. J. V. Large as a Dollar

Were the scrofula sores on my poor little boy. They were especially severe on his legs, back of his ears and on his head. His hair was so matted that combing was sometimes impossible. His legs were so bad that sometimes he could not sit down, and when he tried to walk his legs would crack open and the blood start. Physicians did not cure. I decided to give him Hood's Sarsaparilla. In two weeks the sores began to heal up; the scales came off and all over his body new and healthy flesh and skin formed. When he had taken two bottles of

THE CUISINE.

CONDUCTED BY L. A. B.

LEMON JELLY.—Grate the outsides of two lemons and squeeze the juice, add one cnp of sugar, one-half cnp of butter, yolks of three eggs. Beat the eggs, butter, and sugar together thoroughly, then add the juice and grated rind, and put it over the fire, stirring until thick. Mould in any shape you wish. It is very nice.

DELICATE CAKE.—Two cupfuls of white sugar, whites of four eggs, one-half cnpful of butter. Beat these well together. Add one cupful of milk, two and one-half cupfuls of flour, into which one heaping teaspoonful of baking powder has been sifted. Flavor. You may use one cupful of cornstarch in place of the flour, and add half the healen whites of eggs last.

IRISH POTATO PUFF.—Stir two cupfuls of mashed potatoes, two tablespoonfuls of melted butter and some salt, to a fine, light, creamy condition; then add two eggs well beaten, separately, and six tablespoonfuls of cream; beat the whole lightly together, then pile it in rocky form on a dish, and bake it in a quick oven until nicely browned. It will become quite light.

NEAPOLITAN CAKE.—Black Part—One cupful of brown sugar; two eggs, half a cupful of butter, molasses and strong coffee respectively, two and a half cnpfuls of flour, one of raisins, one of currants, a teaspoonful each of soda, cinnamon and cloves, and half a teaspoonful of mace. White Part—Two cnpfnls of fine white sugar, half a cupful of butter, one of milk, two and a quarter of flonr, one of cornstarch, the whites of four eggs and a scant teaspoonful of cream of tartar. Put a layer of dark, then light. Bake in a moderate oven.

APPLE CHARLOTTE.—Cover one-half a box of gelatine with one-half a cup of cold water, and soak for half an hour. Put one cup of sugar with one pound of apples, that have been cored and not pared, over the fire to slowly steam. When the apples are tender, press them through a colander, and, if you find it necessary, yon might add one or two tablespoonfnls of water. Add while hot the gelatine, and a teaspoonful of vanilla; turn this into a basin and stand aside to cool. When cold and partly thick, pnt into it one pint of cream, whipped to a stiff froth. This dessert may be changed by using different kinds of fruit and flavors, always keeping the proportion of gelatine and cream the same.

LEY HOMINY.—To a gallon of shelled corn, add a quart of strong ley. Boil together until the husks begin to come off the corn; rub the grains of corn between the hands, to entirely remove the husk; wash it well, and boil in plenty of water until the grains are soft—it requires long boiling. As water may be needed, replenish with hot water. Boil it in sufficient salt to season. When nearly done, stir it from the bottom to prevent its burning. Before using it, mash it slightly with a wooden mallet, and fry in a small quantity of lard or butter. It will keep for several days in cold weather. Put it in a covered earthen bowl or jar. This is a nutritious dish for breakfast.

A $1 Book for 35c.

Always on the lookout for something that will benefit our subscribers as well as ourselves, we have perfected arrangements by which we are able to make the following very remarkable offer:

To any new subscriber, or to any old subscriber, who will pay his subscription to June, 1895, we will send for thirty-five cents a copy of

THE WHITE RIBBON COOK BOOK.

The publisher's price of which is $1.

What is the White Ribbon Cook Book?

A Collection of One Thousand Original and Revised Recipes and Suggestions. Edited by Kathryn Armstrong. A handsome, compact volume of 320 pages, including 40 blank pages for additional recipes.

It is a first-class book of Cookery and Housekeeping, prepared by a practical housekeeper. It is entirely new; copyrighted 1894. While it is not claimed that it is in all respects superior to all other books, we do claim that any housekeeper, even if she have a dozen other cook books, will find this one worth to her more than the full retail price, and that the author has fully carried out her purpose, "To prove that wine, brandy and spirituous liquors of any kind may be dispensed with, and that no culinary requirement necessitates the introduction of these poisons into any household."

The White Ribbon Cook Book is durably bound in the best quality of cloth (not in paper covers). It is printed on an excellent quality of cream laid book paper. It is cheap only in price. It is one of the neatest and handsomest cook books ever issued, the cover design, in grained and embossed silver, being a specially unique feature.

HOW TO GET THE BOOK.

If you are not a subscriber, send us $2.35, and we will send you the ADVOCATE one year and a copy of the book. If you are already a subscriber, but have not paid up to the time designated (June, '95), send the requisite amount at the rate of $2 a year, or $1 for six months, and send thirty-five cents additional for the book.

The label on your paper will show the time to which you have paid.

Orders will be filled in turn as received and as quickly as possible. Subscribers should wait two weeks before making complaint of non-receipt of the book. As this offer may not last long, it would be wise to send at once.

The Evidence.

The evidence of our Lord's life and death and resurrection may be, and often has been shown to be satisfactory; it is good according to the common rules for distinguishing good evidence from bad. Thousands and tens of thousands of persons have gone through it piece by piece as carefully as ever judge summed up on a most important cause. I have myself done it many times over, not to persuade others, but to satisfy myself. I have been used many years to study the history of other times, and to examine and weigh the evidence of those who have written about them, and I know of no one fact in the history of mankind which is proved by better and fuller evidence of every sort, to the understanding of a fair inquirer, than the great sign which God hath given us, that Christ died and rose again from the dead.—Dr. Arnold, of Rugby.

Zion's Herald wisely says, in a recent editorial: Young friends, do not waste your energy by waiting for occasions! Do not imagine that by-and-by something may arise in your life to call forth any power or faculty which is now willingly dormant, to warm any purpose which is now willingly cold. There will never be nobler occasions, occasions richer in possibility, than those which are waiting your recognition to-day. There will never be grander days in which to live, or noble deeds waiting to be done. Give yourselves to the work which lies at hand. Leave the magnitude of the result with God. Opportunity and duty are always here and now.

The philosophy of this advice lies in the fundamental principle that the duty and opportunity of to day, wisely used, have a vital connection with the work of to-morrow. The young preacher who has brains and devotion, and whose sphere of usefulness to-day is in obscurity in some frontier region, or in a backwoods circuit, if he has good material in him and the Spirit of Christ, will not lament over his seeming "lack of opportunity." His thorough use and wise employment of his current opportunities are vitally related to the so-called larger opportunities of to-morrow. His best policy is to become absorbed in the work of the hour; to prepare for it with all his might; to do it with all possible diligence, as though it was the only work he would ever have to do. Indeed, it may be his one, and only "chance." If he has any others in the future, they will depend, in large measure, on the skill and fidelity with which the humble task of to-day has been administered.—Central Advocate.

The Salt of the Earth.

"Ye are the salt of the earth," said our Savior to his disciples. A strong figure is here used. The world is compared to a piece of animal flesh which has an inherent tendency to putridity. Strong though this language is, it is nevertheless true. As a piece of flesh exposed to the atmosphere will inevitably become putrid unless the aid of an antiseptic is invoked, just so with fallen humanity. There is in human nature an innate tendency to moral rottenness. Sodom and Babylon are names that mark an advanced stage in the putrescent process. What these cities became humanity tends to become. It is not given to us to know the final limits of the process. Our heavenly Father does not allow the process to go on unchecked. As in nature so in grace, he has provided an antiseptic. What salt is to animal flesh, that the gospel is to humanity. Christianity is the great moral antiseptic—the only one. Here we find the end for which the church exists. The church is "the body of Christ." It is the physical organism within which his Spirit dwells. The one great end, then, for which the church exists is that it may save men. To some this may seem trite enough; and yet it needs to be iterated and reiterated again and again in the ears of the men of this generation. Members of the church oftentimes apparently lose sight of the great end of the church's existence. There are those who object to revivals. What is this but objecting to the church's exerting its soul-saving power. To assemble once every Sabbath to be regaled with artistic music and with spoken rhetoric that is "faultily faultless and icily cold"—this seems to be the ideal church life in many circles. To do anything out of the usual routine in order to reach and save men is with some an almost unpardonable sin. We need, therefore, to keep ever before our minds our Savior's declaration that it is the great business of the church to save men. "Ye are the salt of the earth." The church that is saving men from sin—that is the true church. The church that is exerting no saving power upon fallen humanity may be a very delightful and elegant and refined social club; but it is not a church of Christ in the full sense of the term, albeit it may have much that is admirable in its doctrines, polity and services. What terrific force there is in our Savior's declaration concerning a church that exerts no saving power upon the world. "If the salt have lost its savor, it is thenceforth good for nothing but to be cast out and trodden under foot of men." It is a simple fact that salt which has lost its saltness is utterly worthless. Other refuse of the cuisine—whether vegetable or animal remains—may be serviceable in the fields and gardens for fertilizing purposes. Not so with salt. It is literally good for nothing but to be thrown into the street to be trampled upon. This utterly worthless thing is chosen by our Savior to represent a church which does nothing for the salvation of men.

Attention to Strangers.

Much can be done towards building up a church by showing a little courtesy to strangers. Years ago a young man, well raised and pious—a member of a sister church—emigrated from one of the Northern States to a Southern city. He went for several successive Sabbaths to the church of his own denomination in the city, but received no attention whatever. No one ever spoke to him, or seemed to care whether he was in the world or out of it. Finally one Sabbath he attended the Methodist Church. There he received very different treatment. A number of brethren made themselves acquainted with him, inquired who he was, where he came from, etc., and, in short, made him feel at home. Result: he soon became a member of the Methodist Church, and for more than forty years has been at his post ever ready to do his part. We have known many Methodist Churches to freeze out strangers just as this sister church did. The loss in this way has been much greater than is generally supposed. Every church ought to have a committee whose business it is to look after strangers. Where no committee is formally appointed, let some member appoint himself a committee of one to see that every stranger who comes to the church is comfortably seated, and that he does not go away without a friendly greeting from the pastor or other members. We attended a sister church not long since at which every stranger who enters the church door is handed a card having on it a printed request to write his name and address on the reverse side of the card, and hand it to the pastor or one of the ushers. In this way the pastor very soon makes the acquaintance of every stranger who attends. Result: a large attendance and a growing church. Various methods may be adopted. The method is a small matter. The thing itself of looking after strangers is not small. Strangers ought not anywhere to be allowed to leave a house of worship feeling as if they just emerged from an ice-box. There is sometimes a great deal of religion in a hearty handshake. Etiquette ought not to be allowed to stand in the way of ecclesiastical hospitality. While in the pastorate the following colloquy occurred between ourself and a good woman who was one of our parishioners: In answer to an inquiry concerning another good sister, she said: "I do not know her." "Why, I see you and her sitting very near each other every Sunday." "Yes, our seats are close together. Of course, I know who she is, and she knows who I am, but we have never been introduced, and so we never speak." "How long have you both attended this church?" "Nearly twenty years." "So you have both worshiped at the same altar for twenty years and have known each other all the while, but have never spoken to each other for want of an introduction." "Yes, that is true." "Well, you put me in mind of the Frenchman who saw a man fall into a river and ran up and down the bank calling for some one to introduce him to the man in the river so that he might help him out."

The Frenchman in this fact or fable, whichever it may be, seems ludicrous enough; but is he one whit more unreasonable than are those people of whom the good sister above spoken of is a type. Etiquette is a good thing in its place; but it ought never to be allowed to stand in the way of the salvation of souls, or the prosperity of Zion.

A Hint to the Wise.

A highly esteemed brother writes asking us to say something strong on the importance of circulating our church papers. Well, we have had something on that subject in almost every issue for about three months, and we expect to have much more. Anything we may publish on this subject, however, can have no effect upon persons who do not see the paper. The only way in which we can extend the circulation of the ADVOCATE is through our subscribers. If they will speak of the paper to others and make an effort to procure subscriptions, they can accomplish a great deal. Those pastors who have not the time to attend to this matter personally, might do much through others. Some brethren have adopted the plan of employing an agent—a young lady, or other person, who has the time to spare—giving the usual commission. We ought to have fifteen thousand subscribers, and we will have, if those who are friends of the ADVOCATE will do what they can to help us. Many persons who dearly love the ADVOCATE and wonder why everybody does not take it never think to speak a word for it to their friends. Many Methodist people in the patronizing Conferences never see the paper and really know nothing about it.

At Beach Grove.

We spent last Sabbath at Beach Grove by invitation of the pastor, Rev. N. B. Harmon. This was our first visit to this new town on the Mississippi coast. In company with Bro. Harmon, we were hospitably entertained part of the time in the home of Bro. Nathan Brown, and part of the time in that of Rev. W. C. Biberon. We preached Sunday morning to a full house, and at night had the pleasure of hearing an earnest, practical discourse from Bro. Biberon.

Long Beach is unlike the other Mississippi towns on the Gulf coast, in that it is dominated by Protestantism. We think this place has a brilliant future before it. It seems likely to become quite a summer resort for people from New Orleans.

Methodism has been well established here. Through the munificence of Bro. Henry Ware a house of worship was built a few years since under the pastorate of Rev. J. W. McLaurin. Then there were scarcely any members except Bro. Ware and his family. Now there is a membership of more than eighty, with a fine congregation and a flourishing Sunday-school. We were pleased to meet Bro. Ware, who has just returned from a six months' trip to Massachusetts for medical treatment. His health is apparently entirely restored.

A Trend in the Wrong Direction.

The trend of modern fiction in the direction of themes which were forbidden to ordinary speech in good society a few years ago is one of the manifest evils of our time. There was a day when the "French novel" was under the ban of a wholesome public sentiment, the very word being a synonym of uncleanness. That day is past, and one of the chief authors of the era-making fiction of the fleshly school—whose works were once forbidden to be sold in London—was welcomed, feted, and publicly honored in that city last year; indeed Zola has been outdone by some of his English rivals in realistic fiction. Some of the worst offenders in this direction are women; is this a sign of our age? Is this era, marked by a new movement for the elevation and recognition of womanhood, to be characterized also, on the part of any considerable number of literary women, by the manifestation of a lack of all delicacy, scruple, and moral sensibility, and of what once were known as womanly qualities? While many of the women writers of the day are exhibiting the highest ideals of purity and nobility in their writings, there are others, and they are not a few, in England and America, who have set out to achieve notoriety in literary spheres by deliberately choosing sensual topics, immoral plots, and a coarse and impure atmosphere as the staple for their novels. The London Athenæum, in a late review of the literature of 1893, lays special stress on one or two facts in this connection, saying:

Not so very many years ago Mr. George Moore was the only novelist in England who insisted on the novelist's right to be true to life, even when life is unpleasant and immoral; and he was attacked on all sides. Now nearly every literary lady is "realistic," and everybody says, "How clever! how charming!" One of the popular novels of the year treats of a question which even men in club smoking-rooms are chary of discussing; another successful book of short stories is remarkable chiefly on account of the hysterical frankness of its amatory abandonment. Both books are by women.

This phase of the literary products of the time well deserves the attention of all students of men and books.—Central Advocate.

Why No More Revivals.

BY R. TAYLOR, D. D.

A good number of our churches have been revived during the past year. Why no more of them? Is it less important for them to be revived than it was in years past? Are the convictions and conversions that usually accompany or follow a revival on the part of the people of God less essential to the salvation of the impenitent than in days of old? Has God forgotten to be gracious? Is he not rather waiting to revive his work where it has been begun and to begin it where it has not been? And for what is he waiting? Simply for the way in which he usually comes to a church to be prepared.

And who are to prepare that way? Those can not be expected to who constantly say unto the Lord, "Depart from us, we desire not the knowledge of thy ways." Whatever they ought to do, we can not expect them to open up a way for one whom they hate to have come amongst them. It is for the members of the church to prepare the way for the Lord to come among them would they be revived, and every member of it should have a part in that work. The church of Christ should be a hive which has not a drone in it. Not one. For his own sake, as well as for the sake of others, every member of a church should have a hand in preparing the way of the Lord to that church, and he should be as diligent and faithful in doing his part as he would be if he knew the result depended entirely upon his personal fidelity.

One Achan caused the defeat of the men of Israel, and one member of the church may obstruct the way of the Lord.—Exchange.

The Brighter Side.

Religion is meant to be "the brighter side" of human life. What a pity that it should ever become, through human mistakes, or worse, that side of life most deeply shrouded in gloom. It is the brighter side, also, of human experience in a very large sense. Just now, the record of current life, in its general aspect, is more or less a sorrowful one. If the pessimist desires an opportunity, he might surely find it now. But religion is sanctified optimism. It is the bright side in all human things.

A testimony of the truth of what we are saying is found in the fact that times of depression in worldly matters so often become times of prosperity in matters spiritual.

It is the privilege of religious journalism to set in view this brighter side of the very trying year now passing. The secular journalist deals with the secular side. He has to tell of that which so much illustrates the uncertainty of all worldly possessions, the transitory value of every kind of worldly good; of fortunes lost, of reputation hopelessly tarnished, of collision, and conflict, and the misery wrought by uncurbed human passions, of the sufferings of the poor, of bankruptcy knocking at the door of the rich, of disaster, and loss, and almost of general dismay "at the things that are coming upon the earth." The religious journal reveals the fact of gracious visitation in the midst of all this; angel feet treading these same paths of trying human experience, angel hands leading toward brighter scenes; the Merciful One, himself, ministering to human life a fairer side in assurance of brighter hopes than any earthly ones.

They who are instruments of such unspeakable good to men may well rejoice in their mission, and count it unspeakable privilege to be of the very least of them.—Standard.

Even if the preacher had the breadth and accuracy of knowledge, and the mental discipline, to handle political, economical, and social questions thoroughly, he ought not to undertake the task in the pulpit. The people who go to church on the Lord's Day go to get away from these secular matters, with which they are surfeited during the week. What they need is to have their attention called to the invisible and eternal realities, of which they hear all too little in their daily life. The contemplation of these realities produces a certain mental steadiness and severity that is the best of equipments for future work. Viewed even from the temporal standpoint, then, we do the best service to our fellow-men when we put them in vital touch with the spiritual truths of the gospel. Shame on the worldly-minded occupant of a secular pulpit! The hungry souls look up to him and cry for bread, and he gives them a stone.—Central Christian Advocate.

An Appeal to the Young People of Mississippi.

Dear Young Friends: Millsaps College needs a large hall for young men of limited means. We must build it. The hall is a necessity. Would it not be a handsome work for the young Mississippians to furnish the agent with money to build this hall? If we can get at the work right, we can do it. I want the young Methodists of Mississippi to send me five thousand dollars. Let us go to work in earnest. Let the young people from five to twenty-one years of age send me from fifty cents to one dollar each. Let every church and community be represented. The name and amount will appear in the New Orleans Christian Advocate. May our Father inspire your hearts, dear young friends, to help us build this hall! Let me hear at once from you. Your friend,

I. W. Cooper.

Seventh-Day Adventists.

I would suggest that you give some good selections and editorials against the "Seventh-day Adventists." Their missionaries have reached South Louisiana, and now are entering North Louisiana. They are distributing their pernicious literature, especially books and tracts, against the present immortality of the human soul and our Christian Sabbath. One of these books they call "Bible Reading for the Home Circle." The title is deceptive and enough truth in the book to make the error all the more dangerous. I have just now "wiped up the earth" with one of their agents. Debated eight and a half hours.

The District Conference for the Winona district, North Mississippi Conference, will be held at Indianola, April 9, 1894. Bishop Hargrove will preside.

S. M. Thames, P. E.

Gladstone's daughter, writing of her father's habits, says:

"He usually has three books on hand at once, of various degrees of solidity, the evening one probably being a novel. Aristotle, St. Augustine, Dante and Bishop Butler are the authors who have most deeply influenced him; so he has himself written. Once in bed, he never lets his mind be charged with business of any kind, in consequence of which he sleeps the sound and healthy sleep of a child, from the moment his head is on the pillow until he is called next morning. This absolute power over his thoughts, won by long and strict habits of self-control, must be one of the principal causes of his freshness and youth. As an instance, he went home in the early morning after the defeat of the Home Rule bill of 1886, and slept, as usual, his eight hours."

Don't Borrow Trouble.

Borrowing is poor business at the best; but of all the unsatisfactory, no-return-for-your-pains occupations, the very worst in the world is borrowing trouble.

To begin with, it is based on fancy, crankiness, vaporings, undue nervousness, or the mental or moral idiosyncrasies that should have been trained out of the individual long before the years of childhood were passed. There are few people in the world more depressing and disheartening than those who are always seeing some shadow of coming evil. The world is somber enough even at the best, and it is scarcely worth while to go out seeking for shadows, or to conjure up purely imaginary ones. As a matter of course, everybody must die some day, but that is no reason why they should be a constant apprehension and never-ending worry lest ill befall them even while they are yet in good health. However hard and wearisome the path of life may be, no one yet made it easier or smoother by worry. It means nothing more or less than paralysis of all the brighter side of many natures. Of course, those who worry do so because they are very unhappy and concerned about somebody; but it may be easily questioned whether those they are worried about are not made quite as unhappy as the worriers themselves.

Take it all in all, it may be put down as a fundamental rule of life that the old saying about never crossing bridges before one gets to them has as much profound philosophy in it as it is possible to put into the same number of words.—Exchange.

Dependence.

It was an apt remark, as we thought, which we saw the other day in a comment on the religious interest following the great depression in worldly business: "Some folks never will lean on God while they have a bank account." Independence even of the Maker and Ruler of all, is relished. It is sought after. It is vainly supposed to consist in the possession of wealth, and when wealth comes, indifference to God and his service comes with it. The feeling of dependence starts up with the running low of the bank account. It is a poor thing to say of humanity, but it is true. Our Savior conceded its truth when he said, "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!"—Presbyterian.

A Serious Mistake.

A faithful minister, who has lately changed fields, writes from the scene of his new endeavors: "As opportunity offers, I intend to press the claims of our church literature on these good people. I believe one of my greatest mistakes in the past was the failure to press this subject with an unyielding persistency. Were every family to take and read our church literature, I believe our church work in every department would move on harmoniously."—Cumberland Presbyterian.

Talk more hopefully of business prospects. There are evidences of reviving trade, and they would multiply if pessimists would cease their gloomy prognostications, and "put a cheerful courage on." Hopefulness is the kind of tonic which the country needs just now. The worst is over if people will only think so, and do their best to help brighten things up. It will require time to bring back the prosperity of recent years, but steps can now be taken to this end. It is not coming by a leap, or by mere wishing, but with intelligent, diligent, and honest working for it. It is poor policy to decry present prospects and advantages. We should rather use what we have to the fullest account, and work up to the higher results as trade revives and Providence favors. American pluck and cheer, properly aroused, will, under God, lift out of the existing depression, and introduce an era of material progress and development. —Presbyterian.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury,

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. BLIND BARTIMEUS.

(Mark x, 46-52.)

Christ's sojourn on earth was characterized by continuous benefactions.

1. See luckless Bartimeus.

(1) He was blind. Vastly indebted to our eyes for our knowledge and pleasure.

(2) He was a beggar. A familiar figure. The world full of suffering, misfortune, distress. Weeping, wailing, lamentation abound.

(3) Heard of Jesus being near. Some one told him. Tell poor sinners that the Master has come and calleth for them.

(4) He cried for mercy. Helpless, he appeals to the Helper.

(5) Met with hindrance. The fastidious insisted that he should not make so much ado. 'Twas then as it is now. Holy enthusiasm is decried as fanaticism.

(6) Opposition added to his ardor. "He cried the more a great deal: Thou son of David, have mercy on me."

2. See Jesus coming to his relief.

(1) Jesus stood still. The pomp and parade of this world would not have checked his progress. But the plaintive cry of a distressed soul causes him to interrupt his journey. He turns not away from prayer.

(2) Commanded his disciples to call the petitioner. It is our business here below to lead sinners to Christ.

(3) The disciples encourage the blind man. "Be of good cheer." Most of us are too censorious, denunciatory.

(4) Now he comes to Jesus in haste, casting away his garment. When convicted of sin, we are not slow in coming to the Lord.

(5) The question of the Master, "What wilt thou, that I should do unto thee?" was not the outcome of ignorance on his part. It helped the blind man vividly to realize his distress and formulate a definite petition.

(6) Jesus relieved him at once. Able and willing to save. "Knock, and it shall be open unto you."

(7) The Master declared that the blind man's faith had made him whole. Faith allays Sinai's thunder and bars the gates of hell. Faith plants the flowers of paradise in man's bosom. Makes us children of God. Faith!

"In my hands no price I bring,
Simply to thy cross I cling."

(8) Bartimeus now followed Jesus. To be near him and to serve him was his delight.

A Memorial to General Conference.

The New Orleans Preachers' Meeting adopted the following:

The New Orleans Preachers' Meeting of the M. E. Church, South, recommends to the General Conference, to meet in Memphis, Tenn., May, 1894, the following suggestions as a basis of legislation designed to make the Epworth League more useful:

1. That a connectional Epworth League organ be provided for, the editor of which shall be also editor of Epworth League literature.

2. That a general secretary of Epworth League work be constituted a connectional officer, who may be also editor of the Epworth League organ and literature.

3. That a Board of Control, of which one of the Bishops shall be a member, be constituted with power to modify the present Epworth League scheme as may be needed, and that said board provide for holding general conferences of Epworth Leagues.

4. That there be provision made for a Conference Board of Epworth League in every Annual Conference, and that these boards shall provide for the holding of annual conferences of Epworth Leagues in their several Annual Conferences.

5. That a section on Epworth Leagues be added to the Discipline, embodying all legislation upon the subject.

6. That the order of business for Quarterly Conferences be so enlarged as to require a written report on Epworth Leagues from pastors, and statistics of same to be reported to the Annual Conferences.

7. That it be made the duty of preachers in charge to form and oversee Epworth Leagues in every charge, where ten persons can be so organized.

8. That a two years' course of study, ending in graduation, to be certified, after proper examination, by diplomas awarded by the Board of Control, be provided for.

Also the following amendment:

That the president of the Epworth League be elected by the Quarterly Conference, on nomination by the preacher in charge, and that he be so constituted a member of the Quarterly Conference.

The memorial is signed by Revs. F. S. Parker, J. T. Sawyer and R. H. Wynn.

In the devotional meeting the singing should be one of the chief features. Sing often. Have everyone sing. Do not select difficult songs, but those that are familiar and easy. Put vim and spirit into every selection. Do not always sing loudly. Sometimes sing softly. Wind and noise are not necessary for effectiveness. Lastly see that every member possesses a Standard Hymn Book.

Chambers' Encyclopædia,

Complete in 30 Handy Volumes. Over 12,000 Pages.

Being a beautiful, clear reprint of the Edinburgh and London edition of Chambers' Encyclopædia, a library of universal knowledge for the people, with very large additions upon topics of special interest to American readers, and giving American statistics of population down to and including the census of 1890.

Remember, this great Encyclopædia contains thousands upon thousands of articles, embracing all subjects within the limits of human knowledge; yet, in its more than 27,000 specially prepared articles, while giving pointed, practical, exploit and most interesting and instructive information both for the student and the general reader, it is free from ambiguous technicalities and comparatively void of the mass of scientific signs, symbols and foreign nomenclature which crowd the pages of most other cyclopedias prepared for scientific and professional use alone. The Philadelphia Press well says:

"The particular and unique value of this Encyclopædia is its happy solution of the problem of fullness and convenience. It is neither bulky nor superficial. It is the book of reference for the million."

Chambers' Encyclopædia has always occupied a front place among the cyclopedic works to be coveted.

Do you ever want to post yourself easily and speedily, on some facts or matters belonging to the domain of Biography, Chemistry, Religion, Geography, Medicines, Health and Disease, Physical or Mental Recreation in Popular Games, etc.; Literature, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Agriculture, Mathematics, or any of the Arts and Sciences? If you do, avail yourself of this opportunity to secure a set of this great Encyclopædia.

Do you enjoy an occasional leisure hour of delightfully interesting, entertaining and instructive reading, and do you desire to supply yourself with a vast library of such matter, full of variety in all its departments? If you do, avail yourself of this opportunity to provide yourself with this invaluable and popular Encyclopædia.

Do you seek a suitable gift, one having intrinsic value, to present to your relative, or friend, or to your own library, or for the edification of the folks of your own household? If you do, here is your exceptional opportunity.

Our Unprecedented Offer.

The regular retail price of the imported edition of this immense reference library is $30.00. The cost to you for a full set, complete, printed on good paper, in beautiful, clear type, and durably bound in inflexible covers, delivered, free of cost to you, together with one year's subscription for this paper, will be only $4 50.

How to Avail Yourself of This Offer.

If you are not a subscriber to the Advocate, subscribe at once. Send us $2.00 for a year's subscription with $2.50 additional for the Encyclopædia. We will send it to you postpaid. If you are already a subscriber, pay your subscription to June, '95, at the rate of $2.00 a year or $1.00 for six months, and we will send the work, postpaid, at the same price.

HAVE YOU CATARRH?

There is one remedy you can try without danger of humbug. Send to H. G. Coleman, Chemist, Kalamazoo, Mich., for a trial package of his catarrh cure. His only mode of advertising is by giving it away. Postage 4 cents. Judge for yourself. Mention this paper.

Here Is Your Chance.

During the next sixty days we make the following offer:

For $2 50 we will send the Advocate one year and a copy of Christian Womanhood. The price of the Advocate is $2; the price of the book, $1. This book has had an extensive sale, the sixth thousand being now on the market. This offer applies to renewals as well as new subscriptions, provided the renewal extends the subscription to January, '95.

The following notices, selected from a vast number that have appeared in the church papers, will give some idea of the character of the work:

The best thesaurus of facts concerning womanhood with which we are acquainted.—Dr. C. F. Deems.

We hope it will be read by every man and woman in the church.—Florida Advocate.

We hope it will be extensively circulated and carefully read.—New Orleans Advocate.

Heartily recommended.—Dr. John E. Edwards.

This volume is the result of patient investigation and thoughtful study of the whole question treated. In the formulation of the case and in analyzing the testimony a vigorous, well-poised, legal mind is brought to bear. Dr. Black, moreover, establishes the points of his discussion as a skilful general establishes his lines in the face of an alert enemy. As he begins, so he closes, leaving the impression that a master in Israel has written bravely and tellingly of Christian womanhood, maintaining his position at every turn. The book is needed, and will long be in popular demand.—Sunday-School Magazine.

Don't miss this opportunity.

From the North to the South Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is the preventive of colds.

Books as Premiums.

To any preacher or other person who wishes to procure good books cheap we make the following offer:

We will send a copy of Bishop Haygood's "Man of Galilee" to any person who sends us one new subscriber with the cash, $2. That is, the book costs you nothing except the labor of getting the subscription. If the subscription is your own, it will make no difference.

We make the same offer with Bishop Haygood's "Our Children," a new edition of which is just from the press.

HOME CIRCLE.

THE DRUNKARD'S CHILD.

BY CHARLES W. HARRIS.

You ask me why so oft, father,
The tear rolls down my cheek,
And think it strange that I should own
A grief I dare not speak;
But O, my soul is very sad,
My brain is almost wild;
It breaks my heart, to think that I
Am call'd a drunkard's child.

My playmates shun me now, father,
Or pass me by with scorn,
Because my dress is ragged, and
My shoes are old and torn;
And if I heed them not, "there goes
The drunkard's girl," they cry;
On them, how much I wish that God
Would only let me die.

You used to love me once, father,
And we had bread to eat;
Mama and I were warmly clad,
And life seemed very sweet;
You never spoke unkindly then,
Or dealt the angry blow;
Oh, father dear, 'tis sad to think
That rum has chang'd you so.

Do not be angry, now, father,
Because I tell you this,
But let me feel upon my brow,
Once more thy loving kiss,
And promise me, those lips no more,
With drink shall be defiled,
That, from a life of want and woe,
Thou'lt save thy weeping child.

How to Keep Young.

In a certain pastor's class in Franklin county, Mass., is an old lady of eighty-eight years who, when asked to explain the secret of her happy and useful life, said that, first of all, she had lived simply, never indulging herself in what are called luxuries. Next, she had always kept busy both with hands and mind. She thought of other things than the care of her home. She was a thorough student of the Bible and a constant reader of religious and missionary literature, thus keeping in touch with the progress of the Lord's kingdom throughout the world. This kept her out of mental ruts while living a life of toil. She had broad visions of truth, and so grew with advancing years. Her recreation she found in change of work, and expressed the opinion that people die from worry much oftener than from overwork. When asked how she managed the trials of life, especially the sacrifice of three sons to save the nation, she replied: "I learned long years ago to put my trust in God. I do the best I can and leave the rest with him." Simple living, noble thinking, busy hands, and a steadfast confidence in the Eternal Goodness—can modern times furnish a better philosophy of life?—Exchange.

Force of Example.

We have read of a young infidel who was one night in bed contemplating the character of his mother. "I see," said he within himself, "two unquestionable facts."

"First. My mother is greatly afflicted in circumstances, body and mind, and I see that she cheerfully bears up under all by the support she derives from constantly retiring to her closet and her Bible.

"Secondly. That she has a secret spring of comfort of which I know nothing; while I, who give an unbounded rein to my appetites and seek pleasure by every means, seldom or never find it. If, however, there is any such secret in religion, why may not I attain to it as well as mother? I will immediately seek it of God."

Thus the influence of Christianity, exhibited in its beauty by a living example before him, led Richard Cecil to know Christ himself, and to glorify him by a life of most successful devotion to his service.

O ye Christian mothers, be holy! The pure light of a life of true devotion may dissipate the scepticism of your boy and open to him a course of eminent usefulness.—The Christian Standard.

The back may bend, the feet may falter and the hair turn hoary, but the heart of the heavenly-minded never grows old.—Rest Islander.

To Make Life Happy.

Take time; it is no use to fume or fret or do as the angry housekeeper who has got hold of the wrong key and pushes, shakes, and rattles it about the lock until both are broken and the door is still unopened.

The chief secret of comfort lies in not suffering trifles to vex us, and in cultivating our undergrowth of small pleasures.

Try to regard present vexations, as you will regard them a month hence.

Since we can not get what we like, let us like what we can get.

It is not riches, it is not poverty, it is human nature that is the trouble.

The world is like a looking glass. Laugh at it and it laughs back, frown and it frowns back.

Angry thoughts canker the mind and dispose it the worst temper in the world—that of fixed malice and revenge. It is while in this temper that most men become criminals,—Selected.

Some Don'ts for the Fathers.

Don't lean down too hard when the boy is turning the grindstone; this is one of the causes of boys leaving the farm.

Don't expect the boy to keep up with you and the hired man, and run errands or carry water at the same time.

Don't expect the boy to maintain an angelic disposition if, after working hard all day, he is obliged to eat at the second table.

Don't give the boy a lamb or calf to raise—which would have died if he had not attended to it—and let it grow up to be dad's sheep or cow.

Don't continue to treat the boy as if he had no sense, but consult with him occasionally; he may possibly know more than you do.

Don't rave and storm because the boy wants some time to tinker; he may astonish you with some of his work.

Don't tell the boy he can go hunting or fishing Saturday and then hitch on a day's work before he goes. It is not fair.—Exchange.

Don't Stop Your Church Paper.

Put the church paper at the head of your periodical list. It is surely unwise to cut off that paper and leave the family little chance to get in touch with the great enterprises and movements of the church to which they belong. How can they be intelligent church members under such circumstances? It is especially important that Methodists be informed about their own work. It marches in the van. It does not belong to the reserve corps. It is on the line of battle where that line has been pushed farthest toward the enemy. Its movements must be prompt and steady. Its companies must move together. If it were a body of kirmishers, there might be room for much independent action on the part of each soldier. But this is the van of the army itself, and its success depends upon its unity of action. Each soldier must know something of what his fellows are doing. You must keep posted if you would be a good Methodist in these days.—Central Christian Advocate.

A writer says: "To hear a young lady describe a bonnet or a walking suit makes one wonder where she would find adjectives with which to describe a sunset or a storm. The bonnet, the suit, is described as "perfectly splendid," "just gorgeous," "too magnificent," "the loveliest thing my eyes ever rested on," etc., or she will say: It is "perfectly horrid," "monstrous," "awful," "too intolerable," "abominable," "uglist," and all other bad adjectives that end in the "est." This is a cruel habit women especially have of criticising each others manners, dress, etc., as if the one you criticise had not as good rights to her tastes as you, and might not as properly criticise you from her standpoint. Exercise great charity.—Inland Advocate.

SINCE BABY HELEN CAME.

Our home was sweet and beautiful,
The love-light shone so bright—
How could we know a baby's face
Would bring such added light?
How know so soon the little thing
So much of love would claim?
But home has been a higher thing
Since Baby Helen came.

O, yes, a childless home may be
A happy home, 'tis true;
But let a little baby come
And give its heart to you;
The rooms will so transfigured be,
They will not be the same;
Our home has been a different thing
Since Baby Helen came.

—The Housekeeper.

Stonewall Jackson.

After Stonewall Jackson's death a New York merchant said of him: "I never met Mr. Jackson but once, yet an incident in which he had part exerted a strong influence over my early life. I was a boy in college, eager to be considered a man, but often hesitating to maintain the principles taught me by my mother, lest I should be called weak and womanish.

"I happened to be seated at supper one night next to Jackson, who was a somewhat younger lad than I. While waiting to be served, one of the boys drew from his pocket an indecent picture on a card, and passed it to his neighbor. It was slyly circulated among the students near by with shouts of laughter. When it came to Jackson, he glanced at it and threw it down contemptuously, saying quietly, 'That is silly and beastly!'

"The boys were silent. One of them threw the card on the fire.

"I felt a sudden stiffening of my whole moral nature. It was so easy for him to be decent and manly! Why not for me?

"I can say candidly that that momentary touch of a strong, bold nature put new life and vigor into my own."—Exchange.

Never Run In Debt.

It was in no uncertain manner that Horace Greeley once said:

"I would rather be a convict, a slave, than to pass through life under the harrow of debt. Let no young man misjudge himself unfortunate, or truly poor, so long as he has the full use of his limbs and faculties; and is substantially free from debt. Hunger, cold, rags, hard work, contempt, suspicion, unjust reproach, are disagreeable; but debt is infinitely worse than them all. And, if it had pleased God to spare either or all of my sons to be the support and solace of my declining years, the lesson which I should have most earnestly sought to impress upon them is: Never run in debt! Avoid pecuniary obligations as you would pestilence or famine. If you have but six-pence, and can go no more for a week, buy some corn, parch it and live on it, rather than owe any man money."

Forgiving One Another.

"Mama," said Charley, "now when I have a new sled, what shall I do with the old one? Mama, there is a chance to do something real good, too."

"How, Charley?"

"Well, mama, if there is any boy I hate, that boy is Sim Tyson. He is always plaguing and teasing me and all the other little boys. It never does any good to get cross, for that is just what he likes. But better even than this, Sim does like a sled, and—well, maybe it is foolish, but I've half a notion to give that old sled to him. It might make him think, and so do him good; mightn't it, mama?"

"Yes, it might," said the mother.

So Sim received Charley's sled, and they say he is kinder not only to the little boy, but to everybody, than he was before.—Observer.

The Central Presbyterian says: There is nothing on earth for which one ought to be more thankful than for having been brought up in the atmosphere of a pure home. Such a home may be narrow and even hard. It may be deficient in material comforts, and utterly lack the graceful amenities that lend a charm to human life; but it has in it the forces on which great characters are nurtured. One of our best friends—a man as sturdy as a forest oak—once said to me: "I was the son of poor parents, and from my youth up was inured to self-denial and hardship; but I do not remember ever to have heard a word from the lips of either my father or mother that was not as chaste as the driven snow." Better such a recollection as that than an inheritance of millions of money.

Reading.

If young people only knew the value of their youth! A half hour each day steadily given to the vanquishing of some real books in history, science and literature, is three hours a week, is more than twelve hours a month, is more than twelve solid days of twenty-four hours each year. What can not the busiest man accomplish by such seizures of the fragments of time? Oh, if the young people only knew the culture possible for them by such simple means! And for evermore it is the man who knows who gets to be the man who does, and to whom the chance for doing comes. Merely frittering newspaper and novel reading—a youthhood only devoted to that—how pitiably sad! No ship drifts into harbor. No young person drifts into an achieving manhood or womanhood.—Wayland Hoyt, D. D.

Put Out the Fire.

When our houses take fire, says Dr. Cuyler, the first impulse is to go after a bucket of water. But if temper takes fire, the first impulse is to throw on more fuel. Now, the best bucket of water for a ronsed temper is resolute silence. If whenever an irritating act were done, or an injury struck us, we should firmly seal our lips for even ten minutes, we would save ourselves many a quarrel, many a heartburn, many a mortification, many a disgrace to our religious profession. Speech is often explosive and shattering. Silence is cooling. It cools us off and cools other people. One of the calmest men I ever knew told me that he used to be violently passionate, but he broke his temper by resolutely bridling his tongue until he cooled down.—Central Advocate.

"Speak Like You Do When You Laugh."

A baby of three years once preached me a sermon, and I pass it on for the benefit of other downcast and despondent ones who need to learn to "rejoice evermore."

"How is the baby?" I asked, drearily, standing at the foot of the stair-case leading up to a chamber where the little one lay ill. I was tired, unhopeful; my mood came out in my tone.

"'Peak like you do when you laugh," called the weak, little voice upstairs; and if I ever felt rebuked by an angel, that was the moment. The words have come to me a hundred times since. I hope I am the brighter and the cheerier for them.

"Speak like you do when you laugh." That means sparkle with gladness and good-will.—Churchman.

Don't Mean It.

Once upon a time there were two little sisters. As they were playing one evening, the little one, whom we will call "Brown Eyes," threw a pebble which hit the elder sister, whom we will call "Blue Eyes."

Several gentlemen standing near, seeing the accident, expected to hear a loud scream, and an angry voice saying, "You naughty thing! I'll just tell mother! You did it on purpose! I know you did, you mean thing!" and so on, as angry children will talk.

But these gentlemen heard nothing of the kind. For a moment little Blue Eyes stood ready to cry, then she ran, threw her arms around her sister, and said: "Don't cry, little sister; I know you didn't mean to hurt me. Kiss me, dear." And the children kissed and embraced each other.—Little Ones.

Good Rules for Children and Everybody.

Say nothing you would not like God to hear.

Do nothing you would not like God to see.

Write nothing you would not like God to read.

Go to no place where you would not like God to find you.

Read no book of which you would not like God to say, "Show it me."

Never spend your time in such a way that you would not like God to say, "What art thou doing?"—Southern Churchman.

Tact is sincere; policy is deceitful. Tact is frank; policy is sly. Tact looks you in the eye; policy gazes over your head. It is a commendable thing in a man to have tact; it is not always commendable to have policy. Christ had tact; the Emperor Augustus had policy.—Zion's Herald.

Get Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass" lamp-chimneys; they are made of tough glass, tough against heat; they do not break in use; they do from accident. They are clear, transparent, not misty. Look at your chimney. How much of the light is lost in the fog?

The Sermon Bible

Embracing the Whole of the Sacred Scriptures.

THE OLD TESTAMENT IN FOUR VOLUMES, NAMELY.

Vol. I. Genesis to II. Samuel.
Vol. II. I. Kings to Psalm lxxvi.
Vol. III. Psalm lxxvii to Song of Solomon.
Vol. IV. Isaiah to Malachi.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN EIGHT VOLUMES, VIZ.:

Vol. V. Matthew i to xxi.
Vol. VI. Matthew xxii to Mark xi
Vol. VII. Luke i to John iii.
Vol. VIII. John iv to Acts vi.
Vol. IX. Acts vii to I. Corinthians.
Vol. X. II. Corinthians to Philippians.
Vol. XI. Colossians to James.
Vol. XII. I. Peter to Revelation.

This series of volumes gives in convenient form the essence of the best homiletic literature of this generation. It takes account of the best and greatest preachers, and has been compiled from manuscript reports and fugitive periodical sources as well as from books. Many of the best sermons preached by eminent men are never printed in book form. It thus contains much that will be new to its readers.

UNDER EVERY TEXT IS GIVEN:

1. Outlines of important sermons by eminent preachers existing only in manuscript or periodical, and thus inaccessible.

2. Less full outlines of sermons which have appeared in volumes which are not well known or easily obtained.

3. References to or very brief outlines of sermons which appear in popular volumes such as are likely to be in a preacher's library.

4. Full references to theological treatises, commentaries, etc., where any help is given to the elucidation of the text.

Thus the preacher, having chosen his text, has only to refer to the SERMON BIBLE, to find some of the best outlines and suggestions on it and full references to all the helps available.

It extends to 12 volumes, of about 400 pages each, with 24 blank pages for memorandum notes at the end of each volume.

OUR OFFER.

The publisher's catalogue price of the above work is $1.50 per volume.

We will send any volume, postpaid, as a premium for two new subscribers, accompanied by the cash—$4. If you want the whole set of twelve volumes, send us twenty-three new subscribers with the cash—$46—and we will send the set, postpaid. Remember that this is not an antiquated work thrown on the market at a low rate because there is no demand for it. It is a recent publication which is having quite a run throughout the North.

BUCKLEY—Bro. GEORGE P. BUCKLEY was born in Copiah county, Miss., Sept. 16, 1860, and departed this life in Canton, Miss., Jan. 2, 1894. He wooed and won the affections of Miss Jamie Hoover, of Summit, Miss., to whom he was happily married Oct. 28, 1891.

Bro. Buckley was for years a faithful and efficient pharmacist in the drug store of J. W. Mosby, of Canton, Miss., in which relation and capacity he won many strong and substantial friends. After his marriage he embarked in the drug business for himself. By industry and application he soon built up a nice, profitable business. By due deference to others and constant attention to his own business he soon made himself universally popular with commercial men and the citizens of Canton. In the year of our Lord 1883 he was born into the kingdom of Christ, and forthwith connected himself with the M. E. Church, South, in Canton, Miss.

Bro. Buckley was a thoughtful, devoted son. For years his father was a paralytic, during which time he faithfully and affectionately provided for his wants, and in his last will made ample provision for his step-mother, who lives in Hazlehurst, Miss. Bro. Buckley was a faithful, tender, affectionate husband. In his wife's love he was perfectly happy. She was to him the best and fairest of all women. Into the two years of his married life he crowded much of joy and real happiness for his devoted wife, making those two years the happiest and brightest of her earthly pilgrimage. Bro. George was growing and developing into an efficient, useful member of the church. He did fair to become a leading man and a strong pillar in our church. Only a few days before his death he had agreed to double his contributions to the church, which would have placed him among our most liberal contributors. At the fourth Quarterly Conference, for the year 1893, he was elected a member of the Board of Stewards, with whom he never met, but on the very night on which the new Board met to organize he was called before the bar of God to render an account of his stewardship, which we believe he so rendered as to receive the "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things."

Bro. Buckley was sick only a few days. None of us thought him seriously sick until the day before his death, when it became manifest that he was sick unto death. One hour before his spirit ascended he asked, "Is there any chance for me to recover?" I took him by the hand, and said, "Bro. George, suppose you should not get well, what are your prospects for a better life beyond?" To which he replied: "Bro. Jones, I think it is all right. I have tried to do right and have been kind to everybody." The lamp of life was now burning low, and soon, amid a group of warm friends and the sobs of a loving wife, went out on earth to be relighted on the bright shores of eternal life.

A devoted wife and a host of friends mourn his departure. May the Lord comfort dear Sister Buckley!

L. S. JONES.

McCORMICK—Dr. FERDINAND MULLER McCORMICK, the brother whose name heads this sketch, and who is now no more, was one of Maine's noblemen, big in all the attributes of true manhood, high-toned, dignified, gifted and generous. It was a pleasure for anyone to have formed his acquaintance.

He was born in Jasper county, Miss., Nov. 27, 1837. His parents, who were natives of South Carolina, bore the names of Francis and Catherine (Heidelburg) McCormick. His father lived many years in Mississippi, and came from that State to Union parish, La., in 1849. He was a planter of note and died in 1874, his first wife having died in 1858. The Doctor spent most of his school days in Mississippi and Louisiana, and was a student of the Frankfort Military Institute of Kentucky. High-metlled and big-hearted, he who fought bravely for the South, marched up to the cannon's mouth and many times looked death in the face, died on June 18, 1893. He had previous to his enlistment in the late rebellion devoted considerable time to the study of medicine, and during the latter portion of his term of service was detailed to hospital duty. When the war closed he was on hospital duty in Macon, Ga. After returning home he resumed the study of medicine, and soon entered the State Medical University at New Orleans, La., from which he graduated in 1869. He built up a successful practice wherever he resided. The value to any community of a professional man is not marked merely by his learning and skill, his proficiency in medical and surgical practice, but also by his character, both private and professional, his honorable adherence to his personal integrity and benevolence of purpose. When a physician combines these characteristics, it is with great pleasure that we record his life-work, and such a man was found in Dr. McCormick, of Ruston, La. He has entered the homes of many of her citizens, and has banished care and sorrow from many firesides by his skill and talent in his profession. He was for many years a member of the Methodist Church, and very much devoted to all its interests, and was also a Royal Arch Mason.

His home was an urn into which his big heart poured itself, and he never was so happy as when the minister of the gospel and his masonic friends made his house their home. He was married in 1870 to Miss Nora C. Scholars, a daughter of John and Catharine (Miller) Scholars, whose family is prominent in Northern Louisiana. He leaves a wife and two daughters. They are all members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was devoted to his family, and made the fulfillment of their desires and wishes the chief object and aim of his existence.

Oblivious of his own comfort, he was mindful at all times of every want, comfort and pleasure of his wife and daughters, who in return invad him with a deathless devotion and honored him above all men. Fond husband, kind father, he lived for his family. He had his faults, but, being no hypocrite, he concealed them not, and his numerous, amiable qualities far overbalanced his unamiable ones. At his death a light went out in the land. How far it threw its beams can never be told. A worthy citizen and noble man has fallen.

His remains were laid to rest by a large concourse of the masonic fraternity in the Monroe Cemetery by the side of those of his two little sons who had preceded him in the great hereafter several years previously.

MOON—Action of the Epworth League of Tupelo, Miss., in reference to the death of the Rev. E. H. Moon:

Whereas, Our all wise, all-merciful and loving heavenly Father hath seen fit, in his mysterious providence, to call home to himself the spirit of our honored and beloved co-worker, Bro. E. H. Moon, whose services were invaluable to our Epworth League, not only because of his wise counsel and warm sympathy, but because of the helpful influence of his noble character, his pure example and his faithful life.

Resolved, That in his death we have sustained an irreparable loss which we will ever deeply feel. His memory will be forever enshrined within our hearts.

Resolved, That we humbly bow to this sad dispensation of our dear Father in heaven, though we will sorely miss our lamented pastor, who was always ready with his counsel, encouragement, sympathy and aid.

Resolved, That while we mourn because of his death, we rejoice that after so many years of faithful labor in his Master's vineyard he has entered into rest, with the plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." He is gone. His familiar voice will no more greet our ears. But may not his saintly spirit watch over us and plead for us at the throne of mercy?

Resolved, That we tender our heart-felt sympathy to the bereaved family in this dark hour of affliction, and we pray that the God of all grace may comfort and console them and at last reunite them in our Father's house "not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

MISS VICTORIA THOMPSON,
JAMISON ROGERS,
Committee.

With faith in "Him who doeth all things well," but with grieved and sorrowing hearts, the Sunday-school of the Tupelo Methodist Church offer the following resolutions in memory of our late lamented pastor, Bro. E. H. Moon, whom God, in his wisdom, hath transferred from this to a higher charge:

Resolved, That we recognize the hand of an all-wise, loving Father in this dispensation of his mysterious providence. We bow in submission. We will not question the wisdom, though we can not fathom the mystery.

Resolved, That the North Mississippi Conference has lost a burning, shining light, a devout and blameless man of God; the Tupelo Methodist Church a faithful, zealous, untiring pastor—a pastor who was, indeed, gladly willing "to spend and be spent" in his Master's cause.

Resolved, That our Sunday-school has lost an efficient helper. The pupils, the teachers, the officers, the superintendent, all had his co-operation, his interest, his sympathy, and his prayers. To the discouraged teacher he was ever ready with words of wise counsel and encouragement. But we will have his help no more. He has answered the summons, "It is enough; come up higher." His tender, earnest, pleading voice will no more be heard from our pulpit. His voice is hushed, but he preaches to us still. His zeal and devotion to his Master's cause, his pure and spotless life will be to us a never-ending sermon.

Resolved, That his removal proves an incentive to greater faithfulness in our Christian life. In the language of his last appeal to us from the sacred desk, let us "Go forward."

Resolved, That to the bereaved family our hearts go out in warmest sympathy, and we pray that the great Comforter may pour the balm of consolation into their wounded hearts, and may, ever be "their abiding guest and guide."

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

The beginnings of error are small, but the endings are disastrous.—United Presbyterian.

We, the undersigned, do testify that we have used Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar for years, for all throat and lung troubles, with the greatest benefit. For coughs and colds it never fails. When taken according to directions, it cures our children of croup and whooping-cough, and for serious lung troubles it always gives relief.

Cotton At 16 cts. Per Lb.

SEED FOR TRIAL PURPOSES ONLY.
WE HAVE EVERY SEED IN EXISTENCE.

There is no Money in Cotton at 8c.

There is an active, strong demand for long staples at 16c. Then why not plant it? Your answer is: Because none of the long staples will make enough to the acre to justify planting them even at 16 cts. per lb.; it is difficult to gin it properly; it is hard to pick out, and lands will not produce staples, and so on.

Inland Sea Island is a long staple cotton in which all objections are removed. It is ENORMOUSLY PRODUCTIVE, easily ginned and no trouble to pick out. You can make it with an extra expense or trouble. See what Mr. Jeff Welborn has to say.

NEW BOSTON, TEX., Dec. 5, 1893.
RICHMOND SEED CO.,
Richmond, Va.:
This is to certify that I had "Inland Sea Island" cotton planted in alternate plots with Sea Island, Allison's Silk, Allen's latest improved long staple, Ozier Silk, Southern Hope, and some other varieties of long lint. The Inland Sea Island was a great deal earlier than any of them, and made one-third more lint per plot (of same size) than any, and double as much as any save one variety (Ozier Silk). While the lint was no longer than the Allen, it was much finer, softer and richer-colored than it or any except Sea Island and Allison's Silk, but it made four times as much per plot as either of these two. * * * I think your Inland Sea Island a big jump forward in the long lint business, because of its Earliness and Prolificness. * * *
Very truly, JEFF WELBORN.

No Seed for Sale until next season save a limited number of packets, which we send out for trial purposes. Will positively refuse to sell seed any other way this season. Space forbids our saying more here, but write us for full information.

Is Different from Others.

It is intended to aid the planter in selecting the Seeds best adapted for his needs and conditions and in getting from them the best possible results. It is not, therefore, highly colored in either sense; and we have taken great care that nothing worthless be put in, or nothing worthy be left out. We invite a trial of our Seeds. We know them because we grow them. Every planter of Vegetables or Flowers ought to know about our three warrants; our cash discounts; and our gift of agricultural papers to purchasers of our Seeds. All of these are explained in the Catalogue, a copy of which can be yours for the asking.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Gen. Juhal A. Early died in Lynchburg, Va., on March 2, aged seventy-eight years.

The Board of Managers of the Young Men's Christian Association, of this city, held their annual meeting on March 5. Mr. E. P. Mackie was elected president.

The president of the Mexican Central railroad has visited this city with a view to developing trade relations between this port and Tampico. A new ship line is to be established.

The House Naval Committee has reported a bill appropriating $40,000 for the raising of the Kearsarge. It provides that in case of failure the wreckers shall get not more than $10,000.

The diplomatic and consular service of the United States costs the country $500,000 a year. While the appropriation bill for that service carries $1,500,000, $1,000,000 is received in fees at the various consulates abroad.

The House, on March 2, entered upon the consideration of appropriation bills. The fortification bill carrying something over $1,000,000 was passed in twenty-five minutes, and then the pension appropriation bill was taken up.

The Grant Monument Association, of New York, says that work is progressing on the monument as well as could be expected, and that it will probably be completed within two years. Up to date $480,308 has been received for the monument.

Word comes from the opal mines near Caldwell, Idaho, of the finding of the largest opal in the world. It is said to be as large as a hen's egg and without a flaw. It is estimated that the gem will dress 325 karats, and prove of the highest quality and of immense value.

The annual distribution of seeds by the Department of Agriculture, in response to the personal applications, has been discontinued for the present season, and hereafter distribution will be made at the direction of the congressmen who still have certain quantities to their account.

Senators Hill, Gorman and Brice are laboring with the Finance Committee, not so much for the purpose of securing amendments to the Wilson bill for the benefit of special interests, as to persuade the committee that the Democratic party can not afford to pass a bill which would bring disaster upon so many important industries.

The Western Union of Fire Underwriters, which met in St. Louis, last week, before adjourning, adopted resolutions strongly charging legislative committees with the work of propagandizing in favor of the creation of the office of fire coroner all over the country to investigate the origin of unknown fires and to prosecute incendiaries.

FOREIGN.

Advices from Rio de Janeiro say yellow fever is decimating the prisons in that city. The jails are now filled with political prisoners and they are rapidly succumbing to the disease.

Louis Kossuth, the distinguished Hungarian patriot, is suffering from weakness arising from old age. Kossuth's condition is now admitted to have assumed a grave aspect, and it is complicated by the fact that he persists in refusing to take medical assistance.

It is announced that the Queen has accepted the resignation of Mr. Gladstone, and that she had summoned Lord Rosebery and offered him the post of prime minister in Mr. Gladstone's stead. It is also announced that Lord Rosebery has accepted the position.

The Persian government has announced that the mint will no longer coin silver for the public. It also declares that the importation of silver is prohibited for the future, and that a month hence the customs authorities will treat as contraband all silver not ordered by the government.

Thirteen anarchists were arrested in Paris on March 4. Recent searches made by the police have disclosed the fact that numbers of well-to-do persons have given money to anarchists with a view to insure themselves against outrages. Among those who have thus paid what is practically blackmail are many priests.

Although no diplomatic questions have arisen between England and Germany during the last administration of the Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone, the news of the veteran liberal's retirement causes a feeling of unfeigned satisfaction in Germany. The German people have never gotten over the resentment occasioned during the Franco-Prussian war of 1870-71 by the unfounded allegation that Mr. Gladstone encouraged the sale of arms and ammunition to France.

Prevention is better than cure, and you may prevent that tired feeling by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which will keep your blood pure and free from acid taint and germs of disease.

Hood's Pills do not purge, pain or gripe, but act promptly, easily and efficiently. 25 cents.

Murmuring.

Murmuring is a species of blasphemy. You are in the Lord's guest chamber. You sit at his table. If you complain of the fare, you insult him on whose bounty you live. If you doubt whether you will be taken care of, you impugn the truthfulness of him who declares that he is more willing to give good things to them that ask him, than parents are to give bread to their children.

Mark Guy Pearse says: "God does not pitch men into the world haphazard. Don't cry out so much against your circumstances; it is blasphemy. What you have to do is to find Christ. He will be a match to your circumstances."—Cumberland Presbyterian.

The Latest Method of Incubation.

Artificial incubation has fully developed from the theory to the fact, and half the occupation of old mother hen is gone. After much costly experimenting an increasing number of poultry raisers realize that the hatching of chickens is a matter of science, and an incubator that is not based upon the right principles is little better, if not worse, than none. The chief requirements of a perfect incubator are an unfailing automatic device for keeping the temperature in the incubator the same at all times, and a perfect arrangement for supplying the proper amount of moisture to the eggs during every stage of incubation. With these two features must be added a perfect system of ventilation, without which no incubator is really worth the standing-room.

Of all the incubators made to-day these features are most prominently developed and most ingeniously combined in the Improved Victor, manufactured by the George Ertell Company, of Quincy, Ill.

When in operation it requires so little attention that the busiest person can spare the little time to attend to it.

With such an aid as this, there is a profit in poultry raising that few can afford to overlook, and it will prove well worth the time of anyone to send 4 cents to The George Ertel Company for their catalogue of incubators and brooders. To our readers who mention the name of this paper they will send it free.

Chickens Hatched by Steam.

A few years ago the suggestion that chickens would ever be hatched by steam would have brought down no end of ridicule on the head of the prophet, and yet to-day steam is recognized by experts to be the most efficient means of incubation. A clear illustration of this is found in the well-known Excelsior Incubator, manufactured by George H. Stahl, of Quincy, Ill., which can always be relied upon to hatch a much larger percentage of fertile eggs than the ordinary hatcher, at about two-thirds the cost and trouble. Those who are now engaged in poultry raising, and those who are studying its possibilities as a source of profit, will do well to send 6 cents to Mr. Stahl for his catalogue. It contains much valuable information about incubators, brooders, and poultry raising in general.

Palloarpo Bonilla, the new President of Honduras, has no money to meet the expenses of the government, and has decreed a forced loan of $300,000. The deposed president, Vasquez, left the country of Honduras so depleted of money that the exertions of Bonilla to raise cash will doubtless raise riots. It is expected that he will endeavor to make the American Lottery Company pay anew and dearly for its charter.

Brain-Workers
Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

When night comes; the literary and active business man's brain is hungry from the exhausting labor of the day. Horsford's Acid Phosphate quickly supplies the waste of tissue, and refreshing sleep results.

Be sure that in a dying hour the questions will narrow into a very few—God, eternity, the soul, judgment, and the cross.—F. W. Robertson.

A sanguinary engagement occurred near Saranda, Brazil, last week. The rebels were put to flight, leaving 400 dead on the field. The government troops captured many prisoners, horses and arms.

A Secret for Pastors.

Get somebody interested in somebody else. Don't try to do all the work yourself. It is better to be director-general for the church than to be worker-general! Get somebody to advise, or tenderly warn, somebody else, or visit them in sorrow, or get them out to prayer meeting, or Bible class, or preaching; even if they should need help themselves in these matters! Get them all into partnership with you, in your work. The most of people like to have just a little—not too much—business and responsibility; and the feeling of helping the pastor, and being partner with him in his good work, is inspiring. They will wonder what made him call on them, and perhaps never find out that he concluded it was the only way he knew to benefit themselves!—Canadian Independent.

How to Plant and Cultivate Corn.

The less the labor in the management of any crop, if the results be equal, the more profitable will be that crop to the producer.

In cultivating a corn crop one object should be to obviate the use of the hoe; that lessens the cost of cultivation. To do this the method of planting is important. The hoeing can be avoided if the planting is properly done; it is altogether in the manner of planting. The question is how this is done. We begin by throwing out the land with four furrows, whether the land is a flat surface or in ridges. This being done, we use a long shovel plow, running it deep in the water furrow. In this the corn is dropped and covered by the use of the Planet Junior Cultivator by removing the center tooth behind and narrowing down the side teeth to about six inches apart. This is run over the corn which list up a small ridge. When the corn is up drop about an ounce of cotton seed meal near each hill and run the harrow over it. This must be done when the land is not wet. If the soil should continue wet until the corn gets too high to run the harrow over it, the cultivator must be run on the sides of the rows instead of the harrow over them.

The balance of the cultivation consists in thinning the corn and the frequent use of the cultivator until the corn is near waist high, when the second application of fertilizer is applied, using about two hundred pounds to the acre on medium land and more on poorer. When this application of fertilizer is used, the land should be plowed deep and thorough, and if the ridges are high they should be harrowed down. If peas are to be planted, they should be sowed before the last harrowing.

The fertilizer to be used in the second application is made by using acid phosphate, two parts, and one of cotton seed meal.

Low or bottom land should never be planted early in the season on this method. An evidence of its merit is that in dry seasons the land cultivated on this plan seldom fails to make the best corn.

Big Cobs.

It is a usual thing to hear the objection made to large ears of corn that the cob is large. How are you going to have a large ear without a large cob? Is it any objection to an ear of corn that weighs a pound that the cob is large? What is the rule to be adopted? Is it not how much will the corn yield to the acre, and not how much will it shell to a given amount in the ear? When we grow corn the real object is to attain the greatest amount from a given quantity of land. Can we get as much per acre from small ears as from large ones? It takes more corn to go round a large cob than it does for a small cob. If there is more corn on a large cob than there is on a small cob, then the objection to a large cob is not well nor wisely taken. Farmers do not generally well consider the difference in the yield of crop between large and small ears, while the tenth is the size of the ear determines the yield of crop.

Suppose an ear of corn weighs one pound and the cob alone weighs three ounces, there is left 13 ounces of corn. Now, is not that better than to have an ear that only weighs 12 ounces, cob and all? Seventy ears, each weighing one pound makes a bushel, and the general estimate is that it takes 100 ears for a bushel, and they must be much larger than the average grown in Central Iowa, or it will take a good deal more than 100 ears for a bushel. One of the most successful means to be employed to increase the yield of crop is the use of large ears for seed. This followed up for a term of years in every county where corn is grown, would give an increased yield of from 10 to 25 bushels per acre over that now obtained. No one item is of so much importance as that of the size of the ear, and, on account of failure to recognize this fact, millions of bushels are lost every season. An increase of one ounce in the weight of ears, would give an increased yield per acre of about six bushels, allowing the average yield to be about 50 bushels per acre. And an increase of two ounces per ear will give 12 bushels per acre increased yield. Four ounces increase to the ear will give 24 bushels per acre increase. But if you calculate 75 bushels per acre, the increased yield is still greater, amounting to from 9 to 35 bushels increased yield per acre.

Big corn, big cob and big yield all go together. Let us have the largest yield of crop, regardless of the size of the cob.—E. S. Teagarden, in Journal of Agriculture.

SLIPPING AWAY.

They are slipping away—these sweet, swift years,
Like a leaf on the current cast;
With never a break in their rapid flow,
We watch them as one by one they go
Into the beautiful past.

As silent and swift as the weaver's thread,
Or an arrow's flying gleam;
As soft as the languorous breezes bid
That lift the willow's golden lid
And ripple the glassy stream.

As light as the breath of the thistle-down;
As fond as a lover's dream;
As pure as the plush in the sea-shell's throat;
As sweet as the wood-bird's wooing note—
So tender and sweet they seem.

One after another we see them pass
Down the dim-lighted stair;
We hear the sound of their steady tread
In the steps of centuries long since dead,
As beautiful and as fair.

There are only a few years left to love;
Shall we waste them in idle strife?
Shall we trample them under our ruthless feet—
Those beautiful blossoms, rare and sweet,
By the dusty ways of life?

There are only a few swift years—ah, let
No envious taunts be heard;
Make life's rare pattern of rare design,
And fill up the measure with love's sweet wine,
But never an angry word!

The Joy of Giving.

BY LYMAN ABBOTT, D. D.

We want to raise some money in our church for a benevolent purpose. How do we go to work?

We assume, to begin with, that the Christians who constitute this church do not wish to give any of their money. They want to spend it on themselves, or to keep it in savings banks or bonds for some future "rainy day," or for some unimagined purpose, they can not themselves tell what. And, acting on this assumption, we study how we can get a good collection out of them, so to speak, in spite of themselves. Various methods are resorted to for this purpose. Perhaps the minister preaches a sermon, addresses their conscience, lays upon them the duty of giving. Perhaps he even invokes the authority of the old Mosaic law, and demands that they bestow one-tenth of their income on the Lord, as the proportion which rightfully belongs to him, as a sort of senior partner in their enterprises. Or, if he is not a preacher of law, but a prophet of emotionalism, he endeavors to create a public and popular ebullition of emotionalism. He calculates that if the entire congregation are stirred to a white heat by a successful appeal, each individual will act upon his neighbor, and the five hundred will give much more than they would give if left to act severally and separately. If he can draw tears from their eyes, he hopes to draw dollars from their pockets. Or he resolves to call to his aid their approbativeness. He orders the church doors closed, and calls for subscriptions—by name; one hundred dollars from Mr. A, fifty dollars from Mr. B, and so on to the end of the alphabet.

Sometimes the form is varied by circulating a subscription paper, with the understanding that it shall afterward be printed, when all the church will see what each individual has given, and some will give to earn a good reputation, and some to avoid a bad one. This method reaches its climax in some negro congregations in the South, where each individual marches up the aisle to put in his gift, and sometimes the same man marches up five times to put in a quarter, one nickel at a time, and so gets five credits with the congregation for one contribution. Or the minister calls to his aid commercial considerations reinforced by good fellowship. He gets up a fair, and the congregation gives turkeys and cakes and oysters and dry goods and fancy articles, which do not cost any money—for the bills do not come in for three months—and then go and buy their own gifts at extravagant prices; or the people get up a charity ball and spend five thousand dollars in ball and music and dresses in order to make one thousand dollars for a charity.

Now, all these and other like methods agree in this: that it is assumed that Christians do not wish to give their money, and that, therefore, the money must be coerced or cajoled out of them by schemes, some of which are saved from being immoral only by being consecrated, and not always even so saved from being immoral.

What I wish the student of the eighth chapter of Second Corinthians to notice is, that in this chapter the Apostle Paul proceeds upon an entirely different assumption. Not only is his method different, his spirit is different. He treats giving as a privilege, not as a duty; as a grace, not as a burden. Let me try to put his principles in my own words. Let the reader then compare Paul's statement, my statement, and the not unusual methods of raising money for benevolent enterprises, and see how they agree.

1. The Christian has, first of all, given himself to his Lord; he has given the whole of himself. Not his reverence and faith only, but his business powers and capabilities; not one-tenth of his income and one-seventh of his time, but all his income and all his time. Living or dying, he is the Lord's. The question with respect to every expenditure is, How can I do the most good with the money? Shall I invest this one hundred dollars in a picture to add to the cultivating influences of my home, or in a bond to provide for the future needs of my wife and children, or in a hospital for the sick in this city, or in the American Board for the heathen abroad, or in my business to add to the widening circuit of my own personal usefulness? There are five opportunities, and all are equally opportunities, and for all the Christian is equally grateful. He, therefore, as little thinks of complaining because a missionary agent shows him how he can invest in a foreign missionary enterprise, as because a friend shows him where he can buy a picture at a bargain, or invest in a bond sure to pay him six per cent. interest.

2. His first inclination is to put his money where the beneficent results are the most immediate and the most direct. He would like to give to every beggar food and clothing, and to every domestic charity the means to enlarge its usefulness. The benefit of what he calls investments is more remote and indirect. He is, therefore, in danger of giving more than he ought, and investing less than he ought. He does not wait to be asked, but seeks as a favor permission to be allowed to join in promising benevolences. His wife, his children, his pastor, have not to spur him up to greater generosity, but to restrain him from a generosity ill-balanced and unwise. His conscience has to be summoned, not to coerce him into giving, but to restrain, to admonish, to direct, and to guide.

3. He is, therefore, a cheerful giver. He gives because he likes to give. It is a pleasure to go to him with a subscription paper. It is a greater pleasure to get a "No" from him than a "Yes" from his neighbor. For the one receives you as a friend who has offered him a desired opportunity of which, unfortunately, he is unable to take advantage, and the other receives you as a courteous robber, whom he has not the skill to evade nor the strength to resist.

4. The inspiration of his benevolence is his love for Christ. It is not the force of conscience; nor the measured obligation of an ancient law; nor the contagion of a public feeling to which he yields because he has not independence enough to resist it; nor a desire to escape odium or win applause, or do what is creditable; nor a desire to get credit with his own conscience for benevolence when he is really purchasing an hour of amusement for his family or himself. He loves Christ; he wants to do something to show his love for Christ; and he is devoutly and sincerely grateful to anyone who shows him how he can do something unselfish and effective. His giving is, therefore, a joyful act, for it is intermingled with faith and utterance and knowledge and earnestness and love.

5. The liberality of such a one is measured not by what he hath not, but what he hath; and it is so measured not only by God, not only by his fellow-men, but by his own conscience. For the largeness of a gift depends not on the value of the thing given, but on the greatness of the spirit which bestows it.

Does the reader think that I am describing an impossible ideal? Not at all! Macedonian Christians are not all dead. Every minister has in his congregation some men who are always on the lookout for good investments in the kingdom of love, who welcome opportunities, and who have to be checked rather than incited to liberality. The privilege of giving is one of the most blessed privileges; and, for my part, I wonder that so many people who might have this great joy deny themselves, and turn their privilege into a cross, never knowing the meaning of the words of the Lord Jesus, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."—Outlook.

Temperance Teaching for the Children.

BY JULIA COLMAN.

A general acceptance of the physiological reasons against the use of intoxicants is now one of the most indispensable conditions for the progress of temperance. Even in sections where prohibitory laws prevail, such instruction should be given to the children. The making and execution of the laws will soon be in their hands, and they should have the very best instructions to fit them for such responsibilities. They need it also for their own protection, whether they are in prohibitory States or not. We have known that the clerks of agents appointed by the State to handle alcohol for mechanical and medicinal purposes succumb to the temptation. We have known the children of Christian total abstainers to become drunkards, having formed the appetite by taking it unaware of its presence. The reasons for keeping the pledge should gleam from every offered glass of the poison when the comrades or teachers in whose presence the pledge was signed have long since been left behind and perhaps forgotten. These reasons should stand the test of chemistry, physiology, and correct medical science, as well as of logic, religion, and common sense.

One cogent reason for the thoroughness of this teaching is that the effects of alcohol are delusive. We can not judge of them as we do of other things we take by our feelings, because they tamper with the nerves, which are the organs of feeling. Hence the fallacy of saying that everyone must judge for himself of the amount he can take, as if that were not the very thing poor, deluded man had been trying to do for centuries with the most pitiable results. We desire no more of that sort of experiments. We will accept the dictum of science, which declares alcohol to be always a poison. We will show how it is generated and how to discover its presence, what it is like and what it does to those who take it, and especially how it deceives them. In fact, we must keep our nerves entirely free from its presence, in order to be able to judge of it correctly. Therefore, special teaching is necessary to meet the special characteristics of this great deceiver and destroyer.

Some will remind us that this teaching is already given in the public schools. Yes, it is commenced there, and we gladly promote it! So the a b c's are taught in school, but that should not prevent my teaching them to the child at my knee. The temperance specialist will add enthusiasm to this study of the truth; the Sunday-school teacher will incorporate the biblical precepts, and both will bring conscientiousness to bear in leading the children to act up to their knowledge. All this will in no wise hinder the work in the schools. How eager we should all be to aid in this work for the Master, and save as many as possible of the coming generation from the fate of their predecessors! Surely we will not seek to be excused, nor try to lay off this duty upon others.

In England, where almost every one of the local churches and societies of the various denominations has its Band of Hope under its own control, they number over two and one-half millions of pledged total abstainers, the most of them taught as above indicated. Such a host so wisely taught will be able to conduct the temperance work of the next generation wisely and efficiently. They will be quite as good chemists and far better hygienists than the million of drinkers and drink-makers and sellers arrayed on the other side. We need such a host here, and we can have it if we will. The work is already begun, and we can make it general. Outside the regular temperance organizations, every church, chapel, and society of young people can have it adapted to its own needs and surroundings.

You would like to see cases? Very well, we could quote many. Let us visit a village in eastern New York, with, perhaps, two thousand inhabitants. Here in a Methodist Church for a year or two they held a temperance school during the hour preceding the Sunday evening service. It filled the audience-room, floor and galleries. It was conducted like a Sunday-school, with well-arranged classes, teachers and officers. Fifteen minutes were devoted to the recitation of the lesson, and twenty or thirty to the review comments and illustrations of the superintendent, who had more leisure for study and preparation than most of the teachers, and who solved the knotty problems. The interest was well sustained.

Further west, in the same State, we find a village where the leading evangelical churches have the excellent practice of uniting in a monthly temperance meeting. Instead of a sermon, they have temperance exercises, in which all share. The meeting is popular, and attracts many who never attend the regular church services. The house is always filled. The pastors, in turn, conduct the opening exercises; then follows a regular lesson, though the classes are irregular, being taken just as the audience happens to sit. The teachers are assigned on the spot by the superintendent, the best being invariably sent to the rough boys in the gallery. A lesson is faithfully taught, and subsequently reviewed and illustrated from the desk by the superintendent. Singing follows, and it is also a large element in the attractive and instructive program which occupies the remainder of the evening. This is carefully arranged, and no pains is spared to make it of a high order—bright, helpful, varied. It is carried out mostly by the members of Sunday-schools.

On all this the hoodlums look down with interest. They can not choose but listen, and they can not well help but learn. They see also, sharing in these exercises, some of their former comrades, invited at first, perhaps, to take part in the singing, and later won by kindness to enter the Bible class and to attend church services until they become "new men in Christ Jesus." The entire moral tone of the community is elevated in various ways by these monthly temperance exercises, and the best people in the place lend their aid. They have been kept up several years.

Cases are not rare, and they occur with endless variations. Some are held Saturday evening or afternoon, and those for younger children only some week-day after school. In large cities the Band of Hope is becoming a common element in mission work. We count a rapidly increasing number in New York City. Sometimes the work commences as a children's class or a sewing-school, or in the meetings of a Junior Epworth League, conducted, perhaps, by a deaconess. We note one of many years' standing in Clifton Springs, under the gracious shadow of the Sanitarium. We find that those most successful have thorough total abstinence teaching, made simple and attractive by the helps now so abundantly provided to meet the varied needs. They are often quite independent of the adult temperance organizations, and they definitely recognize the fact that temperance work is properly a part of Christian work in the churches. Truly, what is more Christ-like than to keep the young pure and to reclaim the fallen?—New York Advocate.

Reasons for Taking a Denominational Paper.

In the interest of a broad, generous, sympathetic, growing Christianity, every home needs the religious paper. Without reflecting on any other, it may still be said that the paper which best reports the work and reflects the spirit of one's own denomination ought to have the first place. The reasons which follow are some of those which support this statement.

A denominational paper is essential to any just appreciation of one's own place in the kingdom of God. As individuals, we touch the great work of the kingdom in State, nation and world chiefly through our denomination. Each denomination has its own work and its special methods. The individual who will do the best work himself must be familiar with the larger work. If he is a Presbyterian, he ought to give careful, special attention to the work of that body. He must know its place in the world, its mission among men, before he can properly know his own. It is not a narrow, selfish, exclusive interest in one division of the kingdom that he needs; but any groping after larger knowledge before he has some grasp on the facts which relate to his own work will be vain; therefore, that I may know something definite, and love something specific, and so do something practical, I begin with the work done chiefly by my own denomination. I have a special interest in China, not because I am indifferent to Persia, but because I have not the intellectual ability to maintain a specific interest in the universe. One should not start from the vast circumference in the hope of traveling round about the whole; but he should begin at the centre, at his own place, in his own fellowship, and then reach out to the whole field. The best help for this is a denominational paper. Read with a generous spirit, it cultivates a love for one's own work, and at the same time it increases his interest in the whole field.

The reading of a denominational paper is essential, also, to the best Christian growth. Growth is not the product of vain strivings after fullness; it is subject to law. That Christianity which is cosmopolitan in its interest and world-wide in its sympathies is the product of a loving study of the progress of the kingdom of God. The soul thrives on facts. Facts which tell of the world's need, facts which report the triumphs of the cross, facts which disclose the unity of humanity, facts which bring the burden of the world's salvation home to the individual—these are the facts which widen one's horizon and quicken his soul. No man can grow into the best life without the knowledge of such facts, and there is no means whereby he can acquire them so easily as by the regular reading of the papers whose business it is to set them forth.

A denominational paper in the home is essential to the best type of church life. That church is behind the times which is not alive to what other churches are doing. It is so easy to sink into the rut of the old routine that most of us are there before we know it. No minister, however full of energy, can, by main force, drag a church into new activities and modern methods while the church doubts whether there is anything new under the sun. The denominational papers are full of Christian work which has been tried with profit. They report the successful methods and the results of happy experiments. If there is a church in the land in which every member reads the religious paper, that is the church which is not oiling worn-out wheels, but is keeping its machinery fresh and modern. More of our people need the religious paper, if we are to keep the type of our church life and the methods of our church work in harmony with the age in which we live.

A denominational paper in every Christian home would add materially to the power of preaching. Ministers do not like to bore their congregations any better than congregations like to be bored. They pass by many things of importance to the kingdom because the congregation has no interest in them. In the Agricultural Building at the World's Fair, I looked somewhat blankly at a big cotton machine. I had no interest in it. If anyone had begun just then to read me an essay about it, I might have said: "Never mind. Come over to the Fisheries Building, and let me show you that machine twist a fish-line. I know about that." What minister has not preached on missions when he knew that, if the congregation should speak out, they would say: "Never mind missions. Teach us some of the lessons from the recent elections. We know about that." It is hard work to describe a cotton machine to a man whose mind is absorbed with a fish-line, and it is just as hard to preach missions to a congregation which is full of politics.

Furthermore, the average Christian has very little idea how much he ought to give, and still less of an idea how much he can give. We are inclined to suspect ourselves of generosity before our purses are half-way open. We see our own needs, and think they require all we have. But we need, most of all, to know the necessities of the Lord's great and glorious work among ruined humanity; we need day by day to have borne in upon us the burning facts from mission fields so full of hope, yet at the same time so suggestive of the burdens which are upon the workmen; we need to know about the distress which must be relieved, the afflictions which must be lightened, the darkness which must be scattered, the souls which must have life; we need to have the burden which is upon Christ rolled upon us. When we see what his work demands, our own needs seem less pressing, and we give far more than we thought possible. The progress of the kingdom as set forth in the denominational paper, the doors opened for the gospel, the bitter need of the outcast world, as there presented, are the very things essential to keep our souls alive to their privilege in Christian beneficence.

If our churches are to be intelligent and large-hearted, are to work by the best methods and to have the best preaching, are to give as the Lord prospers them, every family should have a denominational paper.—N. W. Congregationalist.

Pulpit Attractions.

In this age of abounding worldliness and religious indifference, when so many neglect the sanctuary altogether, and of those who attend on public worship, too many betray, by a careless, irreverent manner, their want of interest in the service, much solicitude is expressed that the church be made attractive. That is well, provided it be well understood that attendance at church is not an end, but a means, and that in devising attractions they are to be means suited to the end in view. In case men are attracted, the question is, What do you mean or wish to do with them? Do you desire to win them to Christ? It is better honestly to make that desire and purpose so evident that drawing them to the sanctuary may be, in truth, drawing them to Christ. But as the minister is the chief attraction of the church, and is held by the church responsible for the success or failure to draw a congregation, he is under some temptation to aim at popularity—by preaching on matters of immediate, popular interest, or, by a judicious pertinence of illustration, looking at religious matters from a secular point of view. In this way he may get the reputation of being "wide awake," and "up to the times," so that in any excited condition of the public mind there will be a curiosity to learn "what he will have to say about it." But this would be to cater to their worldly feelings, while the aim supposed to be in view is to win them away from worldliness to Christ. A secularized pulpit can have no spiritual power.

There is a sense in which a minister needs to be "wide awake," and "up to the times." He should know what his hearers are likely to be thinking about, not in order to keep their minds upon it, but to draw them to think on better things. It is well to be cognizant of the spirit of the time, not to imbibe it, much less to add to its force, but to fix, if possible, all desire and all hope, for this time and for all the future, upon Christ. The knowledge which will enable one to enter into the feelings of his hearers is important to the preacher, provided he does not himself yield to those feelings, but seeks the mastery of them to bring the hearers to know the perfect sympathy of Christ. There is no species of knowledge, no wave of human sympathy, which has not relations, near or remote, with the knowledge of God and the great ideas of his redeeming love and grace. The most "secular" topic or allusion may be sanctified by its appropriation for the purpose of winning men to the cross of Christ.

The assertion is often made that the old ways of looking at religion have ceased to have attraction for the public mind, and that the diminished influence of the pulpit is due to weariness of its "pious platitudes." Something fresh, something drawn from the life and movement of the times, it is said, must be laid hold of by the preacher's mind, if he would gain and even retain hearers. But again the question recurs, Gain them for what end? To please their fancy, or to save their souls? It is not true that the pulpit has lost power. Some pulpits have lost, but other pulpits have retained and have extended their power and influence, and they are pulpits in which the gospel of the grace of God is preached in simplicity and godly sincerity. Let it be admitted that to an increasing extent men do not desire the preaching of gospel truth. It is none the less true that they need just what Christ's gospel offers, and they have only to become conscious of their true and their deepest need to make them profoundly interested. And if the pastor and the church, in view of their unsatisfied needs, feel profoundly interested in their behalf, any who come into a congregation, where such is the spirit of the preaching and the burden of the prayers, will be likely to feel a new consciousness of spiritual need. There is nothing that draws together congregations like the report that the Spirit is present there in the fullness of his gracious gifts. The Spirit glorifies Christ. He is "lifted up," and as he said, "will draw all men" unto him.

Would you, then, make men feel the attraction of the cross? Feel it yourselves. Let the utterance of the truth be no humdrum, routine repetition of familiar thoughts, but let it come from hearts kindling with the fire of divine love, and made tender by its melting power. The truth spoken in love will find hearers.—Watchman.

HIS YOKE.

BY MARY E. A. STONE.

The yoke of Christ means saving strength
To all whose hearts are worn and spent;
No hard or weary weight imposed
On necks already bowed and bent.

The world's rude yoke must fret and gall—
Life hath so many pains and cares!
Only beneath Christ's easy yoke
Our load is lightened unawares.

His yoke! O pattern close and true,
Fitted to each—the strong, the weak,
Yielding our wills to its control,
His joy will not be far to seek!

His yoke means burdens lightly drawn
In lowly patience, lest we fail—
Yea, "quietness and confidence,"
With love divine to sweeten all.

O meek and lowly Christ! we crave
This blessed servitude to know;
In us thy joy be now fulfilled—
Will thou not make it yet to grow?

The Evangelist.

STILL UNDER DISCUSSION—SOME HISTORY.

During the General Conference at Richmond a motion was offered favoring the enactment of a law to provide for special evangelistic work. The motion called forth earnest discussion, and a number of the members made deliverances pro and con. Some things said there will make interesting reading now. A few quotations from the printed proceedings will show how some of the brethren stood. The discussion arose pending Report No. 1 of the Committee on Itineranoy. This committee, reporting on a memorial or paper favoring a law for special evangelism, recommended "non-concurrence." The writer moved to amend the report by striking out the word "non concurrence," and inserting the word "concurrence" instead. C. G. Andrews moved, as a substitute, that a certain place in the Discipline be amended by incorporating the words, "He shall have power to appoint an evangelist to labor in the bounds of the Annual Conference." Dr. Andrews, in the course of his remarks afterwards, said: "I believe that we ought to have a plan of evangelism sanctioned by the church." . . . "Under the sanction of the law we want the privilege of appointing an evangelist, if such an evangelist wants to be appointed, and if his own Conference recommend him for the appointment. Is there any objection to that?" . . . "I have always believed that Methodism is a child of Providence, and all improvements upon the system have been in the line of innovations. If brethren insist upon keeping hands on it, they may interfere with the promptings of Providence. The signs of these times indicate plainly an increasing demand for the labors of an evangelist."

J. D. Vincil, of the Missouri Conference: . . . "I want to put myself on record before this General Conference, and before the church, as favoring the memorial proposing to establish a legal and healthy system of evangelical agency."

T. C. Wier: . . . "There are many reasons why we might urge that this General Conference shall recognize the importance of providing for the work of special evangelists."

E. E. Hoss, of the Holston Conference: "One of the best arguments in favor of the creation of special evangelists is found in the fact that there are men with exceptional gifts that are particularly qualified for that sort of work." . . "There has not been a single instance in which such an exceptional man could not find some way, under the law, of exercising his gifts." While not favoring a law creating them, he yet held that real evangelists could be given work under existing law.

A. R. Winfield, of the Little Rock Conference, opposed the appointment of special evangelists, but said of Sam Jones: "He is the man of the century." . . . "He stands alone, and is doing the greatest work of any man in this great age and grand country of ours. No other man can stir the masses as he is doing." . . . "We must not handicap this giant of the pulpit and platform."

Dr. McFerrin, of the Tennessee Conference, did not favor the proposed measure, but said: "This is a very serious question, and one that ought not to be disposed of hastily." Of Sam P. Jones he said: "He goes out by appointment of the Bishop as the agent of the Orphans' Home. He goes to Nashville and preaches and takes up his collection, and he believes that he can raise ten thousand dollars more in a year by preaching to the people than merely making a speech and taking up a public collection. He is in regular orders, though he is not an appointed evangelist."

H. C. Morrison, of the Kentucky Conference: "We have had in the discussion of this subject some pyrotechnics; we have had wit and a little fun; but, sir, this is a question too grave and too broad to be disposed of in haste. The eyes of a million souls are turned to us to-day upon this question. This is a question that is vital to religion. The entire Methodist Church, South, are looking to our action here." He thought the subject of such importance that the Conference should take twenty-four hours to prepare for its consideration, and move to make it the order of business for ten o'clock the next day.

A. G. Haygood, of the North Georgia Conference: "I want to say that it is not the plan or purpose or desire of the North Georgia Conference to get anybody out of the Conference to take care of our orphans." . . . "Bro. Jones was agent for the Orphans' Home six or seven years before he began to go abroad. What he had done for six years was what we wanted done for the Orphans' Home."

The remarks of the last-named speaker, read in the light of recent events, remind us of the proverb: "Coming events cast their shadows before."

Nearly two quadrennia have passed, and the evangelist is still under discussion—a subject of growing interest. There is much demand for his services. The number of evangelists increases with the demand, and the work of modern evangelism grows apace. It is here with us, whether we recognize or ignore it. It is in great favor with the masses, and is indorsed by many loyal and faithful pastors, and, to all appearances, it is here to stay.

May it not be that, under Providence, in this remarkable modern religious movement, we have an evangel of good come to the church at such a time? May it not be designed to add a fresh inducement of power in soul-saving, to warm our zeal, quicken our lagging energies, and so start Methodism anew on a career of increasing efficiency and success? May we not find in it a solution of the problem, "How shall we reach the masses?" The stilted pulpit is not known in modern evangelism. Its preaching and its methods are in touch with the common people. Multitudes come out to the tabernacle carpeted with saw-dust; they crowd the largest churches; they listen to a plain and earnest gospel, and many are moved to give up their sins and turn to the Lord. Old feuds are done away, hard feelings are laid aside, and enemies shake hands in token of mutual forgiveness and brotherly love; Christians are revived, many family altars are erected, and timid believers are made bold to take up the cross.

By all these tokens, can we fail to recognize the providential in modern evangelism? Do we not see the hand of the Lord in the work? Shall the Methodist Church, claiming to be an evolution of Providence, with her evangelical ministry and her revival methods, fail to provide for it and to utilize it? Have we, as a church, forgotten our historic wisdom, the capacity to adjust our plans to providential indications? Do we assume the perfection of methods and measures, suffering ourselves to be held in the grasp of a cast-iron polity, beyond which there can be no further expansion or growth? Then, indeed, it may be feared we have come again "to the parting of the ways," "not discerning the signs of the times." May the fiery, cloudy pillar still go before us, our leader and our guide.

Woman's Greatest Opportunity.

The ever-widening influence of Christianity and civilization has given wonderful opportunity for the development of woman's heart and brain. Even since the man and woman were driven from the garden, woman has been hampered on every side by both law and custom, until she had come to accept as true the idea that the fall of man dealt more severely with woman than with man, because of her being the first in the transgression.

But in the last twenty-five years a most miraculous change has come about, and we begin to understand the divine will concerning a whole humanity, and see the dawning of the fulfilled prophecy of Joel and the Pentecost.

I believe men have lost more than women, because the world has been so slow to understand that God never gave talents with sex qualification. The one talent that was hidden away in a napkin would have been called for from a woman just as certainly as from her brother.

During the enforced quiet of the past eight months, sitting, as I have, under the chrism of pain, not only a spirit of thanksgiving that light is at last breaking has taken possession of me, but a spirit of fear as well, that in the multiplied avenues of work opening to women, and consequent feverish demand upon her time, she will lose sight of the higher possibilities awaiting her in the search after the fancied or less important weapon of power now dazzling her eyes.

Amid so many calls to service in behalf of humanity, is there not danger that we may lose sight of the fact that no audience is so receptive as that of the little people gathered about the mother's knee? No philanthropist has so divine a right as the father and mother. In their hands are the foundation of national life. Home determines what society is to be, and furnishes statute books in advance. Men and women make society, and laws for governing the nation; but first home makes the men and women. A blood purifier for the home is the nation's greatest need to-day; so to make the world better for everybody, is the question of the hour.

Woman has not much to complain of in these days in the way of opportunity. In business, educational advantages, in literature, art, or culture of any kind, she may be successful at anything she may elect.
